A beautiful edition of Owen Meredith's Lucille is issued from the press of Ticknor & Fields. Lucille has been before the public for some time, and furnishes an excellent illustration of the peculiarities and powers of the author—perhaps the most accomplished writer of what we may call vers de société of the present day.

The Life of Sheridan and the Life of Farragut, one a land and the other a water hero, by the Rev. P. C. Headley, are companion volumes, the last additions to a series of lives of our heroes which that author is preparing for youths. Mr. Headley throws himself into the spirit of his work, and cannot fail to enlist the attention and excite the ambition of all boy readers, and, perhaps, a few of the girls.

In The Regular Swiss Round, the Rev. Harry Jones takes his readers over the ground which tourists in Switzerland tread, without entailing upon them the trouble of climbing mountains. He writes in an easy, vivacious style, erring chiefly in telling us too much about what he ate and drank, and how he slept and smoked. The book is English, and has all the merits of that press.

Mrs. Stowe (whose pen-name is Christopher Crowfield) has set a trap for all the the little nibblers that make homes unhappy, and occasionally undermine them, catching Fault-finding, Irritability, Repression, Persistence, Intolerance, Discourtesy, and Exactingness, therein. These she exhibits to the public in a pretty little book which serves as a cage, the title being Little Foxes. Though written professedly for children, older persons can learn good lessons from the book.

"Riverside classics" have a charming addition in Picciolá, by X. B. Saintine, illustrated by Leopold Flameng. It is a story of the First Consul's times, naively and sprightlily told, and exquisitely illustrated, printed, and bound.

The Freedmen's Book, as the title indicates, is a compilation by Mrs. Child of the lives of different colored persons who have achieved historical notoriety, and of poems and other things of interest to the newly emancipated. We notice, by the way, that the Flag's laureate—J. Madison Bell—is represented in the volume. It is printed in behalf of the Freedmen's Aid Association, and should have a large circulation among the colored, who seemed destined to play so important a part in the future history of the nation.

CAPT. FOSTER advertises his readiness to receive "evening calls" at the Cliff House. No Morning Calls are taken there, we believe. A moonlight drive, a good team, a macadamized road, and supper, are enumerated as the attractions. As the Captain does not furnish the moonlight, and we are unaware that it belongs to him particularly, we do not know why he puts it down in his bill of fare. He also advertises that he is "never caught napping." Oh, no! and Ben Butler and the other sea-lions are never caught napping either, we suppose. But just drive out there in the morning, any time before noon, and see if you won't catch-all hands asleep on the rocks. By the way, we see that a bill is going to be brought before the Legislature to authorize Capt. Foster to build a bridge from the Cliff House to the seal-rocks, which will prove more pleasant, perhaps, for visitors than for the seals.

THOSE inveterate wagsters, Barry and Patten, advertise a tonic called "Excellent." "Just die," they say, "or digest." We are sure the pun is a good one, for the compositor laughed in setting it up. But what a fearful example they set to the human family in putting people up to die jesting. And what an inconvenient thing an excellent appetite must be when one has nothing to eat. They should be compelled to furnish food as well as drink.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

PIANO SCHOOL,
ON THE EUROPEAN PLAN,
At the South Park Institute.

MISS FLORENCE JAMES, PRINCIPAL.

IN CONNECTION with this popular and excellent Young Ladies' Seminary there will open, about January 3d, 1866, a Piano School, on the European Plan—for first beginners as well as for advanced players. The great advantage on this plan will be a reduction of about one-half the usual price, and a thorough training, both theoretical and practical. The Musical Department will be under the directorship of Mr. GUSTAVE A. SCOTT, Organist of Cavalry Church, whose long experience in Teaching, both in private and in classes, will secure to pupils a rapid advancement in the study of Music.

The Music Rooms are comfortable and convenient, and the Pianos used from the best manufacturers.

For particulars, call at the Institute, Nos. 55 an South Park. de20

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JAN. 30th, - - - - SACRAMENTO
Captain J. M. Cavarly.

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock.

Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
Corner Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 266 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost, and in half the time, required by pursuing the method now in use. An enormous waste of time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, but because housewives persist in treading in the beaten track followed by their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try the simply by way of experiment, they will be amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may be saved by its use. It may be obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

California Washing Extract,

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the severe drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would be injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,
AND BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
ja6-1m

THE MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,

$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3,500,000
Paid claims by death, - - - - -	6,500,000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,000

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA!

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. DINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by m to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per mon served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must dressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street
SAN FRANCISCO.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine —a Cameo or a Cashmere; Inco or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German,
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, Corner of Pine and Sansome streets.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and hooks, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for hooks.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will he charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

OVERSTOCKED!

AND MUST SELL

Goodwin & Co.,

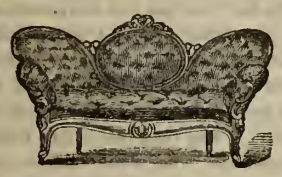
Would advise their patrons and the public THAT THEY WILL NOT ALLOW ANY PERSON TO

UNDERSELL THEM IN THIS MARKET

Our record for the past fourteen years is well known, and we INTEND TO BE WITH YOU ALWAYS.

Our stock of

Furniture.



BEDDING AND MIRRORS

Consisting in part of PARLOR, CHAMBER, DINING ROOM and LIBRARY SUITS, is unusually large, and will be sold with a

GUARANTEE

OF SATISFACTION TO ALL PARTIES!

Our increased facilities for furnishing Hotels and Steamships are acknowledged superior to any other house.

TWELVE THOUSAND CASES ASSORTED GOOD

—AT—

LESS THAN NEW YORK PRICES!

GOODWIN & CO.,

mh25 tf Nos. 510 and 528 Washiogton street.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

dc23 3m

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, ja28] Leidedorff street, San Francisco.

B. D. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale

DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts.
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices. We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL·COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,
oc29 3m San Francisco.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Deportment, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M.; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11 3m

---

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000 (Without compensation.)	30 00
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.

The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)

ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c. Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Twenty Days	1
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,

NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,

dc16 3m San Francisco.

GREAT AMERICAN

PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800

PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

10,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,

no11 3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

HOLT'S MAP

OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by

WARREN HOLT,

ja13 tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCIS

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

WARD'S SHIRTS

THESE SHIRTS are too well known to need any comments. A trial will convince the most fastidious.

A full assortment of

GENTS' FINE FURNISHING GOODS.

S. W. H. WARD & SON,

NEW YORK, 387 Broadway. } 323 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

jc30 3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND

MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19 3m

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NEW

PIANOS

TO RENT,

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

ja20 1m

[For the Californian.[

EPIGRAM.

BY AN ANTIQUARIAN.

"Pray tell me, Tom, for you I hear
Are learned without doubt,
How that from Noah's menagerie
He left one species out?"

"He did not, sir," says learned Tom,
"As I read biblic lore;
But gathered two of every kind,
And then had room for more."

"You read not right; he took no prey
To please his favorite cat;
She mewed for forty days before Discovering ary rat."

MODERN MATRIMONY.

[The following article, by the late George Arnold, appears in th. New York Weekly Review. It is prefaced by the remark that, one o. the last journalistic efforts of its author, it is now first published:]

THERE has been a good deal of discussion, of late, not only in books and newspapers, but in social circles o all castes, concerning a real or fancied indisposition to marry,[1] on the part of the rising generation, which is believed to threaten alarming consequences.

This anti-connubial tendency is mainly attributed to the masculine portion of the commuuity, and the cause of it is a mooted question. The women aver that the extravagant and irresponsible character of Young America is at fault; a character developed and exaggerated by the iucreasing love of luxury natural to the growth of large cities, and by the turmoil, political and military, which has reigned in almost unchecked supremacy for the past four years.

Naturally enough... for "revenge is sweet"... the young men, thus assailed, retaliate by accusing the other sex of very similar errors; and maintain that it is almost impossible to support the establishment required by the matrimonial relation, upon any reasonable income.

Undoubtedly there is a grain of truth in each of these hypotheses. Youug men of to-dav are certainly less domestic in their tastes than were their grandfathers, and they find, for the most part, a sweet sense of liberty... perhaps of liceuce ... in a celibate life, for which the more tranquil joys of the household seem but a sorry substitute. And again, it is equally certain that the expense attendant upon feeding, clothing, sheltering, and amusing women and children, has augmented to a most unreasonable and alarming degree.

But the real source of the evil lies deeper than the comfort of bachelor-lodgings or the cost of crinoline. If every young man who visits a married friend could be strongly impressed that the relation was invariably, or even generally, an improvement on bachelorhood, he would not long hesitate to enter into it himself. People... especially young people... have a powerful prejudice iu favor of changing their condition for the better.

Unhappily, the connubial tie has nothing in it to make it intrinsically desirable. Everybody knows that it is infinitely better to live and die mateless, than to be mismated. Yet so many rash young couples join hands at the altar without considering the future possibilities, that the land is full of malcontents, more lonely in their homes than the crustiest bachelor. The example of one such pair is more fatal to matrimony than the most interminable milliner's bills.

It is extremely difficult to suggest a proper remedy for this trouble, for its cause appears to lie in the inherent weakness and fallibility ol human nature. Every means hitherto put forward by social philosophers, seem open to considerable and serious objection. Thus, one suggests a far greater degree of intimacy being encouraged between the candidates for hymeneal honors, during the period of betrothal, in order that they may become familiar with each other's merits and demerits, virtues and vices, and judge of the result more clearly. Those who know, however, the feebleuess of human principle under temptation, will realize the dangers of such a theory.

It has been thought that if the divorce system were entirely abolished, people would not enter into the marriage bond without due and careful consideration; but the necessity of some possible means of separating those whom God has not joined, is manifest. Still another idea is to render the divorce more easily attainable, so that when two find out their mistake, they can part without the commission of crime on either side. But if one may take a wife, put her away, and take auother, at pleasure, the whole institution of marriage loses its sacredness, and unbridled liceuce would soon destroy the moral foundations of society.

It is no abstract sentimentality to believe that marriage should in all cases be based upon affection. No other object or consideration should be admitted where love does not first exist. This has been said over and over again by poets and novelists, but with little real effect. In fact, people generally regard the utterance of poets as hardly suited to practical, every-day application; and perhaps love as a basis of marriage, would have been more popular among business men had the poets harped upon it a little less persistently.

And it is no small or shallow degree of affection that is required to make the matrimonial tie a permanent reality. A warmish frieudship, gilded by admiration, will hardly staud the shocks and storms that must and will come in every earnest life. A fitful passion, in which intense outward expression and cool indifference alternate, can never form any lasting foundation for happiness. The only love that will long survive the romantic glamour of the houeymoon is that in which there is no doubt and no suspicion. If either one of two affianced persons has ever "the least shadow of an idea" that he or she is animated by another sentiment than genuine conjugal love, the betrothal should terminate then and there.

But boys will be boys, and girls will be girls, aud both will marry in haste, even though such doubts intrude themselves at the very altar. Brides will ask themselves, "Do I really love him?" while the clergyman is uttering his final "Ameu," aud... society will take the consequences.

Much has been said and written about the necessity for "mutual forbearance" between husband and wife. This idea would seem to be based on an accepted couclusion that they were natural enemies. If a man loves his wife so that her happiness is his only desire, he will not require to be so very forbearing toward her. If he does not, he has no business to be her husband. The mischief, where there is any, is all done when the service is performed. If you insist on puttiug guupowder into the same box with hot coals, you need not be astonished at an explosion now and theu; and if you insist on advising these incongruous elements to show forbearance, it is a good deal like lameutation over spilled milk.

The only method, then, by which Young America can be convinced of the error of his celibate ways, is his marriage in accordance with the principles before enunciated. Let him try it boldly, and without skepticism as to the result. Not only will he be surprised at his own happiness, but his friends will bless him for offering them such an example. A few generatious, marrying thus, will easily restore the high standing and respect in which matrimony should ever be held; and elevate the moral toue of society to the stature it should maintain in a country so rich in future promise, prosperity, and power, as ours.

"Flowers that Never Die."—Sir Bernard Burke, in his Vicissitudes of Families, gives us a most touching instance of the love of flowers to linger upon the spots where they were once tenderly nurtured. "Being in search," he tells us, "of a pedigree with reference to the Findernes, once a great family seat in Derbyshire, I sought for their ancient hall. Not a stone remained to tell where it stood. I entered the church —not a single record of a Finderne was there! I accosted a villager, hoping to glean some stray traditions of the Findernes. 'Findernes,' he said; 'we have no Findernes here, but we have something that once belonged to them: we have Findernes' flowers.' 'Show me them,' I replied, and the old man led me into a field which still retained faint traces of terrace and foundation. 'There,' said he, pointing to a bank of garden flowers grown wild, 'these are Findernes' flowers, brought by Sir Geoffrey from the Holy Land, and, do what we will, they will never die.'"

The old maid sat in her old arm chair, with half-closed eyes and pensive air, and without a blush on her maiden face, fell into old "Murphy's" sweet embrace. She dreamed that her husband kiud and true, her form to his side so fondly drew, while in accents gentle, clear and slow, he called her the dearest name below. A fire was kindled upon the hearth, while the teakettle sang a merrier lay than it had whistled for many a day. New light was diffused into the old maid's heart, as she felt her loneliness now depart; the table all spread, all clean and new, and plates and cups, and saucers for two. [Here the poet kiudly pauses for the laudable purpose of prolonging the "old critter's" bliss. But to resume.] At last, as the dusky, dim twilight was fast giving place to the shades of night, she reached her arms for a sweet embrace, and alas! alas! found but empty space. As from her vision of bliss she awoke, and found that her dream had perished and broke, she arose aud said, with a shuddering sigh: "O, would I had married in days gone by!"

Mr. Sala writes: "Whom the gods love die young, they say: but in our age it would seem as though the most intellectually favored were permitted to arrive at maturity, and were then, without preparation, smitten down. Lord Macaulay, William Makepeace Thackeray, Albert Smith, David Roberts, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, John Leech—all died with awful suddeuess. Now it is Mrs. Gaskell. Who next, and next?"

"Are you a Christian Indian?" asked a benevolent gentleman of one of the Chippewa tribe. "No, sir, was the answer; "I whiskey Ingen."

He that cannot forgive others breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every mau has need to be forgiven.

Fun from the Hub.—Boston is not generally considered a facetious town, but the Boston correspondent of the Sacramento Union—J. R. Osgood of the publishing house of Ticknor and Fields—tells the following brace of aucedotes in his last letter:

A gentleman who was once the editor of a periodical in New York, tells a good story to the New Bedford Mercury. The owner of the magazine was afflicted with the habit of stuttering. One day the editor coming into the office was greeted by the owner aud publisher with: "L-look here—j-just hear, what a d—d p-piece of trash L-L-Longfellow has sent." Whereupon he proceeded to read in his stammering way the famous poem "Excelsior," emphasizing the close of each stanza with a contemptuous expression that won't bear translation into print. He finished the reading, and cursing the manuscript in his hand, declared that he would send it back to the writer, and express his (the publisher's) opinion of his (the writer's) impudence in sendiug such stuff. The magaziue died long ago, and the publisher is forgotten; but the despised poem is known and admired in almost every civilized country in the world.

Speaking of Longfellow, I am reminded of some very ludicrous typographical errors. There is a gentleman in this city, an ex-clergyman of the Unitarian faith, who is enthusiastic in the matter of regenerating the South and educating its people up to the standard of New England intelligence. When, some months ago, the Union Press was started in Louisvillo (Ky.) as the organ of radical New England politics, the reverend gentleman volunteered to write letters for it. He receives books from publishers and notices them in his letters. A week or two ago, in one of his letters, he spoke of the "Life and Letters of Rev. F. W. Robertson," Longfellow's "Wayside Inn," and the "Freedmen's Book." Imagine his disgust, on receiving the paper, and reading in his letter that Longfellow's "Wayside Fun" was one of the handsomest illustrated books of the season; that Robertson was already well known in America by his "original and eloquent reunions" (sermons,) and that a little volume of Mrs. Child, called "The Tradesman's Book," deserves special mention, being designed for the class whose name it bears, to instruct and elevato them, teach them to be good citizens and good members of society. The "tradesmeu" who read that letter must have felt complimented and grateful. But what shall be said of the compositor and proof-reader who are responsible for so glaring a mistake?

A Child of Nature.—Richard Lovell Edgeworth, the father of the well-know novelist, married four wives, by all of whom he had issue. The number of his children, and their unusual differenco in age, a difference amounting, between the eldest and youngest, to more than forty years, gave him unusual opportunities of making experiments in education, and watching their results. His family were brought up almost entirely at home, and with the greatest parental care. He was fond of mechauical pursuits, and new projects of all kinds. Among his numerous schemes was an attempt to educate his eldest son on the plan laid down in Roussean's Emile. He dressed him in jacket and trousers, with arms and legs bare, and allowed him to run about wherever he pleased, and to do nothing but what was agreeable to himself. In a few years he found that the scheme had succeeded completely, so far as related to the body; the youth's health, strength, and agility were conspicuous; but the state of his mind induced some perplexity. He had all the virtues that are found in the hut of the savage; he was quick, fearless, generous; but he knew not what it was to obey. It was impossible to induce him to do anything that he did not please, or prevent him from doing anything that he did please. Under the former head, learning even of the lowest description, was never included. In fine, this child of nature grew up perfectly ungovernable, and never could or would apply to anything; so that there remained no alternative but to allow him to follow his own inclination of going to sea!

If your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

Midnight Cry.—Hark! do you hear that hoarse cough and that disturbed breathing? Ah, mother, your darling child, perhaps your only one, has an attack of Croup; run quickly and get your bottle of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup, give it freely, and save the life of "the light of your household." Be watchful in the future, and upon the slightest indication of a cold, resort at once to the "Syrup!"

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

Fashion's votaries, with one accord, endorse the fragrance, innocence and elegance of that charming toilet enamel wash for the skin and complexion, removing tan, moth, freckles, pimples, shining grossness of the skin—Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

"IMPORTANT."—It is very important to those who go out to purchase, to know where they can find the article they require of a good quality and at a fair and reasonable price. To those who want anything in fine and staple Dry Goods, MOSGROVE & BLAKELY offer inducements equal to any house in San Francisco.

Their DRESS GOODS are fashionable, well assorted, and tastefully selected. They are now showing a large lot of HOYLE'S genuine ENGLISH CALICOS, for Dresses, and Shirting of a very superior quality.

They are fast becoming celebrated for the quality of their IRISH LINEN GOODS, of which they have always a large assortment from the best manufacturers in Belfast, Ireland.

Their store is in Colton's Building, 222 Third street, near Howard.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bonrue cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bonrne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

TOYS.—Toys can be purchased of Feldbush & Co., 207 California street, at 25 per cent. below the usual rates. Call and examine stock and prices.

TO POOR WRITERS.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Bahhittoniau—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Bahittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. PELTON,
Superintendent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Bahhittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.
JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Babbittonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

TRIMMINGS.—Mrs. NORCROSS, No. 5 Masonic Temple, Montgomery street, is prepared to fill orders for civic and militar at the shortest notice; also, invites the ladies to call and examine trimmings for Opera Cloaks received per steamer from New York. Mrs. D. Norcross' goods, for elegance and taste, are not surpassed by any other establishment on the Pacific coast.—San Francisco Leader, Sept. 16th.

THE RUSS HOUSE BOWLING SALOON, corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, has reopened under the management of Ferdinand Shrader. There are Eight Alleys—six for Americans and two for Germans. The finest Wines and Liquors can be had at the bar. All lovers of the health-invigorating game of ten pins are invited to pay a visit to the saloon.—Dramatic Chronicle.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

FOR THE VERY BEST PHOTOGRAPHS, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for the best card pictures, and large photographs.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.
J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
F. Schrader, cor. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
H. H. Bancroft & Co., Montgomery and Merchant sts.
C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
A. Gensoul, 311 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale,) 210 Pine street.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.
E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets.
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Wm. Brown & Co., 160 Third street.

FURNITURE.
N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pierce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.
Slossen & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustavo A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Agents for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr. Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

STEAM COMMUNICATION
WITH THE
SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,
FOR HONOLULU,
ON SATURDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY —, 1866
AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommdations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

ja23 JOHN BENSLEY, President pro tem.

RAVEN GOLD AND SILVER MINING COMPANY.
Reese River Mining District, State of Nevada.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in accordance with the laws of the State of California, and in pursuance of an order of the Board of Trustees of the above named company, there will be sold at public auction at the office of the Secretary of said company, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, on Saturday, the 17th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, so many shares of the capital stock of said company standing in the names of the following parties as may be necessary to pay the assessments thereon levied on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1863, and on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1864, now due and unpaid, together with costs of advertisements and sale, unless previously paid, as follows:

	Certificate.	Shares.	Bal. due.
A P Cox,	1 to 7 inclusive,	150	$75
H. H. Cooper,	15, 16, 18,	34	$17
B Chamberlin,	19, 20, 22, 24, 29,	84	$42
H. P. Perry,	30 to 35 inclusive,	93	$93
J. H. H. Williams,	40,	10	$5

GEORGE B. MERRILL, Secretary.
Office, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
ja20 4w

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum.....7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum.....4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.....7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

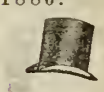
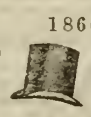
1886. 1866. 1866.



AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.



LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF

FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP Establishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE NEW WARM

SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6-1m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

sc30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by oc29 3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. O. HUNT,

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,

SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE

AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.

oc14

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.

A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

CALIFORNIA

Collegiate Institute,

For Boarding and Day Pupils,

Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE PRESENT TERM of this Institute commenced Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (de30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

jn25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

CHOLERA! CHOLERA!

CHOLERA IS COMING!

ALREADY HAS IT APPEARED IN THE EASTERN CITIES? Insure your Life in the BEST AND CHEAPEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD,

The Connecticut Mutual Life

INSURANCE CO. OF HARTFORD.

BIGELOW & BROTHER,

AGENTS,

Office Northwest corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets, San Francisco, California.

no26-1m

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless uess, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,

de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture

THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,

and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade

WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of No. 372, Broome street,

NEW YORK.

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,

NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

de16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

de30 3m

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

51, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. de30

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoevor, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign;) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered ton nage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50

Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAMES V. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
dc23-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisc , in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. } By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. } B. S. BROOKS,
dc23-3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.)
U. S. Revenue stamp, } Justice of the Peace Second 50c., cancelled. } Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 628 no11 3m Merchant street.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS,
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends declared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTABLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.
L. P. GAUTIER, Med. Examiner, San Francisco.
STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
412 Montgomery street,
ja20-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S
Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,
No. 641 Commercial street,
A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and empossessing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.
Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

REMOVAL! REMOVAL

E. F. BUNNELL,

SURGEON DENTIST,

Has removed from No. 51 Second street, to No. 611 CLAY STREET, two doors above Montgomery. Persons desiring the best Dental Work at reasonable prices, can secure the same at this office.

☞ The specialty of curing aching teeth without extracting still continued. de3 3m

---

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have purchased the Eating House known as "Richards'" Restaurant, situate on Clay street, one door below Montgomery. The restaurant has been repaired and refitted throughout, and is now open to the public.

C. H. BRICKWEDEL,
de23 H. F. HEGELER.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY.
SATURDAY, JAN. 27TH,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

DAN SETCHELL,

IN

DOMBEY AND SON,

FOR THE LAST TIME.

THIS EVENING, JANUARY 27TH,

MR. BANDMANN,

In the Grand Romantic Drama entitled,

The Beauforts!

Dramatized from Bulwer's "Night and Morning." For the FIRST TIME IN CALIFORNIA.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETS

FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT
OF
CHAS. WHEATLEIGH!

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, JANUARY 27TH, will be presented Tom Taylor's new Irish Drama, entitled,

The Whiteboy's Bride!!

Grace Dwyer.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Grace Moriarty.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Redmond O Hara.....MR. C. WHEATLEIGH
Pandreen (the Innocent).....Miss Caroline Chapman
Captain Trevor.....Pierpont Thayer
Paddy McKew.....L. F. Beatty
Cicero Rabbits.....S. W. Leach
Squire Moriarty.....F. Percy
Magrath.....G. Roundy
Barney.....G. Archer
Sergeant Sidebottom.....W. H. Hamilton

With New Scenery and Effects, and Original Music composed for this piece by Mr. George T. Evans.

THE CELEBRATED

Buislay Family,

IN THEIR WONDERFUL FEATS!

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, JAN. 27TH,
THE WHITEBOY'S BRIDE.
The BUISLAY FAMILY, in Three of their Wonderful Acts.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,
AND
Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE
TO THE
CLIFF HOUSE
TRUE ENJOYMENT!

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and the resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-tf

SCALES!

MANUFACTURERS' Branch House on the Pacific coast. Fairbanks' Standard Hay, Cattle, Miners' Druggists' and Grocers' Scales, adjusted to English, Spanish and Chinese weight.

We also REPAIR (supplying parts when broken or worn out) and re-adjust our Scales to the original standard.
FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
☞ Send for Illustrated Catalogue. ja27 3m

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."
For sale in glass only, by
ja27 1m BARRY & PATTEN.

PLATT'S HALL.

LAST WEEK OF
BLAISDELL'S
CELEBRATED PAINTING,
THE HIBERNICON!
OR,
A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,
SOLO HARPIST;
MISS CLARA,
The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the
SWISS BELL-RINGERS,
Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,
BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

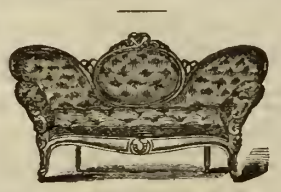
GRAND MATINEE on WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY next, at 2 o'clock, for Schools and Family Parties.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats.

FURNITURE

AND

BEDDING!



LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,

LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
ja19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

IRISH LINENS.

FOR THE BEST MAKES OF IRISH LINEN GOODS!
GO TO
MOSGROVE & BLAKELY,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja13 tf

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY

AND

Children's Clothing

STORE,

Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to
Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,
OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27 1m

FEBRUARY 14, 1866.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY!

MISS S. A—'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Thiak, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

I know no form so graceful,
No face so near divine;
Then haste thee love! oh, hasten
And be my Valentine.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find thee faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE:

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate commnication,
To suit the occasion,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remnnerution
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.

VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.
THIRTY new and origiual California Comics, "Ye Copperheads," etc.

VALENTINE WRITERS, comic and sentimeatal.

Appleton's Valentine Express, with Eight Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour on Valeutine's Day in every part of the city.

D. E APPLETON & CO.,
ja27-3t 508 Montgomery street.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SILK HOSE AT COST.

IVINS' PATENT HAIR-CRIMPERS!
No Lady should be without one.
TRIMMINGS, FRINGES,
BUTTONS, THREADS,
COTTONS, NEEDLES,
TAPES, FANCY GOODS,
Etc.
HOOP SKIRTS, NEW STYLES,
Best ever Imported.
ALL TO BE FOUND AT THE
PIONEER TRIMMING EMPORIUM
OF
MRS. NORCROSS,
No. 5 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.
ja21-tf

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS' Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No .10
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 3, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:

Cultivation of Flowers: The Camellia Japonica.—By "Iris."
How it Feels to be Robbed.—By Sedgely.
The Poet and the Queen.
Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:

A Rhyme of Life.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events of the Week.

SELECTED:

The Emerald Studs—A Reminiscence of the Circuit—Concluded.
The "Prepossessed" Juror—One of Dicken's new Christmas Stories.
Rail Shooting.
Life in the City of Mexico.
Goethe as a Manager.
How Nelson Lost an Eye.
Scenting of Books.

POETRY:

Mignon.—By Goethe.
The Willow.

[For the Californian.]

A RHYME OF LIFE.

IF life is as a flame that death doth kill;
Burn little candle lit for me,
With a pure spark, that I may rightly see
To word my song, and utterly
God's plan fulfill.

If life is as a flower that blooms and dies,
Forbid the cunning frost that slays
With Judas-kiss, and trusting life betrays;
Forever may my voice of praise
Untainted rise.

If life is as a voyage, or foul or fair,
Oh! bid me not my banners furl
For adverse gale or wave in angry whirl
Till I have found the gates of pearl,
And anchored there.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

[For the Californian.]

HOW IT FEELS TO BE ROBBED.

THE circumstances were these. My August vacation must needs be spent away from the news and noise of San Francisco. Hence I sent off my silver and manuscripts, locked up my house, and betook myself (both halves and a little hyphen) to the country. We returned in due season. On unlocking my front door, the first peculiar thing I noticed was a playing-card lying just inside the threshold. But this was readily explained. Doubtless it was thrust in by some boy who knew that this was a minister's house and wanted to try his hand at a little teasing. There appeared a second phenomenon. A pane was broken in a door-window of the basement. But a ready explanation of this occurred, also. Without question it was a fruit of that universal propensity to shiver the spectacles of vacated houses. But now a third circumstance led to a discovery of the truth. My favorite boots were wanted. I looked in the larger rooms. I looked in the closets. I even looked in the book-cases. They were in none of these. Then, I took my keys to explore the trunks. But lo! trunk number one opened of itself. The lock was broken! The trunk was in confusion! Instantly a dark suspicion crossed my mind—had not the house been entered? I hurried to the other trunks. These, too, all opened without keys. These, too, were in confusion. From garret to cellar, all was the same. I sounded the alarm. Wife came. Girl came. There was a short period of flushed and eager rummaging. "Yes! all my jewelry has been taken," exclaims wife. "Yes! all mine, too," exclaims girl. And now we hurry to look after other things. We expect to find everything gone. We doubt not that every keepsake and ornament has fled. But no! To our amazement the jewelry, with only a trifle or two besides, is our only loss. It is a serious one to my wife, as she received many of the pieces in remote countries, and from dear friends; and it is a serious one to my poor servant, who had but little, and whose matrimonial prospects are considerably clouded by such a falling off of ornamentation. But we are surprised to find so many other things left.

These, then, are the circumstances of the robbery which I suffered. But I have premised these, only that I may introduce the reader to some of my emotional experiences in connection with the event. And these experiences I record, not for their peculiarity or strangeness, but simply for their genuiness, and as a contribution to the science of human nature. What I write has the simple value of unvarnished truth, and, as such, may be received with confidence by the student of the human heart.

I would say, then, that this event of my life had a twofold moral effect. It excited, on the one hand, several well-defined feelings, which were temporary in their nature; and, on the other hand, it left behind several seuses or impressions not only distinct but permanent.

Of these transient, but well-defined feelings which I remember, the first was a deep sense of relief. Relief on what account? In guessing this, I think the reader would remain at fault for a long time. The chief source of relief with me was not the smallness of my loss. Neither was it the character of my loss, viz: that jewelry, the thing most readily spared, was taken. Neither was it the fact that the robbery occurred in my absence, so that I myself was spared a dangerous affray, and my wife a shock to her nerves. Any one of these circumstances might have been the chief source of relief with another mind, or with my own mind under other circumstances. But I must confess that the principal relieving circumstance to me was the fact that I saw nowhere about the house a sign of personal spite against myself. I had heard of thieves displaying malice as well as covetousness, and cutting carpets, marking walls, and so on. But nothing of this was shown in my case. The feeling of the robbers was a feeling which terminated upon the goods, rather than their owner—upon my property rather than upon myself. Even the two little circumstances which might have been traced to malice, were obviously due to other causes. I allude to the broken window in the first place. But this was proven to me by a detective who visited the premises to have resulted from the efforts of the burglars to cut the pane with a diamond. The other circumstance which at first appeared malicious or contemptuous was the appearance of the playing-card by the door, and others like it in one of the trunks. But the latter, as it soon appeared, had been put away by my wife for some domestic purpose, and the former had probably adhered to something taken by the thieves and conveyed to the threshold. Thus, then, the robbers left no sign behind them of personal ill-will or contempt, and this, I confess, was the principal source of relief to my feelings.

But another very strong sentiment excited by this occurrence was curiosity. This feeling, as well as the other, however, was not due to the most obvious of causes. I was not aware, for instance, of any particular desire to know the time of the robbery, or, indeed, the precise parties who had committed it. To be sure, I took measures to ascertain the time and to detect the parties; but the feeling of curiosity was by no means so decided and emphatic in reference to these points as in respect to others. Why, for example, were the trunks all carefully closed again? Why did my robbers break open certain trunks, and open others equally simple with false keys? Why did they so carefully lock all the doors after them? Why did they not, while they were about it, take away many other things of value? Why did they not mutilate anything? The minor circumstances were what chiefly stimulated my curiosity. In reference to who the burglars might be, it was easy to think that they were in the list of well-known professional robbers, and that one, with the San Quentin calendar before him, could guess their names in a short time. But, about these other little features hung a veil of mystery which excited the imaginative power very sensibly.

Again, there were features of this robbery which excited the emotion of contempt. The reader will sympathize with this feeling, I doubt not, when I remind him that one of the victims was a poor servant girl. The picture of the thief entering the room evidently appropriated to the family help, and stealing the few humble ornaments that she or her friends had procured only by self-denial, and upon which she depended for a slight relief to the plainness of her dress and person, is one which cannot but arouse the contemptuous sentiment. But there was another little circumstance which excited the same feeling in even a stronger degree. A friend had given the baby a little tin safe. Another friend had dropped in it a half-dollar. What should appear to us on the evening of our discovery but this little toy torn rudely open, and the piece of silver taken! Here was something, indeed, to excite scorn. Here was meanness—robbing a child and a poor girl—and meanness must excite contempt.

These, then, were those sentiments and emotions of a more evanescent nature which the different aspects of this robbery excited in passing. But, as we have said, the occurrence left behind it several well-marked impressions of a more permanent character.

One of these was a deep sense of the reality of such things in general. Hitherto, it seems to me, I have never more than half believed the newspaper accounts of thefts and robberies. Or if I have regarded these accounts as strictly speaking true, yet I am sure that I have never really pictured them as realities to my mind. I have passed them by as the necessary filling to newspapers, and as the evidences in general of the depravity of mankind. But I have never taken up one of these accounts as a true history and pictured it in its details and consequences as a part of the experience of a family like my own. This I am sure I have never done, for if I had, I should not have found my own robbery so prolific of unexpected emotions and experiences. Where a man has imagined a thing closely, he will not be so entirely surprised or entertained if suddenly cast upon the thing as a reality.

But a second impression left upon me by this affair was what may be called a sense of connoiseurship in the matter of robberies in general. I seem to myself now to be qualified as a judge in reference to the mildness or severity of a house-breaking affair in any quarter of the globe. Bring on your cases. I have suffered the malady, and profess to be acquainted with it. The features of a mild affair of this sort are the following: absence of the victim; theft of articles easily spared; no traces of personal ill-will. A severe case, on the contrary, involves one or all of the following features: presence of the victim and a bloody affray; capture of table silver and MSS. ready for print; mutilation of articles left behind. Such an occurrence, then, leaves one with a sense of connoiseurship and ability to judge on such matters in general.

Finally, my loss by the burglars left a third strong impression upon my mind of the following character, viz: how valuable a part is played in human society by the permanancy of men's dispositions. How would we ever discover the thieves, if the tendency to crime were not more or less stable and abiding in the heart? What, if every person had his times when his disposition led him to rob? What a quandary we would be in on the occurrence of a burglary! We could never know whom to suspect among all our fellow-citizens, from the highest to the lowest. The criminal might be any one of the whole of them. But, fortunately, men's dispositions are more or less permanent. When a robbery has occurred, we cast about instinctively among those who have committed the same crime before. We feel sure that the name of the criminal will be found in that list. We look around to find out where a certain man is who was lately discharged from prison, or who was lately acquitted by a reluctant jury. We count upon the abiding nature of the dispositions of men, and we are rarely deceived.

Such, then, were the feelings excited and the impressions left, by a robbery. The victim writes these lines within about a week of the discovery of this incident in his history.

SEDGELY.

OUR theory that neither Artemus Ward nor his wife—if he had a wife—could be suffocated by coal-gas, is substantiated by late Eastern advices. An exchange says: "That Artemus Ward, who died in Worcester, Mass., last week, from suffocation, was not, we are happy to say, the redoubtable "Arte of wax figger renown. He 'still lives.'" So his friends may dispose of their sables.

THE EMERALD STUDS.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE CIRCUIT.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

I HAVE found, by long experience, that it is no use remonstrating with a man who is head-over-ears in love. The tender passion affects us differently, according to our constitutions. One set of fellows, who are generally the pleasantest, seldom get beyond the length of flirtation. They are always at it, but constantly changing, and therefore manage to get through a tolerable catalogue of attachments before they are finally brought to book. Such men are quite able to take care of themselves, and require but little admonition. You no doubt hear them now and then abused for trifling with the affections of young women—as if the latter had themselves the slightest remorse in playing precisely the same game!—but in most cases such censure is undeserved, for they are quite as much in earnest as their neighbors, so long as the impulse lasts. The true explanation is, that they have survived their first passion, and that their faith is somewhat shaken in the boyish creed of the absolute perfectibility of woman. The great disappointment of life does not make them misanthropes—but it forces them to caution, and to a closer appreciation of character than is usually undertaken in the first instance. They have become, perhaps, more selfish—certainly more suspicious, and though often on the verge of a proposal, they never commit themselves without an extreme degree of deliberation.

Another set seem designed by nature to be the absolute victims of woman. Whenever they fall in love, they do it with an earnestness and an obstinacy which is actually appalling. The adored object of their affections can twine them around her finger, quarrel with them, cheat them, caricature them, or flirt with others, without the least risk of severing the triple cord of attachment. They become as tame as poodle-dogs, will submit patiently to any manner of cruelty or caprice, and in fact seem rather to be grateful for such treatment than otherwise. Clever women usually contrive to secure a captive of this kind. He is useful to them in a hundred ways, never interferes with their schemes, and, if the worst comes to the worst, they can always fall back upon him as a pis-aller.

My friend Tom Strachan belonged decidedly to this latter section. Mary Rivers, a remarkably clever and very showy girl, but as arrant a flirt as ever wore rosebud in her bosom, had engrossed the whole of his heart before he reached the reflecting age of twenty, and kept him for nearly five years in a state of uncomplaining bondage. Not that I believe she ever cared about him. Tom was as poor as a church-mouse, and had nothing on earth to look to except the fruits of his professional industry, which, judging from all appearances, would be a long time indeed in ripening. Mary was not the sort of person to put up with love in a cottage, even had Tom's circumstances been adequate to defray the rent of a tenement of that description: she had a vivid appreciation not only of the substantials, but of the higher luxuries of existence. But her vanity was flattered at having in her train at least one devoted dangler, whom she could play off, whenever opportunity required, against some more valuable admirer. Besides, Strachan was a man of family, tall, good looking, and unquestionably clever in his way: he also danced the polka well, and was useful in the ball-room or the pic-nic. So Mary Rivers kept him on in a kind of blissful dream, just sunning him sufficiently with her smiles to make him believe that he was beloved, but never allowing matters to go so far as to lead to the report that they were engaged. Tom asked for nothing more. He was quite contented to indulge for years in a dream of future bliss, and wrote during the interval a great many more sonnets than summonses. Unfortunately sonnets don't pay well, so that his worldly affairs did not progress at any remarkable ratio. And he only awoke to a sense of his real situation, when Miss Rivers, having picked a quarrel with him one day in the Zoological Gardens, announced on the next to her friends that she had accepted the hand of a bilious East India merchant.

Tom made an awful row about it—grew as attenuated and brown as an eel—and garnished his conversation with several significant hints about suicide. He was, however, saved from that ghastly alternative by being drafted into a Rowing Club, who plied their gondolas daily on the Union Canal. Hard exercise, beer, and pulling, had their usual sanitary effect, and Tom gradually recovered his health, if not his spirits.

It was at this very crisis that he fell in with this mysterious Miss Percy. There was an immense hole in his affections which required to be filled up; and, as nature abhors a vacuum, he plugged it with the image of Dorothea. The flight, therefore, of the fair levanter, after so brief an intercourse, was quite enough to upset him. He was in the situation of a man who is informed over-night that he has succeeded to a large fortune, and who gets a letter next morning explaining that it is a mere mistake. I was therefore not at all astonished either at his paroxysms or his credulity.

We had rather a dreary dinner that day. The judges always entertain the first day of circuit, and it is considered matter of etiquette that the counsel should attend. Sometimes these forensic feeds are pleasant enough; but on the present occasion there was a visible damp thrown over the spirits of the party. His lordship was evidently savage at the unforeseen escape of M'Wilkin, and looked upon me, as I thought, with somewhat of a prejudiced eye. Bailie Beerie and the other magistrates seemed uneasy at their unusual proximity to a personage who had the power of death and transportation, and therefore abstained from emitting the accustomed torrent of civic facetiousness. One of the sheriffs wanted to be off on a cruise, and another was unwell with the gout. The Depnty Advocate was lagged; Whaup surly as a bear with a sore ear, on account of the tennity of his fees; and Strachan, of course, in an extremely unconversational mood. So I had nothing for it but to eat and drink as plentifully as I could, and very thankful I was that the claret was tolerably sound.

We rose from table early. As I did not like to leave Tom to himself in his present state of mind, we adjourned to his room for the purpose of enjoying a cigar; and there, sure enough, upon the table lay the expected missive. Strachan dashed at it like a pike pouncing upon a parr; I lay down upon the sofa, lit my weed, and amused myself by watching his physiognomy.

"Dear suffering angel!" said Tom at last, with a sort of whimper, "Destiny has done its worst! We have parted, and the first fond dream of our love has vanished before the cold and dreary dawn of reality! O my friend—we were like the two birds in the Oriental fable, each doomed to traverse the world before we could encounter our mate—we met, and almost in the same hour the thunderbolt burst above us!"

"Yes—two very nice birds," said I. "But what does she say in the letter?"

"You may read it," replied Tom, and he handed me the epistle. It was rather a superior specimen of penmanship, and I don't choose to criticize the style. Its tenor was as follows:

"I am hardly yet, my dear friend, capable of estimating the true extent of my emotions. Like the buoyant seaweed torn from its native bed among the submarine forest of the corals, I have been tossed from wave to wave, hurried onwards by a stream more resistless than that which sweeps through the Gulf of Labrador, and far—far away as yet is the wished-for haven of my rest. Hitherto my life has been a tissue of calamity and woe. Over my head since childhood, has stretched a dull and dreary canopy of clouds, shutting me out forever from a glimpse of the blessed sun. Once, and but once only have I seen a chasm in that envious veil—only once and for a few, a very few moments, have I gazed upon the blue empyrean, and felt my heart expand and thrill to the glories of its liquid lustre. That once—oh, Mr. Strachan, can I ever forget it?—that once comprises the era of the few hours which were the silent witnesses of our meeting!

"Am I weak in writing to you thus? Perhaps I am; but then, Thomas, I have never been taught to dissemble. Did I, however, think it probable that we should ever meet again—that I should hear from your lips a repetition of that language which now is chronicled in my soul—it may be that I would not have dared to risk an avowal so candid and so dear! As it is, it matters not. You have been my benefactor, my kind consoler—my friend. You have told me that you love; and in the fulness and native simplicity of my heart, I believe you. And if it be any satisfaction to you to know that your sentiments have been at least appreciated, believe that of all the pangs which the poor Dorothea has suffered, this last agony of parting has been incomparably the most severe.

"You asked me if there was no hope. Oh! my Thomas! what would I not give could I venture to answer, yes? But it cannot be! You are young and happy, and will yet be fortunate and beloved; why, then, should I permit so fair an existence to be blighted by the upas-tree of destiny under which I am doomed to languish? You shall not say that I am selfish—you shall not hereafter reproach me for having permitted you to share a burden too great for both of us to carry. You must learn the one great lesson of existence, to submit and to forget!

"I am going far away to the margin of that inhospitable shore which receives upon its rocks the billows of the unbroken Atlantic—or haply, amongst the remoter isles, I shall listen to the seamew's cry. Do not weep for me. Amidst the myriad of bright and glowing things which flutter over the surface of this green creation, let one feeble, choking, overburdened heart be forgotten! Follow me not—seek me not—for, like the mermaid on the approach of the mariner, I should shrink from the face of man into the glassy caverns of the deep.

"Adieu, Thomas, adieu! Say what you will for me to the noble and generous Beerie. Would to heaven that I could send him some token in return for all his kindness, but a good and gallant heart is its own most adequate reward.

"They are putting to the horses—I can hear the rumble of the chariot! Oh, once more, dear friend—alas, too inexpressibly dear!—take my last farewell. Adieu—my heart is breaking as I write the bitter word!—forget me. Dorothea."

"Do you wonder at my sorrow, now?" said Strachan, as I laid down the passionate epistle.

"Why, no. It is well got up upon the whole, and does credit to the lady's erudition. But I don't see why she should insist so strongly upon eternal separation. Have you no idea whereabouts that aunt of hers may happen to reside?"

"Not the slightest."

Because, judging from her letter, it must be somewhere about Benbecula or Tiree. I shouldn't even wonder if she had a summer box on St. Kilda."

"Right! I did not think of that—you observe she speaks of the remoter isles."

"To be sure, and for half a century there has not been a mermaid seen to the east of the Lewis. Now, take my advice, Tom—don't make a fool of yourself in the meantime, but wait until the Court of Session rises in July. That will allow plenty of time for matters to settle; and if the Viscount and that abominable Abiram don't find her out before then, you may depend upon it they will abandon the search. In the interim, the lady will have cooled. Walks upon the sea-shore are uncommonly dull without something like reciprocal sentimentality. The odds are, that the old aunt is addicted to snuff, tracts, and the distribution of flannel, and before August, the fair Dorothea will be yearning for a sight of her adorer. You can easily gammon Anthony Whaup into a loan of that yacht of his which he makes such a boast of; and if you go prudently about it, and flatter him on the score of his steering, I haven't the least doubt that he will victual his hooker and give you a cruise in it for nothing."

"Admirable, my dear Fred! We shall touch at all the isles from Iona to Uist; and if Miss Percy be indeed there—"

"You can carry her off on five minutes' notice, and our long friend will be abundantly delighted. Only, mind this! If you want my candid opinion on the wisdom of such an alliance, I should strongly recommend you to meddle no further in the matter, for I have my doubts about the Honorable Dorothea, and—"

"Bah, Fred! Doubts after such a letter as that? Impossible! No, my dear friend—your scheme is admirable—unexceptionable, and I shall certainly act upon it. But oh—it is a weary time till July!"

"Merely a short interval of green peas and strawberries. I advise you, however, to fix down Whaup as early as you can for the cruise."

The hint was rapidly taken. We sent for our facetious friend, ordered supper, and in the course of a couple of tumblers persuaded him that his knowledge of nautical affairs was not exceeded by that of T. P. Cooke, and that he was much deeper versed in the mysteries of sky-scraping than Fenimore Cooper. Whaup gave in. By dint of a little extra persuasion, I believe we might have coaxed him into a voyage for Otaheite; and before we parted for the evening it was agreed that Strachan should hold himself in readiness to start for the Western Islands about the latter end of July—Whaup being responsible for the provisions and champagne, whilst Tom pledged himself to cigars.

CHAPTER IV.

I never ascertained the exact amount of the sum which Tom handed over to the Bailie. It must, however, have been considerable, for he took to retrenching his expenditure, and never once dropped a hint about the ten pounds which I was so singularly verdant as to lend him. The summer session stole away as quickly as its predecessors, though not, in so far as I was concerned, quite as unprofitably, for I got a couple of Sheriff-court papers to draw in consequence of my M'Wilkin appearance. Tom, however, was very low about himself, and affected solitude. He would not join in any of the strawberry lunches or fish dinners so attractive to the junior members of the bar; but frequented Botanical Gardens, where he might be seen any fine afternoon, stretched upon the bank beside the pond, concocting sonnets, or inscribing the name of Dorothea upon the monument dedicated to Linnæus.

Time, however, stole on. The last man who was going to be married got his valedictory dinner at the close of session. Gowns were thrown off, wigs boxed up, and we all dispersed to the country wheresoever our inclination might lead us. I resolved to devote the earlier part of the vacation to the discovery of the town of Clackmannan—a place of which I had often heard, but which no human being whom I ever encountered had seen. Whaup was not oblivious of his promise, and Strachan clove unto him like a limpet.

We did not meet again until September was well nigh over. In common with Strachan, I had adopted the resolution of changing my circuit, and henceforth adhering to Glasgow, which, from its superior supply of criminals, is the favorite resort of our young forensic aspirants. So I packed my portmanteau, invoked the assistance of St. Rollox, and started for the balmy west.

The first man I met in George's Square was my own delightful Thomas. He looked rather thin; was fearfully sunburned; had on a pair of canvas trowsers most wofully bespattered with tar, and evidently had not shaved for a fortnight.

"Why, Tom, my dear fellow!" cried I, "can this possibly be you? What the deuce have you been doing with yourself? You look as hairy as Robinson Crusoe."

"You should see Whaup—he's rather worse off than Friday. We have just landed at the Broomielaw, but I was obliged to leave Anthony in a tavern for fear we should be mobbed in the street. I'm off by the rail to Edinburgh, to get some decent toggery for us both. Lend me a pound-note, will you?

"Certainly—that's eleven, you recolleet. But what's the meaning of all this? Where is the yacht?

"Safe—under twenty fathoms of blue water, at a place they call the Sneeshanish Islands. Catch me going out again with Anthony as steersman!"

"No doubt, he is an odd sort of Palinurus. But when did this happen?"

"Ten days ago. We were three days and nights upon the rock, with nothing to eat except two biscuits, raw mussels, and tangle!"

"Mercy on us! and how did you get off?"

"In a kelp boat from Harris. But I havn't time for explanation just now. Go down like a good fellow to the Broomielaw, No. 431—you will find Anthony enjoying himself with beef-steaks and bottled stout, in the back parlor of the Cat and Bagpipes. I must refer you to him for the details."

"One word more—you'll be back to the circuit?"

"Decidedly. To-morrow morning: as soon as I can get my things together."

"And the lady—what news of her?"

The countenance of Strachan fell.

"Ah! my dear friend. I wish you had not touched upon that string—you have set my whole frame a jarring. No trace of her—none—none! I fear I shall never see her more!"

"Come! don't be down-hearted. One can never tell what may happen! Perhaps you may meet her sooner than you think."

"You are a kind-hearted fellow, Fred. But I've lost all hope. Nothing but a dreary existence is now before me—but, by Jupiter, there goes the starting bell!"

Tom vanished, like Aubrey's apparition, with a melodious twang, and a perceptible odor of tar; and so, being determined to expiscate the matter, I proceeded towards the Broomielaw, and in due time became master of the locality of the Cat and Bagpipes.

"Is there a Mr. Whaup here?" I inquired of Mrs. M'Tavish, the landlady, who was filling a gill-stoup at the bar.

"Here you are, old chap!" cried the hilarious voice of Anthony from the inner apartment. "Turn to the right, steer clear of the scrubbing brushes, and help yourself to a mouthful of Guinness."

I obeyed. Heavens, what a figure he was! His trousers were rent both at the knees and elsewhere, and were kept together solely by means of whip-cord. His shirt had evidently not benefitted by the removal of the excise duties on soap, and was screened from the scrutiny of the beholder by an extempore paletot, fabricated out of sail-cloth, without the remotest apology for sleeves.

Anthony, however, looked well in health, and appeared to be in tremendous spirits.

"Tip us your fin, my old cox'un!" said he, winking at me over the rim of an enormous pewter vessel which effectually eclipsed the lower segment of his visage. "Blessed if I ain't as glad to see you as one of Mother Carey's chickens in a squall!"

"Come, Anthony! leave off your nautical nonsense, and talk like a man of the world. What on earth have you and Tom Strachan been after?"

"Nothing on earth, but a good deal on sea, and a trifle on as uncomfortable a section of basalt as ever served two unhappy buccaneers for bed, table, and sofa. The chilliness is not off me yet."

"But how did it happen?"

"Very simply: but I'll tell you all about it. It's a long story, though, so if you please I shall top off with something hot. I'm glad you've come, however, for I had some doubts how far this sort of original Petersham would inspire confidence as to my credit in the bosom of the fair M'Tavish. It's all right now, however; so here goes for my yarn."

But I shall not follow my friend through all the windings of his discourse, varied though it certainly was, like the adventures of the venerated Sinbad. Suffice it to say, that they were hardly out of sight of the Cumbraes before Tom confided the whole tale of his sorrows to the callous Anthony, who, as he expressed it, had come out for a lark, and had no idea of rumaging the whole of the west coast and the adjacent islands for a petticoat. Moved, however, by the pathetic entreaties of Strachan, and, perhaps, somewhat reconciled to the quest by the dim vision of an elopement, Anthony magnanimously waived his objections, and the two kept cruising together, in a little shell of a yacht, all round the western archipelago. Besides themselves, there were only a man and a boy on board.

"It was slow work," said Anthony, "deucedly slow. I would not have minded the thing if Strachan had been reasonably sociable: but it was rather irksome, you will allow, when, after the boy had brought in the kettle, and we had made everything snug for the night, Master Strachan began to maunder about the lady's eyes, and to tear his hair, and to call himself the most miserable dog in existence. I had serious thoughts, at one time, of leaving him ashore on Mull or Skye, and making off direct to the Orkneys; but good-nature was always my foible, so I went on, beating from one place to another as though we had been looking for a wrecked vessel.

"I'll never take another cruise with a lover so long as I live. Tom led me all manner of dances, and we were twice fired at from farm-houses where he was caterwauling beneath the windows with a guitar. It seems he had heard that flame of his sing a Spanish air at Jedburgh. Tom must needs pick it up, and you have no idea how he pestered me. Go where we would, he kept harping on that abominable ditty, in the hopes that his mistress might hear him; and, when I remonstrated on the absurdity of the proceeding, he quoted the case of Blondel, and some trash out of Uhland's ballads. Serenading on the west coast is by no means a pleasant pastime. The nights are as raw as an anchovy, and the midges particularly plentiful.

"Well, sir, we could find no trace of the lady, after all. Strachan got into low spirits, and I confess that I was sometimes sulky—so we had an occasional blow-up, which by no means added to the conviviality of the voyage. One evening, just at sundown, we entered the Sound of Sneeshanish—an ugly place, let me tell you, at the best, but especially to be avoided in anything like a gale of wind. The clouds in the horizon looked particularly threatening, and I got a little anxious, for I knew that there were some rocks about, and not a lighthouse in the whole of the district.

"In an hour or two it grew as dark as a wolf's throat. I could not for the life of me make out where we were, for the Sound is very narrow in some parts, and occasionally I thought that I could hear breakers ahead.

"'Tom,' said I, 'Tom, you lubber!'—for our esteemed friend was, as usual, lying on the deck, with a cigar in his mouth, twangling at that eternal guitar—'take hold of the helm, will you, for a minute, while I go down and look at the chart.'

"I was as cold as a cucumber; so, after having ascertained, as I best could, the bearings about the Sound, I rather think I did stop below for one moment—but not longer—just to mix a glass of swizzle by way of fortification, for I didn't expect to get to bed that night. All of a sudden I heard a shout from the bows, bolted upon deck, and there, sure enough, was a black object right ahead, with the surf shooting over it.

"'Luff, Tom! or we are all dead men; luff, I say!' shouted I. I might as well have called to a millstone. Tom was in a kind of trance.

"'O Dorothea!' said our friend.

"'To the devil with Dorothea!' roared I, snatching the tiller from his hand.

"It was too late. We went smash upon the rock, with a force that sent us headlong upon the deck, and Strachan staggered to his feet, bleeding profusely at the proboscis.

"Down came the sail rattling about our ears, and over lurched the yacht. I saw there was no time to lose, so I leaped at once upon the rock, and called upon the rest to follow me. They did so, and were lucky to escape with no more disaster than a ruffling of the cuticle on the basalt; for in two minutes more all was over. Some of the timbers had been staved in at the first concussion. She rapidly filled; and down went, before my eyes, the Caption, the tidiest little craft that ever pitched her broadside into the hull of a Frenchman!"

"Very well told indeed," said I, "only, Anthony, it does strike me that the last paragraph is not quite original. I've heard something like it in my younger days, at the Adelphi. But what became of you afterwards?"

"Faith, we were in a fix, as you may easily conceive. All we could do was to scramble up the rocks, (which, fortunately, were not too precipitous,) until we reached a dry place, where we lay, huddled together, until morning. When light came, we found that we were not on the main land, but on a kind of little stack in the very centre of the channel, without a blade of grass upon it, or the prospect of a sail in sight. This was a nice situation for two members of the Scottish bar! The first thing we did was to inquire into the state of provisions, which we found to consist of a couple of biscuits that little Jim, the boy, happened to have about him. Of course we followed the example of the earlier navigators, and confiscated these pro bono publico. We had not a drop of alcohol among us, but, very luckily, picked up a small keg of fresh water, which, I believe, was our salvation. Strachan did not behave well. He wanted to keep half-a-dozen cigars to himself: but such monstrous selfishness could not be permitted, and the rest of us took them from him by force. I shall always blame myself for having weakly restored to him a cheroot."

"Why, we remained three days upon the rock. Fortunately the weather was moderate, so that we were not absolutely washed away, but for all that it was consumedly cold of nights. The worst thing, however, was the deplorable state of our larder. We finished the biscuits the first day, trusting to be speedily relieved; but the sun set without a vestige of a sail, and we supped sparingly upon tangle. Next morning we were so ravenous that we could have eaten raw squirrels. That day we subsisted entirely upon shell-fish, and smoked out all our cigars. On the third we bolted two old gloves, buttons and all; and, do you know, Fred, I began to be seriously alarmed about the boy Jim, for Strachan kept eying him like an ogre, began to mutter some horrid suggestions as to the propriety of casting lots, and execrated his own stupidity in being unprovided with a jar of pickles."

"O Anthony—for shame!"

"Well, I'm sure he was thinking about it, if he did not say so. However, we lunched upon a shoe, and for my own part, whenever I go upon another voyage, I shall take the precaution of providing myself with pliable French boots—your Kilmarnock leather is so very intolerably tough! Towards evening, to our infinite joy, we descried a boat entering the Sound. We shouted, as you may be sure, like demons. The Celtic Samaritans came up, and, thanks to the kindness of Rory M'Gregor the master, we each of us went to sleep that night with at least two gallons of oatmeal porridge comfortably stowed beneath our belts. And that's the whole history."

"And how do you feel after such unexampled privation?"

"Not a hair the worse. But this I know that if ever I am caught again on such an idiotical errand as hunting for a young woman through the Highlands, my nearest of kin are at perfect liberty to have me cognosced without opposition."

"Ah—you are no lover, Anthony. Strachan, now, would go barefooted through Stony Arabia for the mere chance of a casual glimpse at his mistress."

"All I can say, my dear fellow, is, that if connubial happiness cannot be purchased without a month's twangling on a guitar and three consecutive suppers upon sea-weed, I know at least one respectable young barrister who is likely to die unmarried. But I say, Fred, let us have a coach and drive up to your hotel. You can lend me a coat, I suppose, or something of the sort, until Strachan arrives; and just be good enough, will you, to settle with Mrs. M'Tavish for the bill, for, by all my hopes of a sheriffship, I have been thoroughly purged of my tin."

The matter may not be of any especial interest to the public; at the same time I think it right to record the fact that Anthony Whaup owes me seven shillings and eightpence unto this day.

CHAPTER. V.

"That is all I can tell you about it," said Mr. Hedger, as he handed me the last of three indictments, with the joyful accompaniment of the fees. "That is all I can tell you about it. If the alibi will hold water, good and well; if not, M'Closkie will be transported."

Hedger is the very best criminal agent I ever met with. There is always a point in his cases—his precognitions are perfect, and pleading, under such auspices, becomes a kind of realized romance.

"By the way," said he, "is there a Mr. Strachan of your bar at circuit? I have a curious communication from a prisoner who is desirous to have him as her counsel."

"Indeed? I am glad to hear it. Mr. Strachan is a particular friend of mine, and will be here immediately. Is it a heavy case?"

"No, but rather an odd one—a theft of money committed at the Blenheim hotel. The woman seems a person of education, but, as she obstinately refuses to tell me her story, I know very little more about it than is contained in the face of the indictment."

"What is her name?"

"Why, you know that is a matter not very easily ascertained. She called herself Euphemia Saville when brought up for examination, and, of course, she will be tried as such. She is well dressed, and rather pretty, but she won't have any other counsel than Mr. Strachan; and singularly enough, she has positively forbidden me to send him a fee on the ground that he would take it as an insult."

"I should feel particularly obliged if the whole public would take to insulting me perpetually in that manner! But really this is an odd history. Do you think she is acquainted with my friend?"

Hedger winked.

"I can't say," said he, "for, to tell you the truth, I know nothing earthly about it. I hope your friend won't take offence if I mention what the woman said."

"Not in the least; you may be sure of that. And, apropos here he comes."

And in effect Whaup and Strachan now walked into the counsel's apartment, demure, shaven, and well dressed—altogether two very different looking individuals from the tatterdemalions of yesterday.

"Good morning, Fred," cried Whaup; "Servant, Mr. Hedger—lots of work going on, eh? Are the pleas nearly over yet?"

"Very nearly, I believe, Mr. Whaup. Would you have the kindness to—"

"Oh, certainly," said I. "Strachan, allow me to introduce my friend, Mr. Hedger, who is desirous of your professional advice."

"I say, Freddy," said Whaup, looking sulkily at the twain as they retired to a window to consult, "what's in the wind now? Has old Hedger got a spite at any of his clients?"

"How should I know? What do you mean?"

"Because I should rather think," said Anthony, "that in our friend Strachan's hands the lady runs a remarkably good chance of a sea voyage to the colonies, that's all."

"Fie for shame, Anthony! You should not bear malice."

"No more do I—but I can't forget the loss of the little Caption all through his stupid blundering; and this morning he must needs sleep so long that he lost the early train, and has very likely cut me out of business for the sheer want of a pair of reputable trousers."

"Never mind—there is a good time coming."

"Which means, I suppose, that you have got the pick of the cases? Very well: it can't be helped; so I shall even show myself in court by way of public advertisement."

So saying, my long friend wrestled himself into his gown, adjusted his wig knowingly upon his cranium, and rushed towards the court-room as vehemently as though the weal of the whole criminal population of the west depended upon his individual exertions.

"Freddy, come here, if you please," said Strachan; "this is a very extraordinary circumstance! Do you know that this woman, Euphemia Saville, though she wishes me to act as her counsel, has positively refused to see me!"

"Very odd, certainly! Do you know her?"

"I never heard of the name in my life. Are you sure, Mr. Hedger, that there is no mistake?"

"Quite sure, sir. She gave me, in fact, a minute description of your person, which, perhaps, I may be excused from repeating."

"Oh, I understand," said Tom, fishingly; "complimentary, I suppose—eh?"

"Why yes, rather so," replied Hedger hesitatingly; and he cast at the same time a glance at the limbs of my beloved friend, which convinced me that Miss Saville's communication had, somehow or other, borne reference to the shape of a parenthesis. "But, at all events, you may be sure she has seen you. I really can imagine no reason for an interview. We often have people who take the same kind of whims, and you have no idea of their obstinacy. The best way will be to let the Crown lead its evidence, and trust entirely to cross-examination. I shall take care, at all events, that her appearance shall not damage her. She is well dressed, and I don't doubt will make use of her cambric handkerchief."

"And a very useful thing that same cambric is," observed I. "Come, Tom, my boy, pluck up courage! You have an opportunity now for a grand display; and if you can poke in something about chivalry and undefended loveliness, you may be sure it will have an effect on the jury. There is a strong spice of romance in the composition of the men of the Middle Ward."

"The whole thing, however, seems to me most mysterious."

"Very; but that is surely an additional charm. We seldom find a chapter from the Mysteries of Udolfo transferred to the records of the Justiciary Court of Scotland."

"Well, then, I suppose it must be so. Fred, will you sit beside me at the trial? I'm not used to this sort of thing as yet, and I possibly may feel nervous."

"Not a bit of you. At any rate I shall be there, and of course you may command me."

In due time the case was called. Miss Euphemia Saville ascended the trap stair, and took her seat between a pair of policemen with exceedingly luxuriant whiskers.

I must allow that I felt a strong curiosity about Euphemia. Her name was peculiar; the circumstances under which she came forward were unusual; and her predilection for Strachan was tantalising. Her appearance, however, did little to solve the mystery. She was neatly, even elegantly, dressed in black, with a close-fitting bonnet and thick veil, which at first effectually obscured her countenance. This, indeed, she partially removed when called upon to plead to the indictment; but the law of no civilized country that I know of is so savage as to prohibit the use of a handkerchief, and the fair Saville availed herself of the privilege by burying her countenance in cambric. I could only get a glimpse of some beautiful black braided hair and a forehead that resembled alabaster. To all appearance she was extremely agitated, and sobbed as she answered to the charge.

The tender-hearted Strachan was not the sort of man to behold the sorrows of his client without emotion. In behalf of the junior members of the Scottish bar I will say this, that they invariably fight tooth and nail when a pretty girl is concerned, and I have frequently heard bursts of impassionate eloquence poured forth in defence of a pair of bright eyes or a piquant figure, in cases where an elderly or wizened dame would have run a strong chance of finding no Cicero by her side. Tom accordingly approached the bar for the purpose of putting some questions to his client, but not a word could he extract in reply. Euphemia drew down her veil, and waived her hand with a repulsive gesture.

"I don't know what to make of her," said Strachan; "only she seems to be a monstrous fine woman. It is clear, however, that she has mistaken me for somebody else. I never saw her in my life before."

"Hedger deserves great credit for the way he has got her up. Observe, Tom, there is no finery about her; no ribbons or gaudy scarfs, which are as unsuitable at a trial as at a funeral. Black is your only wear to find favor in the eyes of a jury."

"True. It is a pity that so little attention is paid to the æsthetics of criminal clothing. But here comes the first witness—Grobey I think they call him—the fellow who lost the money."

Mr. Grobey mounted the witness-box like a cow ascending a staircase. He was a huge, elephantine animal of some sixteen stone, with bushy eyebrows and a bald pate, which he ever and anon affectionately caressed with a red and yellow bandana. Strachan started at the sound of his voice, surveyed him wistfully for a moment, and then said to me in a hurried whisper—

"As I live, Fred, that is the identical bagman who boned my emerald studs at Jedburgh!"

"You don't mean to say it?"

"Fact, upon my honor! There is no mistaking his globular free-trading nose. Would it not be possible to object to his evidence on that ground?"

"Mercy on us! no. Reflect—there is no conviction."

"True. But he stole them nevertheless. I'll ask him about them when I cross."

Mr. Grobey's narrative, however, as embraced in an animated dialogue with the public prosecutor, threw some new and unexpected light upon the matter. Grobey was a traveller in the employment of the noted house of Barnacles, Deadeye, and Company, and perambulated the country for the benevolent purpose of administering to deficiency of vision. In the course of his wanderings he had arrived at the Blenheim, where after a light supper of fresh herrings, toasted cheese, and Edinburgh ale, assisted, more Bagmannorum, by several glasses of stiff brandy and water, he had retired to his apartment to sleep off the labors of the day. Somnus, however, did not descend that night with his usual lightness upon Grobey. On the contrary, the deity seemed changed into a ponderous weight, which lay heavily upon the chest of the moaning and suffocated traveller; and notwithstanding a paralysis which appeared to have seized upon his limbs, every external object in the apartment became visible to him as by the light of a magic lantern. He heard his watch ticking, like a living creature, upon the dressing-table where he had left it. His black morocco pocket-book was distinctly visible beside the looking-glass, and two spectral boots stood up amidst the varied shadows of the night. Grobey was very uncomfortable. He began to entertain the horrid idea that a fiend was hovering through his chamber.

All at once he heard the door creaking upon its hinges. There was a slight rustling of muslin, a low sigh, and then momentary silence. "What, in the name of John Bright, can that be?" thought the terrified traveller; but he had not to wait long for explanation. The door opened slowly—a female figure, arrayed from head to foot in robes of virgin whiteness, glided in, and fixed her eyes, with an expression of deep solemnity and menace, upon the countenance of Grobey. He lay breathless and motionless beneath the spell. This might have lasted for about a minute, during which time, as Grobey expressed it, his very entrails were convulsed with fear. The apparition then moved onwards, still keeping her eyes upon the couch. She stood for a moment near the window, raised her arm with a monitory gesture to the sky, and then all at once seemed to disappear as if absorbed in the watery moonshine. Grobey was as bold a bagman as ever flanked a mare with his gig-whip, but this awful visitation was too much. Boots, looking-glass, and table swam with a distracting whirl before his eyes; he uttered a feeble yell, and immediately lapsed into a swoon.

It was bright morning when he awoke. He started up, rubbed his eyes, and endeavored to persuade himself that it was all an illusion. To be sure there were the boots untouched, the coat, the hat, and the portmanteau; but where—oh where—were the watch and the plethoric pocket-book, with its bunch of bank-notes and other minor memoranda? Gone—spirited away; and with a shout of despair old Grobey summoned the household.

The police were straightway taken into his confidence. The tale of the midnight apparition—of the Demon Lady—was told and listened to, at first with somewhat of an incredulous smile; but when the landlord stated that an unknown damsel had been sojourning for two days at the hotel, that she had that morning vanished in a hackney-coach without leaving any trace of her address, and that, moreover, certain spoons of undeniable silver were missing, Argus pricked up his ears, and after some few preliminary inquiries, issued forth in quest of the fugitive. Two days afterwards the fair Saville was discovered in a temperance hotel: and although the pocket-book had disappeared, both the recognizable notes and the watch were found in her possession. A number of pawn-tickets, also, which were contained in her reticule, served to collect from divers quarters a great mass of bijouterie, amongst which were the Blenheim spoons.

Such was Mr. Grobey's evidence as afterwards supplemented by the police. Tom rose to cross-examine.

"Pray, Mr. Grobey," said he, adjusting his gown upon his shoulders with a very knowing and determined air as though he intended to expose his victim—"Pray, Mr. Grobey, are you any judge of studs?"

"I ain't a racing man," replied Grobey, "but I knows an oss when I sees it."

"Don't equivocate, sir, if you please. Recollect you are upon your oath," said Strachan, irritated by a slight titter which followed upon Grobey's answer. "I mean studs, sir—emerald studs for example?"

"I ain't. But the lady is," replied Grobey.

"How do you mean, sir?"

"'Cos there vos five pair on them taken out of pawn with her tickets."

"How do you know that, sir?"

"'Cos I seed them."

"Were you at Jedburgh, sir, in the month of April last?"

"I was."

"Do you recollect seeing me there?"

"Perfectly."

"Do you remember what passed upon that occasion?"

"You were rather confiuscated, I think."

There was a general laugh.

"Mr. Strachan," said the judge, mildly, "I am always sorry to interrupt a young counsel, but I really cannot see the relevancy of these questions. The court can have nothing to do with your communication with the witness. I presume I need not take a note of these latter answers."

"Very well, my lord," said Tom, rather discomfited at being cut out of his revenge on the bagman, "I shall ask him something else;" and he commenced his examination in right earnest. Grobey, however, stood steadfast to the letter of his previous testimony.

Another witness was called; and to my surprise the Scottish Vidocq appeared. He spoke to the apprehension and the search, and also to the character of the prisoner. In his eyes she had long been chronicled as by habit and repute a thief.

"You know the prisoner then?" said Strachan rising.

"I do. Any time these three years."

"Under what name is she known to you?"

"Betsy Brown is her real name, but she has gone by twenty others."

"By twenty, do you say?"

"There or thereabouts. She always flies at high game; and, being a remarkably clever woman, she passes herself off for a lady."

"Have you ever seen her elsewhere than in Glasgow?"

"I have."

"Where?"

"At Jedburgh."

I cannot tell what impulse it was that made me twitch Strachan's gown at this moment. It was not altogether a suspicion, but rather a presentiment of coming danger. Strachan took the hint and changed his line.

"Can you specify any of her other names?"

"I can. There are half-a-dozen of them here on the pawn-tickets. Shall I read them?"

"If you please."

"One diamond ring, pledged in name of Lady Emily Delaroche. A garnet brooch and chain—Miss Maria Mortimer. Three gold seals—Mrs. Markham Vere. A watch and three emerald studs—the Honorable Dorothea Percy——"

There was a loud shriek from the bar, and a bustle—the prisoner had fainted.

I looked at Strachan. He was absolutely as white as a corpse.

"My dear Tom," said I, "hadn't you better go out into the open air?"

"No!" was the firm reply; "I am here to do my duty, and I'll do it."

And in effect, the Spartan boy with the fox gnawing into his side, did not acquit himself more heroically than my friend The case was a clear one, no doubt, but Tom made a noble speech, and was highly complimented by the Judge upon his ability. No sooner, however, had he finished it than he left the Court.

I saw him two hours afterwards.

"Tom," said I, "about these emerald studs—I think I could get them back from Fiscal."

"Keep them to yourself. I'm off to India."

"Bah!—go down to the Highlands for a month."

Tom did so; purveyed himself a kilt; met an heiress at the Inverness Meeting, and married her. He is now the happy father of half-a-dozen children, and a good many of us would give a trifle for his practice. But to this day he is as mad as a March hare if an allusion is made in his presence to any kind of studs whatever.

GOETHE AS A MANAGER.

[From a review in Dwight's Journal of Music, of Herr Gotthard's Pictures of the Weimar Theatre under Goethe, we extract the following synopsis:

WE have seen Goethe in many lights: the work before us presents him as a theatrical manager. This was not the least active, nor the least significant part of his career. From his disquisitions on the art of acting in Wilhalm Meister we might fairly conclude, as we do from the celebrated directions in Hamlet, that their author had the theory at his fingers' ends, and could instruct others even if he did not attempt to vie with them. There was always such regularity, such a love of order, in Goethe's whole composition, that he might be safely counted on for the business part. He would never fail, as so many great men have failed, by neglecting minor details as unworthy of his genius. If he had shown any tendency to do so, he would have been quite out of place in Weimar Larger theatres may succoed in wealthier towns without an incessant care for the pence; but Weimar itself was a place of limited incomes, and its Prince was little better off than his subjects. Some of the chief difficulties that beset Goethe's management resulted from the rigid economy that was necessary; and the marvel is that he did so much in such a place and with such resources.

* * * * * * *

To Goethe the first reading of a play was as important as the full-dress rehearsal. He was always present when a play was read, prefacing the reading by some words of explauation, and pointed out to the actors the meaning of the whole piece, and the relations of the various parts. He would sometimes read over whole passages of the play, or even declaim them, to make the meaning clear to all the actors. Herr Gotthardi compares him to his own "Serlo," in Wilhelm Meister, who could raise the most mediocre talents to wonderful ability by the exact insight that he imparted to them imperceptibly. His way of judging new players was marked by the same care and thoroughness. He looked first at the person of the novice, to see if there was anything engaging about it, and if there was nothing engaging, whether the actor could put on any attractions; for, as he remarked, the life of an actor is a perpetual denial of his own personality—a perpetual assumption of a strange mask; and an actor who cannot put on the mask of attractiveness when he wishes to be favorably judged by a stranger can have very little talent. When this questiou of the exterior was settled, Goethe turned to the voice. He made the actor read to him; gave him some grand passage to estimate his power of feeling—something passionate to test his power of expression. In this way he gradually put him through the whole range of characters, noticing all the while the parts in which he excelled, the weaknesses which he betrayed. If he had any provincial dialect, the expressions of it were noted, and a means recommended him for their cure. If he could not fence and dance, he was handed over to the fencing and the dancing masters; and if he came out satisfactorily from all these trials, Goethe chose parts for him calculated to supply his deficiencies. If he was too fiery, he was put iuto phlegmatic parts; if he was tame, he was given impetuous characters; so that he might put off himself and become a new person.

In his Conversations with Eckerman, Goethe says that his interest in the theatre was entirely practical. His delight was to raise the theatre to a higher rank, and he only attended the performances to see that the actors played their parts rightly. If he noticed any faults, he sent a line the next morning to the régisseur, and the fault was sure to be avoided the next evening. At the rehearsals, on the other hand, Goethe acted, not as a critic, but as an animated spirit.

Till Goethe (who was extremely punctual) came, the stage was generally in commotion; the actors were walking up and down, the régisseur was making his arraugements; there were a thousand little things to be done, and everybody was doing them. But the moment Goethe came in, there was a sudden silence. The strictest order was observed; there was no gabbling through parts with hands in pockets, hats on and cloaks, to give an excuse for the absence of gesticulation. Nor did the slightest fault pass unnoticed. If a sentence was delivered too quickly, the actor was stopped, and made to repeat it slower. At the rehearsal of Romeo and Juliet, which Herr Gotthardi witnessed, there were several of these interruptions. Goethe told the Nurse not to move her hands about so much, and not to wear such a constant simper. He paid particular attention to the ball-scene, which had to be practiced several times before he was satisfied. He would not allow too many of the guests to enter at onco by the same door, or to follow each other too quickly: he would not have the masks too far forward or too close together. The fight between Mercutio and Tybalt had to be repeated till the combatants were cunning in fence, for Goethe had already declared in Wilhelm Meister that in such scenes it was not enough to thrust about awkwardly, as was mostly done on the stage.

However, all these censures were delivered with the utmost calmness and the classical repose of the Phidian Zeus. It was but seldom that Goethe was excited, even by the greatest blunders. Once, indeed, when he was present at a rehearsal of Egmont, the actor who presented "Orange" spoke in such low tones as to be inaudible on the further side of the theatre. Goethe bore it for some time, but at last his patience failed him, and quietly, though loudly enough to be heard throughout the building, he said: "I should be glad to hear the piece which I wrote thirty years ago." But another time he was not contented with such a remark. In the performance of Schiller's Turandot, a march followed close on a pathetic speech of the heroine, and the musician charged with this interlude broke in upon the speech several times, and at last reduced the heroine to despairing silence. Goethe, who was in the ducal box, and was furious at the interruption, thundered out at last: "Out of my sight with the pig-dog!"

Such was the respect felt by all the actors for their distinguished ruler that neither his habitual rigor nor his occasional expressions were at all resented. One thing he imposed on them, to which players in some other countries would never have consented: the greatest actors in Weimar had to take the smallest parts. Thus the role of two insignificant senators in Mozart's opera of Titus was confided to Graff and Malkolmi, of whom Weimar was justly proud; and the first of these actors had to appear as one of Sarastro's dancing slaves after Papageno's carillon, in the Zauberflote. Some actors would resent this mandate as an indignity; but it was forced upon the Weimar corps partly by the desire of perfection, partly by economical necessities. On this account, the personnel of the stage was reduced to the lowest possible limits, and the pinching and pairing which marked the theatrical wardrobe would have done credit to a frugal housewife. When the play of Count Essex was to be given, Goethe sanctioned the purchase of a new mantle, if it was absolutely necessary, but could not allow a new dress as well. Could not the lady wear Mary Stuart's white satin dress, part of which had done for Queen Elizabeth? Similar economy confined the representative of Wallenstein to an old cloak which had been patched and mended till it was scarcely presentable. The ducal family did its best to aid the theatre by the gift of cast-off clothes; otherwise we should think the players would have been reduced to the state of those new Parisian pieces, where no clothing is required.

Fines, and even arrests in the guard-house for obstinate men, in their own chamber for disobedient ladies, were not unfrequent punishments in the Weimar Theatre. The list of fines is given by Herr Gotthardi: "Any one who has to be called at a rehearsal, pays eight groschen, and, if outside the theatre at the time, a thaler. Any one coming in too late at a performance pays a thaler. Any one refusing to play a super, either by pleading uncertified illness, or by stating that he has had a part in the play or opera, a thaler. Every member is required to dress in accordance with the character and costume of his part, and not to appear either more gorgeous or younger than the part allows; any one offending against this rule pays two thalers."

In like manner, the actors were forbidden to rehearse in shawls or cloaks, or with sticks in their hands; to make any motions during the rehearsal of a scene, except those prescribed by their part; to make any noise during rehearsals, or performances, or to applaud at either; to play any pranks while acting as super, so as to disconcert the other actors. Some players were fond of making extempore remarks, and a further clause was added, imposing a fine of ten groschen on all such additions. One of the actors most given to this crime, who had often been mulcted for it, made a comical allusion to the rule in some burlesque. The horse of Rochus Pumpernickel had not adhered exactly to its role when it brought its master on the stage, and the master shook his finger at it, exclaiming: "Take care! extemporizing is forbidden under a fine of ten groschen."

It is related of the actor who thus told the secrets of his prison-house, and no doubt incurred the fine with which he had threatened his horse, that his powers of persuasion were equal to Sheridan's. He had been long in debt with his washerwoman, and at last paid the money. The poor woman had looked forward for years to this payment, as gamblers in lotteries look forward to their big prize; and as gamblers in lotteries decide how they will employ their fortune when it comes, she had disposed, in imagination, of every farthing. It may be imagined that her delight at getting the money was excessive; but scarcely half-an-hour had elapsed before the actor came back, and persuaded the poor woman to lend him the whole sum, to which she had looked forward with such longings, and which she had got from him with such difficulty. On her relating the story to one of his brother actors, who had probably met with the same experience, he sighed deeply, and said: "Aye, aye, who can resist him?" Perhaps the story of Sheridan getting himself bailed by the sheriff's officer who arrested him, occurs most naturally as a parallel instance.

An exchange says that "waterfalls" are prohibited by the English game laws. The clause which applies to them reads as follows: "Netting the hare shall bo punished by fine," etc.

[For the Californian.]

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

THE CAMELLIA JAPONICA.

ALL window gardeners are ambitious of growing Camellias and but fow—very few—succeed, seemingly for the want of a few practical observations. The camellias with some are the most pleasant, and with others the most unsatisfactory plants that they attempt to cultivate.

It is at all times a lively evergreen, and I can hardly imagine a more beautiful object when in bloom. There are hundreds of varieties, but many of them are too much alike to be worthy of special attention. Florists value many of them for their formality and roundness, and their perfect symmetry. Some of the older varieties have not yet been surpassed for their beauty of form and color. What can excel the double white, the double stripe, myrtifolia, chandlerii, and punctata? White, blotched red and white, rose color, blood-red, and carnation? Of course there are many others equally beautiful, but these are cheap, very free bloomers, easily managed, and of good habit. Fimbriata alba also flowers tolerably free, and is always lovely with its delicate, notched petals. Duchess de Berrie is also a beautiful white flower with very handsome foliage. Buy the plants nt a respectable nurscry where they will be healthy, and pick out such as are well set with bloom buds. Always choose bushy plants with bright dark-green foliage. When they are pale there is something wrong. People are misled by forgetting that a forced plant is not in the same state as one that flowers naturally, and thns they often apply the instructions given for much-forced plants to those which are slowly coming on of their own accord, merely requiring a cool and airy placc, and to be preserved from getting really dry at any time. Camellias, for instance, flower naturally in the winter; they should not, therefore, be confounded with plants that are forced to bloom.

Au excellent plan to be adopted with all room plants is to have them in double pots, where they are not so easily affected by changes, nor liable to suffer from want of water. That is, place the pot in which the plant is grown in one of a larger size, filling in the space with sand or moss, which must be kept damp. Some of the beautiful China pots are only suitable for this purpose, and in this way they can be turned to good account.

A large vase with pedestal, standing in a bay window, filled with a suitable collection of plants, would be one of the most attractive features of a room. Take a white Camellia for the centre, and surround it with a few Ferns, Hyacinths, and Sycopodium (all in pots,) plunged in the vase in bright green moss; when done blooming they could be changed by others, so that a perpetual display could be kept up with comparatively few plants, and with but little trouble. The leaves of the camelia should be frequently washed with a soft sponge and warm water, and kept perfectly clean; in fact, all plants should be kept so, as the dirt and dust on leaves do more harm than people are aware of. Plants watered with warm water will show the effect of it, and well repay for the trouble.

This may seem like too much trouble to some, but to the genuine lover of flowers and plants it will be an additional recommendation to furnish them with what they require.

FLORAL DIRECTORY FOR THE WEEK.

28th. St. Margaret of Hungary, Double Daisy, (Bellis perrennis plenus.)
29th. St. Francis of Sales, Flowering Fern, (Osmundia Regalis.)
30th. St. Martina. Mardenhair Fern, (Asplenium trichomanes.)
31st. St. Marcella, Hartstongue Fern, (Asplenium scolopendrum.)
1st. St. Bridget, Sweet Bay, (Laurus nobilis)
2d. Virgin May, Snowdrop, (Galanthus nivalis.)
3d. Blase, Great Water Moss, (Fontinalis Antepyretica.)

IRIS.

Among other bits of amusing gossip in Lord Lennox's "Drafts on My Memory" are two instances of expensive dinners: "Three gamblers, who, after winning a large sum, had reduced it to a thousand francs, determined to spend that amount upon one dinner, and spoke to Borel upon the subject. ... The prices of expensive dishes were discussed, but none appeared extravagant, when all of a sudden an idea flashed across the mind of one of the party, which was to have a dish of frogs. As the time of year at which the dinner was held was the month of December, the intensity of tho frost had closed every pond, and, in order to get the frogs, it was necessary to employ at least fifty workmen to break up the ice. The result was that a hundred frogs cost five hundred francs, and a soup was made of them which none of the party tasted.

"The other instanco occurred in London. A party at White's were discussing how much a dinner could be made to cost, when it was agreed that each should order a dish, and whoever selected the most expensive one should dine for nothing. Alvanley came off victorious, having desired the cook to introduce a fricasseo of that part of the fowl called the oyster, which, to make a dish, required at least a hundred fowls, at a cost of four shillings each."

Blaisdell's Hibernicon, successfully exhibited in this city for the last five weeks, goes to San José on Monday.

THE WILLOW.

O WILLOW, why forever weep,
As one who mourns an endless wrong?
What hidden woe can lie so deep?
What utter grief can last so long?

The Spring makes haste with step elate
Your life and beauty to renew;
She even bids the roses wait,
And gives her first sweet care to you.

The welcome redbreast folds his wing
To pour for you his freshest strain;
To you the earliest bluebirds sing,
Till all your light stems thrill again.

The sparrow trills his wedding song
And trusts his tender brood to you,
Fair flowing vines, the summer long,
With clasp and kiss, your beauty woo.

The sunshine drapes your limbs with light,
The rain braids diamonds in your hair,
The breeze makes love to you at night—
Yet still you droop, and still despair.

Beneath your boughs, at fall of dew,
By lovers' lips is softly told
The tale that all the ages through
Has kept the world from growing old.

But still, though April's buds unfold,
Or Summer sets the earth aleaf,
Or Autumn pranks your robes with gold,
You sway and sigh in graceful grief.

Mourn on forever, unconsoled,
And keep your secret, faithful tree!
No heart in all the world can hold
A sweeter grace than constancy.

THE "PREPOSSESSED" JUROR.

[FROM CHARLES DICKENS' NEW SERIES OF CHRISTMAS STORIES.]

I HAVE always noticed a prevalent want of courage, even among persons of superior intelligence and culture, as to imparting their own psychological experiences when those have been of a strange sort. Almost all men are afraid that what they could relate in such wise would find no parallel or response in a listener's internal life, and might be suspected or laughed at. A truthful traveller who should have seen some extraordinary creature in the likeness of a sea-serpent, would have no fear of mentioning it; but the same traveller having had some singular presentiment, impulse, vagary of thought, vision (so-called,) dream, or other remarkable mental impression, would hesitate considerably before he would own to it. To this reticence I attribute much of the obscurity in which such subjects are involved. We do not habitually communicate our experiences of these subjective things, as we do our experiences of objective creation. The consequence is, that the general stock of experience in this regard appears exceptional, and really is so, in respect of being miserably imperfect.

In what I am going to relate I have no intention of setting up, opposing, or supporting, any theory whatever. I know the history of the Bookseller of Berlin, I have studied the case of the wife of a late Astronomer Royal as related by Sir David Brewster, and I have followed the minutest details of a much more remarkable case of Spectral Illusion occurring within my private circle of friends. It may be necessary to state as to this last that the sufferer (a lady) was in no degree, however distant, related to me. A mistaken assumption on that head, might suggest an explanation of a part of my own case—but only a part—which would be wholly without foundation. It cannot be referred to my inheritance of any developed peculiarity, nor had I ever before any at all similar experience, nor have I ever had any at all similar experience since.

It does not signify how many years ago, or how few, a certain Murder was committed in England, which attracted great attention. We hear more than enough of Murderers as they rise in succession to their atrocious eminence, and I would bury the memory of this particular brute, if I could, as his body was buried, in Newgate Jail. I purposely abstain from giving any direct clue to the criminal's individuality.

When the murder was first discovered, no suspicion fell—or I ought rather to say, for I cannot be too precise in my facts, it was nowhere publicly hinted that any suspicion fell—on the man who was afterwards brought to trial. As no reference was at that time made to him in the newspapers, it is obviously impossible that any description of him can at that time have been given in the newspapers. It is essential that this fact be remembered.

Unfolding at breakfast my morning paper, containing the account of that first discovery, I found it to be deeply interesting, and I read it with close attention. I read it twice, if not three times. The discovery had been made in a bedroom, and, when I laid down the paper, I was aware of a flash—rush—flow—I do not know what to call it—no word I can find is satisfactorily descriptive—in which I seemed to see that bedroom passing through my room, like a picture impossibly painted on a running river. Though almost instantaneous in its passing, it was perfectly clear; so clear that I distinctly, and with a sense of relief, observed the absence of the dead body from the bed.

It was in no romantic place that I had this curious sensation. but in chambers in Piccadilly, very near to the corner of Saint James's street. It was entirely new to me. I was in my easy-chair at the moment, and the sensation was accompanied with a peculiar shiver which started the chair from its position. (But it is to be noted that the chair ran easily on castors.) I went to one of the windows (there are two in the room, and the room is on the second floor) to refresh my eyes with the moving objects down in Piccadilly. It was a bright autumn morning, and the street was sparkling and cheerful. The wind was high. As I looked out, it brought down from the Park a quantity of fallen leaves, which a gust took, and whirled into a spiral pillar. As the pillar fell and the leaves dispersed, I saw two men on the opposite side of the way, going from West to East. They were one behind the other. The foremost man often looked back over his shoulder. The second man followed him, at a distance of some thirty paces, with his right hand menacingly raised. First, the singularity and steadiness of this threatening gesture in so public a thoroughfare, attracted my attention; and next, the more remarkable circumstance that nobody heeded it. Both men threaded their way among the other passengers, with a smoothness hardly consistent even with the action of walking on a pavement, and no single creature that I could see, gave them place, touched them, or looked after them. In passing before my windows, they both stared up at me. I saw their two faces very distinctly, and I knew that I could recognize them anywhere. Not that I had consciously noticed anything very remarkable in either face, except that the man who went first had an unusually lowering appearance, and that the face of the man who followed him was of the color of impure wax.

I am a bachelor, and my valet and his wife constitute my whole establishment. My occupation is in a certain Branch Bank, and I wish that my duties as head of a Department were as light as they are popularly supposed to be. They kept me in town that autumn, when I stood in need of change. I was not ill, but I was not well. My reader is to make the most that can be reasonably made of my feeling jaded, having a depressing sense upon me of a monotonous life, and being "slightly dyspeptic." I am assured by my renowned doctor that my real state of health at that time justifies no stronger description, and I quote his own from his written answer to my request for it.

As the circumstances of the Murder, gradually unravelling, took stronger and stronger possession of the public mind, I kept them away from mine, by knowing as little about them as was possible in the midst of the universal excitement. But I knew that a verdict of Wilful Murder had been found against the suspected Murderer, and that he had been committed to Newgate for trial. I also knew that his trial had been postponed over one Sessions of the Central Criminal Court, on the ground of general prejudice and want of time for the preparation of the defence. I may further have known, but I believe I did not, when, or about when, the Sessions to which his trial stood postponed, would come on.

My sitting-room, bedroom, and dressing-room, are all on one floor. With the last, there is no communication but through the bedroom. True, there is a door in it, once communicating with the staircase; but a part of the fitting of my bath has been—and had then been for some years—fixed across it. At the same period, and as a part of the same arrangement, the door had been nailed up and canvassed over.

I was standing in my bedroom late one night, giving some directions to my servant before he went to bed. My face was towards the only available door of communication with the dressing-room, and it was closed. My servant's back was towards that door. While I was speaking to him I saw it open, and a man look in, who very earnestly and mysteriously beckoned to me. That man was the man who had gone second of the two along Piccadilly, and whose face was of the color of impure wax.

The figure, having beckoned, drew back and closed the door. With no longer pause than was made by my crossing the bed room, I opened the dressing-room door, and looked in. I had a lighted candle already in my hand. I felt no inward expectation of seeing the figure in the dressing-room, and I did not see it there.

Conscious that my servant stood amazed, I turned round to him, and said: "Derrick, could you believe that in my cool senses I fancied I saw a——" As I there laid my hand upon his breast, with a sudden start he trembled violently, and said, "O Lord yes, sir! A dead man beckoning!"

Now, I do not believe that this John Derrick, my trusty and attached servant for more than twenty years, had any impression whatever of having seen any such figure, until I touched him. The change in him was so startling when I touched him, that I fully believe he derived his impression in some occult manner from me at that instant.

I bade John Derrick bring some brandy, and I gave him a dram, and was glad to take one myself. Of what had preceded that night's phenomenon, I told him not a single word. Reflecting on it, I was absolutely certain that I had never seen that face before, except on the one occasion in Piccadilly. Comparing its expression when beckoning at the door, with its expression when it had stared up at me as I stood at my window, I came to the conclusion that on the first occasion it had sought to fasten itself upon my memory, and that on the second occasion it had made sure of being immediately remembered.

I was not very comfortable that night, though I felt a certainty, difficult to explain, that the figure would not return. At daylight, I fell into a heavy sleep, from which I was awakened by John Derrick's coming to my bedside with a paper in his hand.

This paper, it appeared, had been the subject of an altercation at the door between its bearer and my servant. It was a summons to me to serve upon a Jury at the forthcoming Sessions of the Central Criminal Court at the Old Bailey. I had never before been summoned on such a Jury, as John Derrick well knew. He believed—I am not certain at this hour whether with reason or otherwise—that that class of Jurors were customarily chosen on a lower qualification than mine, and he had at first refused to accept the summons. The man who served it had taken the matter very coolly. He had said that my attendance or non-attendance was nothing to him; there the summons was; and I should deal with it at my own peril, and not at his.

For a day or two I was undecided whether to respond to this call, or take no notice of it. I was not conscious of the slightest mysterious bias, influence, or attraction, one way or other. Of that I am as strictly sure as of every other statement that I make here. Ultimately I decided, as a break in the monotony of my life, that I would go.

The appointed morning was a raw morning in the month of November. There was a dense brown fog in Piccadilly, and it became positively black and in the last degree oppressive east of Temple Bar. I found the passages and staircases of the Court House flaringly lighted with gas, and the Court itself similarly illuminated. I think that until I was conducted by officers into the Old Court, and saw its crowded state, I did not know that the Murderer was to be tried that day. I think that until I was so helped into the Old Court with considerable difficulty, I did not know into which of the two Courts sitting, my summons would take me. But this must not be received as a positive assertion, for I am not completely satisfied in my mind on either point.

I took my seat in the place appropriated to jurors in waiting, and I looked about the Court as well as I could through the cloud of fog and breath that was heavy in it. I noticed the black vapor hanging like a murky curtain outside the great windows, and I noticed the stifled sound of wheels on the straw or tan that was littered in the street; also, the hum of the people gathered there, which a shrill whistle, or a louder song or hail than the rest, occasionally pierced. Soon afterwards the Judges, two in number, entered and took their seats. The buzz in the Court was awfully hushed. The direction was given to put the Murderer to the bar. He appeared there. And in that same instant I recognized in him the first of the two men who had gone down Piccadilly.

If my name had been called then, I doubt if I could have answered to it audibly. But it was called about sixth or eighth in the panel, and I was by that time able to say "Here!" Now, observe. As I stepped into the box, the prisoner, who had been looking on attentively but with no sign of concern, became violently agitated, and beckoned to his attorney. The prisoner's wish to challenge me was so manifest, that it occasioned a pause, during which the attorney, with his hand upon the dock, whispered with his client, and shook his head. I afterwards had it from that gentleman, that the prisoner's first affrighted words to him were, "At all hazards, challenge that man." But, that as he would give no reason for it, and admitted that he had not even known my name until he heard it called and I appeared, it was not done.

Both on the ground already explained, that I wish to avoid reviving the unwholesome memory of that Murderer, and also because a detailed account of his long trial is by no means indispensable to my narrative, I shall confine myself closely to such incidents in the ten days and nights during which we, the Jury, were kept together, as directly bear on my own curious personal experience. It is in that, and not to a page of the Newgate Calendar, that I beg attention.

I was chosen Foreman of the Jury. On the second morning of the trial, after evidence had been taken for two hours (I heard the church clocks strike,) happening to cast my eyes over my brother-jurymen, I found an inexplicable difficulty in counting them. I counted them several times yet always with the same difficulty. In short, I made them one too many.

I touched the juryman whose place was next to me, and I whispered to him, "Oblige me by counting us." He looked surprised by the request, but turned his head and counted. "Why," says he, suddenly, "we are Thirt——; but no, it's not possible. No. We are twelve."

According to my counting that day, we were always right in detail, but in the gross we were always one too many. There was no appearance—no figure—to account for it; but I had now an inward foreshadowing of the figure that was surely coming.

The Jury were housed at the London Tavern. We all slept in one large room on separate tables, and we were constantly in the charge and under the eye of the officer sworn to hold us in safe-keeping. I see no reason for suppressing the real name of that officer. He was intelligent, highly polite, and obliging, and (I was glad to hear) much respected in the city. He had an agreeable presence, good eyes, enviable black whiskers, and a fine sonorous voice. His name was Mr. Harker.

When we turned into our twelve beds at night, Mr. Harker's bed was drawn across the door. On the night of the second day, not being disposed to lie down, and seeing Mr. Harker sitting on his bed, I went and sat beside him, and offered him a pinch of snuff. As Mr. Harker's hand touched mine in taking it from my box, a peculiar shiver crossed him, and he said: "Who is this?"

Following Mr. Harker's eyes and looking along the room, I again saw the figure I expected—the second of the two men who had gone down Piccadilly. I rose, and advanced a few steps; then stopped, and looked round at Mr. Harker. He was quite unconcerned, laughed, and said in a pleasant way, "I thought for a moment we had a thirteenth juryman, without a bed. But I see it is the moonlight."

Making no revelation to Mr. Harker, but inviting him to walk with me to the end of the room, I watched what the figure did. It stood for a few moments by the bedside of each of my eleven brother-jurymen, close to the pillow. It always went to the right-hand side of the bed, and always passed out crossing the foot of the next bed. It seemed from the action of the head, merely to look down pensively at each recumbent figure. It took no notice of me, or of my bed, which was that nearest to Mr. Harker's. It seemed to go out where the moonlight came in, through a high window, as by an aerial flight of stairs.

Next morning, at breakfast, it appeared that everybody present had dreamed of the murdered man last night, except myself and Mr. Harker.

I now felt as convinced that the second man who had gone down Piccadilly was the murdered man (so to speak,) as if it had been borne into my comprehension by his immediate testimony. But even this took place, and in a manner for which I was not at all prepared.

On the fifth day of the trial, when the case for the prosecution was drawing to a close, a miniature of the murdered man, missing from his bed-room upon the discovery of the deed, and afterwards found in a hiding-place where the Murderer had been seen digging, was put in evidence. Having been identified by the witness under examination, it was handed up to the Bench, and thence handed down to be inspected by the Jury. As an officer in a black gown was making his way with it across to me, the figure of the second man who had gone down Piccadilly, impetuously started from the crowd, caught the miniature from the officer, and gave it to me with its own hands, at the same time saying in a low and hollow tone—before I saw the miniature, which was in a locket—"I was younger then, and my face was not then drained of blood." It also came between me and the brother juryman to whom I would have given it, and so passed it on through the whole of our number, and back into my possession. Not one of them, however, detected this.

At table, and generally when we were shut up together in Mr. Harker's custody, we had from the first naturally discussed the day's proceedings a good deal. On that fifth day, the case for the prosecution being closed, and we having that side of the question in a completed shape before us, our discussion was more animated and serious. Among our number was a vestryman—the densest idiot I had ever seen at large—who met the plainest evidence with the most preposterous objections, and who was sided with by two flabby parochial parasites; all the three empanelled from a district so delivered over to fever that they ought to have been upon their own trial, for five hundred Murders. When these mischievous blockheads were at their loudest, which was towards midnight, while some of us were already preparing for bed, I again saw the murdered man. He stood grimly behind them, beckoning to me. On my going towards them and striking into the conversation, he immediately retired. This was the beginning of a separate series of appearances, confined to that long room in which we were confined. Whenever a knot of my brother-jurymen laid their heads together, I saw the head of the murdered man among theirs. Whenever their comparison of notes was going against him, he would solemnly and irresistibly beckon to me.

It will be borne in mind that down to the production of the miniature on the fifth day of the trial, I had never seen the Appearance in Court. Three changes occurred, now that we entered on the case for the defence. Two of them I will mention together, first. The figure was now in Court continually, and it never there addressed itself to me, but always to the person who was speaking at the time. For instance. The throat of the murdered man had been cut straight across. In the opening speech for the defence, it was suggested that the deceased might have cut his own throat. At that very moment, the figure, with its throat in the dreadful condition referred to (this it had concealed before,) stood at the speaker's elbow, motioning across and across its windpipe, now with the right hand, now with the left, vigorously suggesting to the speaker himself the impossibility of such a wound having been self inflicted by either hand. For another instance. A witness to character, a woman, deposed to the prisoner's being the most amiable of mankind. The figure at that instant stood on the floor before her, looking her full in the face, and pointing out the prisoner's evil countenance with an extended arm and an outstretched finger.

The third change, now to be added, impressed me strongly, as the most marked and striking of all. I do not theorize upon it; I accurately state it, and there leave it. Although the Appearance was not itself perceived by those whom it addressed, its coming close to such persons was invariably attended by some trepidation or disturbance on their part. It seemed to me as if it were prevented by laws to which I was not amenable, from fully revealing itself to others, and yet as if it could, invisibly, dumbly and darkly, overshadow their minds. When the leading counsel for the defense suggested that hypothesis of suicide and the figure stood at the learned gentleman's elbow, frightfully sawing at its severed throat, it is undeniable that the counsel faltered in his speech, lost for a few seconds the thread of his ingenious discourse, wiped his forehead with his handkerchief, and turned extremely pale. When the witness to character was confronted by the Appearance, her eyes most certainly did follow the direction of its pointed finger, and rest in great hesitation and trouble upon the prisoner's face. Two additional illustrations will suffice. On the eighth day of the trial, after the pause which was every day made in the afternoon for a few minutes' rest and refreshment, I came back into Court with the rest of the Jury, some little time before the return of the Judges. Standing up in the box and looking about me, I thought the figure was not there, until, chancing to raise my eyes to the gallery, I saw it bending forward and leaning over a very decent woman, as if to assure itself whether the Judges had resumed their seats or not. Immediately afterwards, that woman screamed, fainted, and was carried out. So with the venerable, sagacious, and patient Judge who conducted the trial. When the case was over, and he settled himself and his papers to sum up, the murdered man, entering by the judges' door, advanced to his Lordship's desk, and looked eagerly over his shoulder at the pages of his notes which he was turning. A change came over his Lordship's face; his hand stopped; the peculiar shiver that I knew so well passed over him; he faltered. "Excuse me, gentlemen, for a few moments. I am somewhat oppressed by the vitiated air;" and did not recover until he had drunk a glass of water.

Through all the monotony of six of those interminable ten days—the same Judges and others on the bench, the same Murderer in the dock, the same lawyers at the table, the same tones of question and answer rising to the roof the court, the same scratching of the Judge's pen, the same ushers going in and out, the same lights kindled at the same hour when there had been any natural light of day, the same foggy curtain outside the great windows when it was foggy, the same rain pattering and dripping when it was rainy, the same footmarks of turnkeys and prisoner day after day on the same sawdust, the same keys locking and unlocking the same heavy doors—through all the wearisome monotony which made me feel as if I had been Foreman of the Jury for a vast period of time, and Piccadilly had flourished coevally with Babylon, the murdered man never lost one trace of his distinctness in my eyes, nor was he at any moment less distinct than anybody else. I must not omit, as a matter of fact, that I never once saw the Appearance which I call by the name of the murdered man, look at the Murderer. Again and again I wondered, "Why does he not?" But he never did.

Nor did he look at me, after the production of the miniature, until the last closing minutes of the trial arrived. We retired to consider, at seven minutes before ten at night. The idiotic vestryman and his two parochial parasites gave me so much trouble that we twice returned into Court, to beg to have certain extracts from the Judge's notes re-read. Nine of us had not the smallest doubt about those passages; neither, I believe, had any one in the Court; the dunderhead triumvirate, however, having no idea but obstruction, disputed them for that very reason. At length we prevailed, and finally the Jury returned into Court at ten minutes past twelve.

The murdered man at that time stood directly opposite the jury-box, on the other side of the Court. As I took my place, his eyes rested on me with great attention; he seemed satisfied, and slowly shook a great gray veil, which he carried on his arm for the first time, over his head and whole form. As I gave in our verdict "Guilty," the veil collapsed, all was gone, and his place was empty.

The Murderer being asked by the Judge, according to usage, whether he had anything to say before sentence of death should be passed upon him, indistinctly muttered something which was described in the leading newspapers of the following day as "a few rambling, incoherent, and half-audible words, in which he was understood to complain that he had not had a fair trial, because the Foreman of the Jury was prepossessed against him." The remarkable declaration that he really made, was this:

"My Lord, I knew I was a doomed man when the Foreman of my jury came into the box. My Lord, I knew he would never let me off, because, before I was taken, he somehow got to my bedside in the night, woke me, and put a rope around my neck!"

LIFE IN THE CITY OF MEXICO.

BY mid-day all was quiet, and the streets which had been thronged in the morning were deserted till four o'clock in the afternoon, it being the custom of the country to retiro into the strict seclusion of the home circle, with which "no stranger intermeddleth," from twelve till four, when all who can afford any kind of a vehicle, drawn either by mules or horses, betake themselves to their accustomed drive on the Pasco, and, I am told, look forward to this sort of monotonous "round after round" as an amusement. To a stranger it is entertainnig, as some of the equipages with their postilions and outriders in showy liveries are very magnificent, others in very good taste, and others again giving unmistakable evidence that the "old hidalgo isn't what it used to was." But the occupants of one and all of them, pretty-looking women, "got up" generally in the latest French style, with distracting "coiffures," look perfectly uninterested in themselves and every one else, and had I not been positively assured they really enjoyed the Pasco, I should condole with them, as so many coach bound Mazeppas, and very slow coaches at that, it not being en regle to go out of a walk. Her Majesty, the Empress Carlotta, daughter of the King of Belgium, and grand-daughter of Louis Philippe, occasionally enlivens the scene by adding to it the grace of her presence in a modern-built coach, with postilions and outriders in buff tights, blue coats, high-topped beavers, preceded or followed by one or more horsemen in some of the various uniforms that surround the court and fill the streets. The variety of these uniforms is something astonishing, considering there are really so few troops in the Empire, but, as this small army is composed of French, Austrians, Belgians, and Mexicans, it is less to be wondered at. The French, in loose red trousers, predominate, and, if one may judge by the scowls of the Austrians and the malignant glances of the natives, are far from popular with any class. The Empress is represented to be a woman of superior mind and attainments, with remarkable business talents, and speaking several modern languages with facility and elegance. She is consulted on all matters of state, and in the absence of the Emperor, or in case of his death, assumes the throne. Letter from Mexico.

SCENTING OF BOOKS.—The following extract from a description of Queen Elizabeth's progress points to a curious custom in bookbinding which prevailed during some part of the sixteenth century: "After one or two removes, she reached Audley End on the 26th of July, where, by arrangement, a deputation from the University of Cambridge waited on her. They had previously announced to Lord Burghley, their chancellor, their desire of doing so, wishing to hold a deputation before her, and to present her with a book; to which he assented, but added, 'that they must have regard that the book had no savor of spyke, which commonly bookbinders did seek to add to make their books savor well; for that her Majesty could not abide such a strong scent.'"—Notes and Queries.

EARLY RISING.—Dr. Wilson Phillip says: "Although it is of consequence to the debilitated to go early to bed, there are few things more hurtful to them than remaining in it too long. Getting up an hour or two earlier often gives a degree of vigor which nothing else can procure. For those who are not much debilitated, and sleep well, the best rule is to get out of bed soon after waking in the morning. This at first may appear too early, for the debilitated require more sleep than the healthy; but rising early will gradually prolong the sleep on the succeeding night, till the quantity the patient enjoys is equal to his demand for it. Lying late is not only hurtful by the relaxation it occasions, but also by occupying that part of the day at which exercise is most beneficial."

READERS may be divided into four classes. The first may be compared to an hour-glass, their reading being as the sand; it runs in and runs out, and leaves not a vestige behind. The second class resembles a sponge, which imbibes everything, and returns it nearly in the same state, only a little dirtier. The third class is like a strainer, which allows everything that is pure to pass away, and retains only the refuse and dregs. The fourth class may be compared to the slave in the diamond mines of Golconda, who, casting aside all that is worthless, preserves only pure gems.

NEW YORK politicians are trying to reconcile the high price of coal with the low price of Wood.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3. 1866.

THE POET AND THE QUEEN.*

OF all the eminently beautiful women the world has seen, Mary Stuart seems to have been one of the most signally unfortunate in her beauty. Her love was disastrous where it fell; her rank recoiled upon her like a curse, and even that death which hushes the sorrows of the peasant and soothes the troubles of kings, came upon her, when at last it came, so bitterly that her worst enemies stood by the scaffold and mourned. Suffering is accepted by a sympathetic world as atonement for sin, and so History has dealt mercifully with the poor Queen, while Romance and Poesy have delighted to blend with her name their tender lights. Occasionally this leniency and devotion may have been pushed too far, but in this seeming extravagance we have always recognized merely the law of compensation. Numbered among the Delilahs, Phrynes, Aspasias, and Cleopatras of the world during her life, should she not be calendared with the saints after her death? Held up to popular execration until men shuddered even under the spell of her marvellous beauty, is it much wonder that she became to a certain extent the object of a nation's idolatry after her lovely head had fallen under the executioner's axe? True it is that Mary at the present day is mourned more than Elizabeth is admired, though the one postured during her reign as a virgin queen, while the other figured in common as well as in Court report as a royal voluptuary. Alas for La Reine Blanche—it has been reserved for a poet's hand to strip her memory of all the soft shades which his predecessors have thrown around it, revealing her to us as a selfish sensualist, a woman wicked in that she was false to love and a plotter against faith. And yet she was called La Reine Blanche from having mourned forty days in white for her first husband, Francis II.—for forty days her tears fell, a gentle deluge upon her young king's grave, and still we are to believe that with cold and unpitying eyes she brought a lover's head to the block. The victim having been a poet may we not suppose that Mr. Swinburne is moved by a certain corps d'esprit, and, in a desire to avenge his fellow's fate, forgets justice as he sweeps his sounding harp.

With the story of Chastelard, and the Queen, as commonly accepted, most of our readers are undoubtedly familiar. One of her most devoted followers, young, handsome, brave, well born and a poet, wooing military glory, ladies' love and literary fame in the same breath, Ronsard yielded him esteem as the ladies of the Court did admiration and love, and placed more than one chaplet of delicate verse upon his brow. Chastelard followed Mary to Scotland—more than one of the Maries loved him, but his ambition aimed at the Queen—and song and dance gave him many an opportunity of whispering soft syllables in her ear. Indiscreet the young queen certainly was, and the imported freedom of the French Court did great scandal to the austerity of Scottish manners; but that the Queen lost herself in the woman, and stepped over the threshold of innocence in her dalliance with the young poet, it has been reserved for a poet of a later age to prove. Certain it is, however, that, madly in love with Mary, twice was Chastelard caught concealed in her apartments, and the second time he paid the forfeit of his boldness with his head—protesting, as he died, her innocence.

But we will let Mr. Swinburne tell the story—and in his own words as nearly as possible: The scene opens in a chamber in Holyrood—present, the four Maries, severally surnamed Beaton, Seytou, Carmichael and Hamilton. Mary Beatou is singing a French song—and here we must remark that Mr. Swinburne's idea of a French song seems to be based upon a selection of the letters of the alphabet which rhyme and their arrangement in alternate lines—a letter to a line. The Maries are chatting as ladies of honor—and even without honor—are wont to do. The key note of the poem is dexterously struck in the following fragment of the conversation—the reminiscence of France being introduced by the remark, "The wind is like a blade aslant."

MARY HAMILTON.

Would God
I could get back one day I think upon:
The day we four und some six after us
Sat in that Louvre garden and plucked fruits
To cast love-lots with in the gathered grapes;
This way: you shut your eyes and reach and pluck,
And eateh a lover for each grape you get.
I got but one, a green one, and it broke
Between my fingers and it run down through them.

MARY SEYTON.

Ay, and the queen fell in a little wrath
Because she got so many, and tore off
Some of them she had plucked unwittingly—
She said, against her will. What fell to you?

MARY BEATON.

Me? nothing but the stalk of a stripped bunch
With clammy grape-juice leavings at the tip.

MARY CARMICHAEL.

Ay, the queen came first and she won all;
It was her bunch we took to cheat you with.
What, will you weep for that now? for you seem
As one that means to weep. God pardon me!
I think your throat is choking up with tears.
You are not well, sweet, for a lying jest
To shake you thus much.

It is the old story: Mary Beaton in love with Chastelard; he with Mary Stuart. Afterwards, the conversation very naturally runs upon the Queen. The common propensity of these little social gatherings of the fairer sex to finally retire into Committees upon the Characters of the Absent is illustrated, perhaps, in the following little hint of scandal—the Queen being still before the Board:

MARY HAMILTON.

She is the choice of women in the world,
Is she not, sweet?

MARY BEATON.

I have seen no fairer one.

MARY SEYTON.

And the most loving: did you note last night
How long she held him with her hands and eyes,
Looking a little sadly, and at last
Kissed him below the chin and parted so
As the dance ended?

MARY HAMILTON.

This was courtesy;
So might I kiss my singing-bird's red bill
After some song, till he bit short my lip.

MARY SEYTON.

But if a lady hold her bird aniglits
To sing to her between her fingers—ha?
I have seen such birds.

In an interview between Mary Beaton and Chastelard—the lady keeping the secret of her own passion hidden in her breast—asks him how much and why he loves the Queen. Certainly he gives reason enough:

——May be
I love her for sweet eyes, or brows, or hair,
For the smooth temples, where God touching her
Made blue with sweeter veins the flower-sweet white,
Or for the tender turning of her wrist,
Or marriage of the eyelid with the cheek;
I cannot tell; or flush of lifting throat,
I know not if the color get a name
This side of Heaven.

But our poet must bring in a reproach to her beauty when he dwells upon the mouth:

A flower's lip with a snake's lip, stinging sweet,
And sweet to sting with.

And a fertile hint of what comes subsequently is given when the poet concludes:

——I know no whit
How much I love them.

MARY BEATON.

Nor how she loves you back?

CHASTELARD.

I know her ways of loving, all of them:
A sweet soft way the first is; afterward
It burns and bites like fire; the end of that,
Charred dust, and eyelids bitten through with smoke.

At the close of the interview, the maid of honor promises him that night to gain him an interview with the Queen, and with that understanding they part.

Anon we have a dance, and it is Chastelard whom the Queen selects for a partner. This does not at all please Darnley, her future husband, and he "talks about her" to the English lords:

Lo you again sirs, how she laughs and leans,
Holding him fast—the subtle way she hath!
Your Queen hath none such; better as she is
For all her measures, a grave English mind,
Than Queen of snakes and Scots.

Instead of gaining him an interview with her Royal Mistress, Mary Beaton, who has made her own chamber the trysting place, meets him and in the twilight of the room he kisses her, thinking it the Queen. Repenting of her artifice after its discovery—how lamentable that woman's repentances are always afterthoughts—Miss Beaton is overwhelmed with shame and entreats death at the hands of the man she loves. At this juncture lights are brought by the other Maries of the Court, and Chastelard has to defend her honor against all their tongues.

The three Maries who were not kissed i' the dark are naturally somewhat displeased, and hie them to the Queen. "But will you swear it?" quoth the royal lady. "Indeed, I saw them kiss," answers Mary Seyton. Then the Queen sends for Chastelard, and after feeding him with sweet words, and being more than usually gracious, suddenly summons her lords, and from among them all selects Darnley as her husband. In another interview with Mary Beaton, Chastelard asks of her:

I pray you on this wedding night of theirs
Do but one thing that I shall ask of you,
And Darnley will not hunger as I shall
For that good time. Sweet, will you swear me this?

And she makes answer:

Yea: though to do it were mortal to my soul
As the chief sin.

This thing which she promises to do is to conceal the poet in the Queen's bedchamber.

On the fatal night, having kept her word, she still pleads with him to fly while there is time, and save his head. But he asks her if she has never read in French books the song called "The Duke's Song," of the marvellous capture made by a sea-net of

A strange haired woman with sad singing lips,
Cold in the cheek like any stray of sea,
And sweet to touch? so that men seeing her face,
And how she sighed out little Ahs of pain,
And soft cries sobbing sideways from her mouth,
Fell in hot love, and having lain with her,
Died soon?

Expostulation is vain and Beaton leaves him. He rhapsodises over the Queen's bed,

——Here is the very place:
Here has her body bowed the pillows in
And here her head thrust under made the sheet
Smell soft of her mixed hair and spice: even here
Her arms pushed back the coverlet, pulled here
The golden silken curtain half way in
It may be, and made room to lean out loose,
Fair tender fallen arms.

But the Queen and Darnley enter and he hides by the bed. The Queen dismisses Darnley for an hour or two—

Give me this hour to watch with and say prayers—in spite of all his pleadings and protestations, and muses before her mirror. What had Mr. Swinburne in his mind in this couplet?

Was that the wind in the casement? nay, no more
But the comb drawn through half my hissing hair.

"Hissing hair" is not good. But if he had a Medusa in his mind then, he surely must have had a more than Messalina—a vampyre—there when he makes her, after praising the love of Francis II. say

——Now, God knows,
I have no man to do as much for me
As give me but a little of his blood
To fill my beauty from, though I go down
Pale to my grave for want—I think not.

Chastelard discovers himself. At first Mary is cold while she bids him begone and save his life; he refuses:

But tell me wherein I came short of love;
For doubtless I came short of a just love,
And fell in some fool's fault that angered you.

And what a sad plea is this:

Now that I talk men dig my grave for me
Out in the rain, and in a little while
I shall be thrust in some sad space of earth
Out of your eyes.

She upbraids him with his amour with Beaton. He explains:

——how when I rode in war
Your face went floating in among men's helms,
Your voice went slipping through the shriek of slipping swords;
Yea; and I never have loved women well,
Seeing always in my sight I had your lips
Curled over, red and sweet; and the soft space
Of carven brows and splendor of great throat
Swayed lily-wise; what pleasure should one have
To wind his arms about a lesser love?

There we have an appeal to vanity which few women could resist, and finally the Queen:

——My love!
If I could kiss my heart's root out on you
You would taste love hid at the core of me.

All this while and after she implores him to fly and save his head, but he still refuses:

Here am I set now, sweet,
Till the end come. That is your husband, hark!
He knocks at the outer door. Kiss me but once.
You know now all you have to say.

Enter Darnley, and his surprise and jealousy find speech:

Yea, what thing is here?
Ay, this was what the doors shut fast upon—
Ay, trust you to be fast at prayer, my sweet?
By God, I have a mind—

Chastelard maintains the Queen's innocence, and declares his own folly, but Darnley bids:

Save your sweeth breath now, lest you lack it soon.

The guards enter and he is haled away to prison.

Chastelard—A Tragedy*—By ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE. New York: published by Hurd & Houghton. Boston: E. P. Dutton & Co. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

The curtain rises again, and the Queen is in consultation with her maids—though once, when Beaton entered at her call and the jealous fit was on her, she said, "What, no maiden here?" The voice of two—Carmichael and Seyton is for mercy (for Beaton's is sealed in her throat by her strong love)—and only Hamilton's, whose heart is hard thewed, wavers and doubts. Exeunt Maries, and enter Murray, the Queen's half-brother. Now comes the damning scene. In the conversation which ensues, the Queen protests against Chastelard's having trial openly lest she be shamed—for it is darkly intimated that he has secrets on his tongue if he should choose to speak, which might peril her good name. The Queen:

> Look sir, he shall not do it:
> Shall not, or will not, either is one way;
> I speak as I would have you understand.

MURRAY.

> Let me not guess at you; speak certainly.

And she finally speaks out to this dire purport;

> I beseech you, sir,
> To seek him out, and lest he prate of me
> To put your knife into him ere he come forth;
> Meseems this were not such wild work to do.

Murray agrees to have him taken off in prison, but re-enters and declares he will not do so cowardly a deed. And then, that no doubt of the Queen's guilt may remain upon the reader's mind, she is made to say:

> O, you will never let him speak to them
> To put me in such shame? why I should die
> Out of pure shame and mine own burning blood;
> Yea, my face feels the shame lay bold on it,
> I am half burnt already in my thought;
> Take pity of me. Think how shame slays a man;
> How shall I live then? Would you have me dead?
> I pray you for our dear dead father's sake,
> Let not men mock at me. Nay, if he speak,
> I shall be sung in mine own towns. Have pity.
> What, will you let men stone me in the ways?

And then determined that he shall not die—only because she dreads that his tongue may be loosed before his head falls, and that he may bring her to shame—she summons Darnley to her side. But his stern answer is

> By God, he dies at once!

She calls her maidens and asks if his bonds may not be loosed by some friend. They reply that such a plan for escape had been designed by his friends, but that he would not be let forth. And then she determines to make use of her queenly power. Calling her lords to her side she asks:

> I may send reprieve—
> With your sweet leaves I may?

And Murray makes answer "assuredly," though he suggests

> It were well to muffle bad men's mouths
> By casting of his head into their laps.

The reprieve is signed and sent. In the next scene we have a crowd of citizens before Holyrood. Like all of the amiable masses on such occasions, they thirst for blood, and chant conventicles, while one brings up in accusation against the prisoner that:

> He used to sit and jangle words in rhyme
> To suit with shakes of faint adulterous sound
> Some French lust in men's ears; she made songs, too,
> Soft things to feed sin's amorous mouth upon—
> Delicate sounds for dancing in at hell;

And the preacher comes in at the close with

> The mercy of a harlot is a sword;
> And her mouth sharper than a flame of fire.

In the next scene we are introduced to Chastelard in prison. Madly in love as ever, but with a strange bitterness underlying all his ecstasies, he beguiles his soul with visions of his mistress. Queer reveries these for a man to indulge in over whose neck the axe hangs quivering:

> Ah, in my weary dusty space of sight
> Her face will float with heavy scents of hair
> And fire of subtle amorous eyes, and lips
> More hot than wine, full of sweet wicked words
> Babbled against mine own lips, and long hands
> Spread out, and pale bright throat and pale bright breasts
> Fit to make all men mad. I do believe
> This fire shall never quite burn out to the ash
> And leave no heat and flame upon my dust
> For witness where a man's heart was burnt up.
> For all Christ's work this Venus is not quelled,
> But reddens at the mouth with blood of men,
> Sucking between small teeth the sap o' the veins,
> Dabbling with death her little tender lips—
> A bitter beauty, poisonous-pearled mouth.
> I am not fit to live but for love's sake,
> So I were best die shortly. Ah, fair love,
> Fair fearful Venus made of deadly foam,
> I shall escape you somehow with my death—
> Your splendid supple body and mouth on fire
> And Paphian breath that bites the lips with heat.
> I had best die.

The reprieve is brought to him by the hands of Beaton, but he:

> We'll have no riddling to make death shift sides:
> Look, here ends one of us—tears the paper into shreds. Beaton with > These bitter madmen are not fit to live, leaves him to a fate she now would not have him avoid lest she should come "to hate him easily," and Chastelard resumes his rhapsodies, prophesying, however, while he counts over his Royal mistress' charms in this last hour as a monk might tell his beads, that she will come to get her warrant back. And come she does—after a weak prelude of love this is the dialogue that ensues:

QUEEN.

> —— Come,
> I know you have it about you: give it me.

CHASTELARD.

> I cannot yield you such a thing again;
> Not as I had it.

QUEEN.

> A coward? what shift now?
> Do such men make such cravens?

CHASTELARD.

> Chide me not:
> Pity me that I cannot help my heart.

QUEEN.

> Heaven mend mine eyes that took you for a man!
> What, is it sewn into your flesh? take heed—
> Nay, but for shame—what have you done with it?

CHASTELARD.

> Why, there it lies, torn up.

QUEEN.

> God help me, sir!
> Have you done this?

CHASTELARD.

> Yes, sweet, what should I do?
> Did I not know you to the bone, my sweet?
> God speed you well! you have a goodly lord.

And at this the Queen confesses that she loves the poet in prison better than her lord in his palace. And the frenzy still being on him, he prays:

> Sit here a little till I feel you through,
> In all my breath and blood for some sweet while.
> O gracious body that mine arms have had,
> And hair my face has felt on it! grave eyes
> And low thick lids that keep since years agone
> In the blue sweet of each particular vein
> Some special print of me! I am right glad
> That I must never feel a bitterer thing
> Than your soft curled-up shoulder and amorous arms
> From this time forth.

But, presently, the bitterness of feeling which runs cocurrent with his love again wells out amid all the fierceness of his passion:

> You are quite fair: to be quite fair is best.
> Why, two nights hence I dreamed that I could see
> In through your bosom under the left flower,
> And there was a round hollow, and at heart
> A little red snake sitting, without spot,
> That bit—like this, and sucked up sweet—like this,
> And curled its lithe light body right and left,
> And quivered like a woman in act to love.
> Then there was some low fluttered talk i' the lips,
> Faint sound of soft fierce words caressing them—
> Like a fair woman's when her love gets way.
> Ah, your old kiss—I know the ways of it:
> Let the lips cling a little. Take them off,
> And speak some word or I go mad with love.

And when the clock strikes, the Queen cries:

> Can the hour be through so soon?
> I bade them give me but a little hour.
> Ah! I do love you! such a brief space for love!
> I am yours all through, do all your will with me:
> What if we lay and let them take us fast,
> Lips grasping lips? I dare do anything.

Swifty now comes the end. Beaton and Carmichael, seated at the upper window in Holyrood, play the part of the old Greek chorus, and tell us how the tragedy goes on. They watch the Queen, and Carmichael interprets:

> She bends and laughs a little graciously,
> And turns half talking to I know not whom—
> A big man with great shoulders; ah, the face,
> You get his face now—wide and duskish, yea,
> The youth burnt out of it. A goodly man,
> Thewed mightily and sunburnt to the bone:
> Doubtless he was away in banishment,
> Or kept some march far off.

This is the new nail that drives out the old one in the coffin lid. Chastelard is brought forth: an axe gleams; it swiftly falls, the doomsman gathers the bright hair in his hand and lifts the poor blood-dripping head to the gaze of the crowd; a shout of "So perish the Queen's traitors!" goes up from their ready throats, and an usher cries:

> Make way there for the lord of Bothwell: room—
> Place for my lord of Bothwell next the Queen!

All is over.

Having given so much of the poem, the reader will be enabled to form his own judgment. A certain want of consistency is visible in the plot at times, and as regards the charge against the Queen we apprehend that the Scotch verdict of "not proven" would be brought in by even an intelligent English jury. The reader will regret with us that the hand of a poet has chosen to divest the unfortunate Queen of all the charm that Romance, by common consent, has thrown around her character, exhibiting her to our wondering gaze as more of a courtesan than a coquette, and putting burning words between her lips, in substantiation of his charge, which even a poetic imagination had no right to invent. If it were necessary that this thing should be done, it certainly seems that the task should be more congenial to a prose writer, and assuredly from a prose pen we would have accepted this amendment to history with a better grace. It will perhaps occur to a few reflective minds that had Chastelard indeed loved the Queen as he professed, he would scarcely have perilled her good name by persisting on being caught by a jealous husband in her bed-chamber, and that a woman might very well be excused for wishing to have such an eccentric lover out of the way. And the verdict of a great many practical persons will be that, whether or not there had been in former days any serious love passages between the poet and the Queen, the former richly deserved the fate which he persisted in bringing upon his head at last. Barring a tendency to sacrifice sense to sound, especially in the love songs, French and English, with which the volume is interspersed; the use of the name of Deity so frequently that the Scottish Court will probably figure for the future—if we are to accept Mr. Swinburne as a faithful interpreter of its customs—as a rival to our army in Flanders when terrible swearing is the subject of comparison; and a sensuousness which at times fairly broadens into sensuality, the poem is an addition to English literature of which we have reason to be glad. It is fervid and forcible in diction, rich in imagery and expression, and as musical as the murmur of a brook throughout.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, Mr. Bandmann ended his engagement on Saturday evening last. Whatever may be thought of this gentleman's Shaksperean persouations, it is certain that in Narcisse he is excellent, and as "The Old Corporal" we do not know that he has a rival. His pantomime is graceful and expressive, and the points with which the play abounds are made with artistic skill. As for the play itself we are somewhat surprised that it did not enjoy a longer run, for it is certainly sensational enough to commend it to the red-pepper-loving taste of our community, and below all its surface coloring there lies a substratum of actual merit. A benefit having been tendered Mr. Bandmann by a number of citizens, Monday evening next is set apart for it, Richard the Third being the piece of the occasion.

On Monday last, Miss Crampton resumed her sway at the Opera House as "Julia," in The Hunchback. On Tuesday she appeared as "The Countess" in Knowles' play of Love; Wednesday, as "Bianca" in Fazio; Thursday, as "Evadne" in The Statue; and, last evening, as "Margaret Elmore" in Love's Sacrifice. In all of these characters Miss Crampton had an opportunity of developing that tragic element in which she delights, pleasing admirers of that old school of which she is an excellent representative. The houses during the week have not been such as gladden managerial eyes, but there must be seed time as well as harvest in even theatrical seasons. Mr. Thorne has dropped into the leading business of the Opera House, and is playing it so well that we fancy he will retain the position. With its present company, the Opera House should draw good audiences. The Irish Mother—an adaptation by Dr. Hayne and Mr. Sears—will be brought out next Friday evening, and a success is confidently anticipated for it. This afternoon, Love's Sacrifice. In the evening, Agnes de Vere; to conclude with The Spitfire.

At the Metropolitan, The Whiteboy's Bride ran until Wednesday evening, when it was replaced by The Elves. An extravaganza is chiefly valuable as affording numerous pegs to hang all other kinds of business upon, and of this one the management availed itself to the most, so that it was quite as bizarre in look as a Christmas tree—songs, dances, acrobatic, and gymnastic feats, there was no end to them. In the latter branch the Buislays again gave proof of their signal excellence—we do not know that they have any superiors in the world. The piece was creditably put upon the stage; somewhat draggy the first evening, it improved upon subseqnent representations. Mrs. Brown's "Statue Bride" was excellent, the different stages of that marble creature's experience of vitality being naturally and sprightlily portrayed. Miss Chapman's naive manner and exquisite pantomime added greatly to the success of the piece. Miss Hinckley—who has improved since she came to California to such an extent that she is now scarcely recognizable as the same actress—played "Prince Lubin" capitally. Her make up was good, and her address as well as her dress had a delightful aplomb about it. As "Queen of the Elves," Mrs. Alicia Mandeville Thorne—known in her maiden days as Delicious Mandeville—was perfectly at home. Just about the right size for a well-to-do fairy, with a spray of silver lace falling over her and suggesting that she had just come out of a fountain, the "little people" must have been quite proud of their representative. Of course, one of the Buislays, as the green garbed and goggled demon "Blaziui," could not be improved upon. "Count Coldstream" seems scarcely in Mr. Wheatleigh's line. And why does not the management bring out something in which that excelleut actress, Mrs. Judah, will have something to do that is half-way up to her ability? An elve is a shelve for her, nor do we think she would shine as a sylphide, but in her line she has few rivals. Percy and Leach were both good in their respective parts. This afternoon and evening, The Elves. Sam is underlined to be soon produced. H. J. Clayton, one of the most popular caterers ever on this coast, takes a benefit on Monday evening. Let everybody go.

Dan Setchell sailed on Tuesday morning for New Zealand and Australia in the bark Trieste. Few actors have ever won as much or worn as well with our community, and none have ever left more friends behind them. A parting dinner was given him by one who knows all his good qualities and has as yet to discover any very bad ones in his mental make up, and he went away with the bouquet of much red wine clinging to his skirts. Fair winds and smooth seas to him, and if he be served up cold on a New Zealand sideboard, may it not be without Cuttle-sauce and Dutch Governor gravy.

Arrah-na-Pogue is having a successful run in Sacramento. Mr. Maguire will open the Marysville Theatre on Monday evening next, and on the last three evenings of the week Arrah-na-Pogue will be produced. It is pleasant to know that the Marysvillians will soon be well Shaun-the-Posted.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks. Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LERCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Aunie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

And by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk
By JAMES S. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M jy25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. FRASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. Int. Rev. stamp } By Jas. E. Ashcom, Deputy Clerk.
B S BROOKS,
dc23 3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. } H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.) Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.
no11 3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends declared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTABLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.
L. P. GAUTIER, Med. Examiner, San Francisco.
STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
jy20-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 141 Broadway, New York,
FOR INSURING AGAINST
Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the Insuring against accident of all kinds, whether by traveling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without coin sensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00
Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.

The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YO-EMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Traveling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days..... 2
Twelve Days..... 3
Twenty Days..... 1
Thirty Days..... 5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

GREAT AMERICAN
PRIZE CONCERT!
AT
CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,
Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash.....$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash..... 5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each..... 20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each..... 10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each..... 2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each..... 25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each..... 14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each..... 10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at he last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Dunohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement to sit for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9 3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum.....7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum.....4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum....7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY —, 1866

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

ja23 JOHN BENSLEY, President pro tem.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to

jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

RAVEN GOLD AND SILVER MINING COMPANY.

Reese River Mining District, State of Nevada.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in accordance with the laws of the State of California, and in pursuance of an order of the Board of Trustees of the above named company, there will be sold at public auction at the office of the Secretary of said company, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, on Saturday, the 17th day of February, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, so many shares of the capital stock of said company standing in the names of the following parties as may be necessary to pay the assessments thereon levied on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1863, and on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1864, now due and unpaid, together with costs of advertisements and sale, unless previously paid, as follows:

	Certificate.	Shares.	Bal. due.
A P Cox,	1 to 7 inclusive,	150	$75
H. H Cooper,	15, 16, 18,	34	$17
B Chamberlin,	19, 20, 22, 24, 29,	84	$42
H. P. Perry,	30 to 35 inclusive,	93	$93
J. H. H. Williams,	40,	10	$5

GEORGE B. MERRILL, Secretary.
Office, 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.
ja20 4w

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no13-3m

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE

AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated. The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. no5-3m

CALIFORNIA

Collegiate Institute,

For Boarding and Day Pupils,

Nos. 64, 66, 68 and 70 Silver street.

THE PRESENT TERM of this Institute commenced Wednesday, Jan. 3d. Catalogues may be obtained by addressing (de30) MISS M. LAMMOND, Principal.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store.

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

I do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1866. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTABLISHMENT at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE NEW WARM

SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6 1m

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
se30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
oc29 3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

MIGNON.

[Who has not herrd of Mignon?—sweet, delicate little Mignon?—the woman-child, in whose miniature, rather than portrait, it is easy to truce the original of fairy Fenella? We would that we could adequately translate the song, which in its native German is so exquisitely plaintive, that few can listen to it without tears. This poem, it is almost needless to say, is anterior in date to Byron's "Bride of Abydos."]

KNOW'ST thou the land where the pale citron grows,
And the gold orange through dark foliage glows?
A soft wind flutters from the deep blue sky,
The myrtle blooms, and towers the laurel high.
Know'st thou it well?
O there with thee!
O that I might, my own beloved one, flee!

Know'st thou the house? On pillars rest its beams,
Bright is its hall, in light one chamber gleams,
And marble statues stand, and look on me—
What have they done, thou hapless child, to thee?
Know'st thou it well?
O there with thee!
O that I might, my loved protector, flee!

Know'st thou the track that o'er the mountain goes,
Where the mule threads its way through mist and snows,
Where dwelt in caves the dragon's ancient brood,
Topples the crag, and o'er it roars the flood.
Know'st thou it well?
O come with me!
There lies our road—oh father, let us flee!

[From the German of Goethe.

FIELD SPORTS.

RAIL SHOOTING.

SUCCESS in this delightful sport depends as much upon the proper accessories, together with skill and practice in minor matters, as in the great art of properly handling the gun. The best shot badly equipped will be surpassed by an inferior marksman accustomed to the business and thoroughly fitted out for it. The shooting is done among high reeds and from small, light, and unstable skiffs, which are poled over muddy shallows with an unsteady motion that puts an end to skill that is not founded on long practice. The sport lasts only during the few hours of high water, when the entire day's bag must be made, and requires, after the bird has been killed, a sharp eye to retrieve him amid the weeds and floating grass.

The number bagged, however, is sometimes prodigious; and although we rarely now hear of hundreds killed "in a tide," as was formerly not unusual, the shots are still frequently rapid, and the result satisfactory. The bird rises heavily, its long legs hanging down behind; flying slowly, it presents an easy mark to any one upon terra firma, and, if not shot at, will alight after proceeding thirty or forty yards. It comes on from the north during the early part of September, and disappears so instantaneously with the first heavy frost, that our superstitious baymen imagine it retires into the mud. It can, however, fly strongly, as I have sometimes had unpleasant evideuce under peculiar circumstances and in wild, windy weather. During low water, when it can run upon the muddy bottom among the thick stalks, which it does rapidly, it can hardly be flushed by any but the strongest and toughest dog, and is not frequently pursued; although many persons enjoy the hard walking and exposure of this plan, preferring to tramp the quaking surface of our broad salt meadows, and flushing the rail from amid some tuft of reeds, kill him with the aid of their loved fellow-playmate, a high strung setter or uutiring water spaniel. As the tide rises, however, and covers the bottom with a few inches of water, the rail, caught feeding among its favorite wild oats, or on the grains of the high reeds, and alarmed at the advancing boat, is forced to take wing and presents an easy mark to its destroyer. But if missed, although marked down to an inch, it rarely rises a second time, having probably escaped by swimming—a thorough knowledge of which is among its numerous accomplishments. The rail has a long, thin and soft body, which it appears to have the faculty of compressing, as it can glide amid the thick stems of reed and grass with wonderful rapidity; and, if wouuded, it will dive and swim under water, leaving its bill only projecting so as to bid defiance to pursuit.

The first necessity of equipment for this sport is a breech-loading gun, which not only enables the sportsman to kill double the uumber of birds, but will occasionally give him the benefit by a rapid change in the charge, of a favorable presentation of a chance flock of ducks. But as many persons, out of a want of knowledge or of funds, still cling to the old muzzle-loader, it may be well briefly to mention the articles that tend to modify its inferiority. Of course, as the shooting occupies but a few hours and in good days the birds are perpetually on the wing, it is essential to load rapidly; and to do this the sportsman places on a thwart before him a tin box divided into compartments for powder, shot, caps and wad, or, as I prefer, two boxes, one filled with powder and the other with the other materials. For many reasons there should he a lid over the powder—to prevent its being ignited by a chance spark or blown away by a strong wind—and the ordinary flask is frequently used in spite of the consequent delay. A double scoop, made of tin or brass, and regulated to the precise load, is placed among the powder and the shot, and a solid loading stick lies near at hand. By these means the rapidity of loading is more than doubled; the powder is dropped into both barrels at once by means of the double scoop, wads are driven home by a single blow of the rod, both barrels are charged with shot at once in the same manner, the caps are within easy reach, and the gun is loaded in less than half the time consumed in the ordinary process. The shot may be made into cartridges of paper with a wad at the upper end, and thus a few additional of the precious seconds saved.

Both barrels are discharged before either is reloaded, and the birds are retrieved immediately. The sportsman stands erect, without any support to modify the unsteadiness consequent upon the irregular motion of the boat, and requires practice, not merely to enable him to take aim, but even to retain his footing. Where the water is low and the reeds strong, this difficulty is augmented, as the boat entirely loses its way after every push, and advances by jerks that utterly confound a novice. Experience, however, being acquired in loading rapidly and in retaining his balance, and the sportman's labors are easy; but the punter requires many different qualities, and upon his excellence mainly depends the final result. He must possess judgment to select the best ground, strength to urge on the boat unflaggingly, and an inordinate development of the bump of locality to mark the dead birds. The bird once killed and the sportsmau's part ended, then the punter displays his ability; and if thoroughly versed in his craft will push the boat through tall reeds, and matted weeds, and fallen oat stalks, and drifted grass with wonderful accuracy to the very spot, and peering down amid the roots will distingnish the brown feathers almost covered with water and hidden by the vegetable growth.

In order to retrieve quickly, a wide meshed scap-net is a great convenience; but to mark well a man must be endowed by nature with that peculiar gift. Among the vast mass of undistinguishable marine plants that spring from the muddy bottom and rise a few inches or many feet above the surface, it would seem impossible to determine, within an approach to accuracy, where some bird, visible only for a moment and cut down when just topping the reeds, has fallen; and when another bird rises to meet the same fate, and perhaps a dozen are down before the first is retrieved, successful marking becomes a miracle. With some punters on the Delaware, where their names are famous, so wonderful is the precision that every bird, if killed outright, will be recovered, and even a poor marksman will make a respectable return; but when the gentleman shoots badly and the man marks worse, rail shooting is unprofitable.

For this sport, thus followed, it will be seen that a punter is indispensable, and it is made the business of a large class of men along the salt marshes where the rail most do congregate; and wherever a punter cannot be obtained, as in the wilder portions of our country, rail shooting cannot be had.

From the necessity for rapid firing the immense advantage of a breech-loader must be apparent; the tide rarely serves for over two or three hours and to kill more than a hundred birds in that time with the muzzle-loader is a remarkable feat, as it requires almost the entire time for the mere loading and firing of the gun; but the breech-loader may be charged in an instant, and enables the sportsman to improve the lucky chance of coming upon a goodly collection of birds, and make the most of the scanty time permitted to him. None of those vexatious mistakes that occasionally happen to the best sportsmen can befall him, the shot cannot get into the wrong barrel nor the cap be forgotten; the powder is not exposed to ashes from a careless man's cigar, and there being no hurry there is more probability of steady nerves and a true aim.

The charge should he light—three-quarters of an ounce of shot and two drams of powder being abundant to kill the soft and gentle rail—and pellets at least as fine as No. 9 are preferable to courser sizes. Old cartridges that have been split and mended by gumming a piece of paper over the crack, may be used in the breech-loader, provided the sportsman desires to indulge in praiseworthy economy or is deficient in a supply.

The sport is extremely exciting: the boat is forced along with considerable rustling and breaking of stems and stalks, the bright sun streams down upon the yellow reeds and lights up the variegated foliage of the distant shore; the waves of the bay or river, rising apparently to a level with the eye, sparkle in the gentle breeze that bends the sedge grass in successive waves; neighboring boats come and go, approach and recede; the rapid reports are heard in all directions like fireworks on the fourth of July; the sportsman stands erect, and eager with delirious excitement near the bow; the punter balances himself and wields his long pole dexterously on a small platform at the stern. Silently a bird, rising close to the boat, wings its way, with pendent legs and feeble strokes, towards some one of its numerous hiding-places; instantly the punter plants his pole firmly in the bottom, holding the skiff stationary, the sportsman brings up his piece and with deliberate aim sends the charge straight after the doomed rail, which pitches headlong out of sight. The punter has marked him by that single wild rice stalk with the broken top, and heads the boat at once towards the place: but ere he has advanced a dozen feet, another bird starts and offers to the expectant sportsman, who has his gun still "at a ready," another favorable chance, and meeting the same fate falls into that low bunch of matted wild oats. The breech-loader opens, the charges are extracted and others inserted, just in time to make sure of two rail that rise simultaneously, still ere the first has been reached, and which are both tumbled over and marked down—one, however, wing-tipped, and never to be seen by mortal eye again. Thus have I experienced it on the Delaware, at Hackensack, and in former days among the tributaries of Jamaica Bay, and at many other places where more or less success has attended me. Although never having enjoyed great luck, never having advanced beyond the first hundred, and claiming to be no such marksman as several of my friends, I have had wondrous sport. Of a good day, when the tide is favorable and the game plenty, the excitement is continuous and increased by a sense of competition.

Other sportsmen are on the same ground, stopping probably at the same hotel, and shooting in close proximity—occasionally too close, if they are thoughtless or careless. Not only will a charge of mustard seed sometimes rattle against the boat, but is apt, now and then, to pierce the clothes and penetrate the skin, followed by an irritation of mind and body; but when the tide has fallen, and the sport is over, a comparison of the bag made by each sportsman is inevitable, and no general assertions of round numbers will answer, but the birds must be produced. It is vain to claim what cannot be exhibited, and more than useless to talk of the immense quantities that were killed but not retrieved; such excuses are answered by ridicule, and, if the poor shot would avoid being a butt, he must be modest and submissive. As the humiliation of defeat is great, so is the triumph of superiority delicious; not only to have made the best bag and the best shooting, but to have it acknowledged by all is glorious, and makes of earth a sportsman's Paradise. Many are the excellent shots, and even day's shooting that we make by ourselves, but their narration meets with an evident incredulity that diminishes the pleasure of relation, but when the fact is established beyond dispute and is admitted, that is triumph indeed.—Citizen.

How Nelson Lost an Eye.—Nelson, in the year 1780, appeared off the Castle of San Carlos de Nicaragua in command of a small boat flotilla. There he made his arrangements, (says Señor Abarca,) with the energy and activity characteristic of English sailors, and determined to take the castle by storm. The people who composed the garrison of the said castle, awed by so bold a resolution, made up their mind to abandon the place. The commander of the fort was seriously ill, and his daughter, Dona Rafaela Mora, being aware of the intention of the garrison, and of their actual dereliction of duty, came also to her own resolution, which was worthy of an ancient heroine of Saguntum or Numancia. Leaving the commander in his helpless state, and hastening to the batteries, she soon perceived that the loss of the fortress was inevitable, and that her father would have to endure ill-usage, and would besides be exposed to the sorrow and shame of having his name associated with that national disaster. She looked about the spot, and without hesitation she took up the still burning match which the soldiers, on deserting the place, had thrown on the ground, and fired all the cannons which she found loaded and pointed at the invading flotilla. This noble deed was rewarded with the happiest results that the Señora could possibly have looked forward to. One of the many projectiles fell on board the boat in which was the commander of the flotilla, and a splinter of the bulwark struck the bone below his left eye, knocking him down as if dead, whereupon the flotilla of boats rowed back down the stream in the greatest haste. They reached their ship without any further accident, and left those waters. The Señora was rewarded with a captaincy, and an annuity from the Spanish Government.

If your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

Mothers, Read.—Mothers, why will you allow your little ones—the light of your household—to suffer and languish from that most distressing of all infantile diseases, Whooping Cough, when speedy and certain relief can be given by the administration of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup, the most agreeable and safest remedy known? Try it and be blessed.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

How to be Beautiful.—Ladies, Davidson's Circassian Bloom combines all the delicacy of a toilet dressing, unequalled in the world for beautifying, preserving and whitening the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth and transparent, removing pimples, blotches, freckles and all discolorations, and imparts a life-like beauty unsurpassed. Use Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

Drawing-room Music.—The most fashionable music for social gatherings, surprise, or children's parties—piano or orchestral—will be furnished by Walter S. Pierce, by applying at his Piano Rooms 26 Montgomery street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protructed and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordiuary success. No. 10 Masouic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for ubout five weeks, without uny hope of relief, when a friend, bearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and curried into it by three stout men, and wus hy them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I wus able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the buth to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) aud home again, uud so ou until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple trutb, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Astrology.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchomy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography ure still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In uffairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Coheu, 530 Califoruia street. Thousunds have been heuefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 cousultatious duriug the lust five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to I P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated aud cured through a scieuce unknown to others.

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details ot the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not ueedful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, hut also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Aecidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we huve to record some loss of life, or terrihle mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest cupitalists of the East, have placed their ageucy in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disubled, or $5,000 in cuse of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 ceuts for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company huve complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Iustitution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy und elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the putients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

The Russ House Bowling Saloon, corner of Pine and Montgomery streets, has reopened under the managemeut of Ferdinund Shrader. There are Eight Alleys—six for Americans aud two for Germans. The finest Wines and Liquors can be hud at the bar. All lovers of the heulth-invigorating game of ten pins are invited to pay a visit to the suloon.—Dramatic Chronicle.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose proccsses of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves ure directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, und rupidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physiciau of excellent reputation, uud as a Medical Electriciun occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hund, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instructiou iu penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, whicb will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent pensman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, aud learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it cluims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veeder,
Principal of City College, Sun Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babittonian Penmunship seem to me valuable for their practicability und simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimouy in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have curefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others intcrested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standurd authorities for the language. The Babbitonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a langnage, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years uuder chronic disease, aud who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifyiug to anuounce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamution of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruiu of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute iu a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject ut pleasure. Iu no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is uble to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no douht the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons ufflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to cousult the Doctor; ut all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks uo fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patieut places himself uuder his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received iu monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to mouth. Apply to the California Building aud Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's

---

For the very best Photoaphs, go to Bradley & Rulofson (Vance's old stand.) First premium for the best card pictures, and lnrge photographs.

TO THE LADIES OF CALIFORNIA.

IT IS A FACT, which all should know, that

Washing may be Done for Half the Cost, and in half the time, required hy pursning the method now in uso. An enormous waste ot time and materials attends the old and ordinary process. And this is not because a better method is not known, hut because housewives persist in treading in the heaten track followed hy their mothers and grandmothers before them, opposing every change, and refusing even TO MAKE A FAIR TRIAL of those new inventions which scientific research has produced.

If the housekeepers of San Francisco and of the State will try tho simply by way of experiment, they will he amazed to find how much unnecessary labor may he saved by its use. It may he obtained at all the principal Groceries of the city, or in quantities of the Agents, HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN.

California Washing Extract,

The use of the EXTRACT renders "rubbing," "pounding," "washboards," and all the sovere drudgery of the usual method quite unnecessary. It thoroughly cleanses, without injuring the clothes. In short, it works such wonders as no one will credit without witnessing them. All that the inventor asks of any doubting housewife is

A SINGLE TRIAL.

The following certificate from the State Assayer, furnished after an analysis of the EXTRACT, speaks for itself:

A. ENQUOIS—Dear Sir: I have examined the sample of liquid handed me, and find it free from acid or any substance that would he injurious to clothing.

Very respectfully, B. B. THAYER.

FULL DIRECTIONS accompany each Bottle.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

F. Schrader, cor. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
S. Friedman, 1168 Stockton street.
A. Gensoul, 311 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. L. W. Dennis, removed to 14 Geary.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.

Wm. Brown & Co., 160 Third street.

FURNITURE.

N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomory.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.

Slossen & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Roseublatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery aud Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Loidesdorff street.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

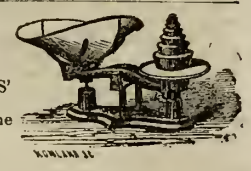
TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

SCALES!



MANUFACTURERS' Branch House on the Pacific coast.

Fairbanks' Standard Hay, Cattle, Miners' Druggists' and Grocers' Scales, adjusted to English, Spanish and Chinese weight.

We also REPAIR (supplying parts when broken or worn out) and re-adjust our Scales to the original standard.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
☞ Send for Illustrated Catalogue. ja27 3m

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, hetween Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

Aud possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

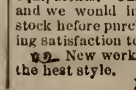
In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they ure moved back and forward by crunk or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderato strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constunt state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smuller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flut-bottomed Pans. The spirul springs greutly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diumond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantuge derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be appareut to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with severul of the Amulgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motiou given to these urms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, Etc.



WILSON & EVANS, have constantly on hand a full assortment of Double and Single Guns, Rifles and Pistols of every description, and all necessary equipments. Our Guns, etc., are of direct importation, and we would invite country merchants to examine our stock before purchasing elsewhere, feeling confident of giving satisfaction to the wholesale and retail trade.

☞ New work made to order, and repairing executed in the best style. WILSON & EVANS,
No. 613 Clay street, San Francisco,

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

dc23 3m

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

NEW

PIANOS

TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

ja20 1m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Leidesdorff street, San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1865.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

my6 3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD,
AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21st of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. dc30

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

se16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

RUPTURE.

RADICAL CURE OF Rupture by the application of the Anatomical Truss of Elastic and compressing pressure, by A. FOLLEAU, Pupil of Charriere of Paris Anatomical, Orthopedical and Surgical Machinist of the French Benevolent Society.

Orthopedic Instruments for Physical Deformities made to order.

Spinal Apparatus; Shoes for Club feet; Bow Legs, etc. Trusses of all kinds. Artificial Legs and Arms, Crutches, etc. Surgical Instruments.

A. FOLLEAU, 624 Washington street, Between Montgomery and Kearny.

Manufactory, 232 Sutter street. de3

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the last great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

-jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

NEW MUSIC.

THE "WEARING OF THE GREEN," as sung in the popular drama of ARRAH NA POGUE, just published by (oc28) M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

B. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale

DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILLMEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices. We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco.

oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

oc29-3m San Francisco.

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Department, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stags Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT.

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46. steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

EB. 10, - - - GOLDEN AGE
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
Connecting with the ATLANTIC, - - Captain Maury)
From Folsom street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the PACIFIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

A Baggage Master will be sent through each trip.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent,
Corner Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture

THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,

and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade

WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	faats.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, hill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH, OR LIQUID PEARL!

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,
AND BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
ja6-1m

THE MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.

F. S. WINSTON, PRESIDENT.

CASH ASSETS, JULY 1, 1865,
$13,500,000!

Income for current year, all cash - - -	$3 500.000
Paid claims by death, - - - - - -	6 500.000
Surplus accumulated 1864, - - - -	1,770,090

All the surplus belongs to the assured, and is equitably divided among them annually.

The Dividends of THE MUTUAL LIFE are simply the RESTITUTION OF SURPLUS PREMIUMS to Policy Holders in the proportion overpaid by each.

Hon. Elizur Wright, Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts, in a letter commendatory of this new plan of dividing surplus, (by the "Mutual Life") July 11, 1862, says: "This method of applying its own experience is an element of popularity and stability which can hardly fail to make the LEADING Life Assurance Association of this Continent also the MODEL one of the World."

Dividends can be applied IMMEDIATELY towards payment of premiums, or added to policy, at option.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Persons desiring to insure are requested to obtain a circular recently issued by the Company, entitled "Facts and Comparisons, showing the immense advantage of the Cash over the Note system, and by which it will be shown that in the Cash system less money is required in a term of years than in the Note plan.

Applications by mail or otherwise promptly attended to, and persons wishing to be called upon by an Agent of this Company will please send their address to the office of the General Agent.

The entire business of the Company for the States of California and Oregon is now under the charge and supervision of

H. S. HOMANS, General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street.

W. K. VAN ALEN, Local Agent.
SOLICITORS—S. T. KING and J. G. KNAPP. oc14 3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT!

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by m to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per mon served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must dressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchan street
SAN FRANCISCO.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine —a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CET.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use
For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents,
Corner of Pine and Sansome stree

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, FEB. 3D,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

LOVE'S SACRIFICE.

THIS EVENING, FEBRUARY 3D,

Miss Charlotte Crampton

In the Beautiful Play of

AGNES DE VERE.

To conclude with

THE SPITFIRE!

MONDAY EVENING:

COMPLIMENTARY FAREWELL BENEFIT

TO

MR. BANDMANN,

On which occasion will be presented,

RICHARD III.

WEDNESDAY EVENING:

FIRST APPEARANCE OF

Mr. C. B. Plummer,

As - - - - SOL. SHINGLE

IN

THE PEOPLE'S LAWYER,

THURSDAY EVENING:

Miss Crampton's Benefit!

FRIDAY EVENING:

DR. HAYNE'S AND J. F. SEARS'

PLAY, ENTITLED

THE IRISH MOTHER,

Will be produced.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

GRAND COMPLIMENTARY

FAREWELL BENEFIT

TENDERED TO

Mr. D. E. Bandmann,

Who will appear on this occasion, for the FIRST TIME. In Shakespeare's Great Character of

RICHARD III.,

(FROM THE ORIGINAL TEXT.)

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats, $1; Parquette, 50 cents; Gallery, 25 cents; Private Boxes, $5 and $10.
No extra price for Reserved Seats.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,

AND

Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE

TO THE

CLIFF HOUSE

TRUE ENJOYMENT!

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and the resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-tf

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."
For sale in glass only, by
ja27 1m BARRY & PATTEN

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church,)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.
Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30-3m

THE SECOND VOLUME OF OUTCROPPINGS

Is now out. Can be had FREE at WARD'S, 323 Montgomery st., and at
J. P. LECOUNT'S, corner Sacramento and Montgomery. fe3-1t

PLATT'S HALL.

LAST EXHIBITION OF

BLAISDELL'S

CELEBRATED PAINTING,

THE HIBERNICON!

OR,

A TOUR THROUGH IRELAND!

THIS AFTERNOON AND EVENING, FEB. 3D.

MADAME JULIA BLAISDELL,

SOLO HARPIST;

MISS CLARA,

The interesting IRISH BALLADIST, and the

SWISS BELL-RINGERS,

Will appear in conjunction with the Painting, each evening, with an

ELABORATE DESCRIPTIVE LECTURE,

BY J. H. WARWICK, ESQ.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....75 cents.
Family Circle.....50 cents.
No extra charge for reserved seats.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
ja19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

IRISH LINENS.

FOR THE BEST MAKES OF

IRISH LINEN GOODS!

GO TO

MOSGROVE & BLAKELY,

222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja23 tf

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY

AND

Children's Clothing

STORE,

Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to

Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,

OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27-1m

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETS

FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT

OF

CHAS. WHEATLEIGH!

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, FEBRUARY 3D, will be presented the Grand Romantic Fairy Spectacle, entitled,

THE ELVES!

Count Coldstream.....MR. C. WHEATLEIGH
Prince Pomp.....S. W. Leach
Colin.....F. Percy
Blazini.....Senor Bnislay
Daphne.....Miss Katy
Sylvia.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Prince Lubin Jockey Club.....Miss Hinckley
Phillis.....Miss Caroline Chapman
Mme Chloe.....Mrs. Judah
Princess Jouquil.....Miss Julia Gould
Eoline.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Perdita.....Madame Buislay

A Grand Ballet, Tableaux,

SONGS, GLEES, AND DUETS.

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half-Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, FEB. 3D,

The Elves,

And THE BUISLAY FAMILY, in their Wonderful Acts.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

Wine of Pepsine,

OR,

RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPsia, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.
For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

GLUCOLEIN,

A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF

COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.
Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.
Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.
Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.
The following card will explain itself without comment:

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 19, 1866.

DR. P. HOWARD—Dear Sir: I have been for seven years afflicted with rheumatism, and during that time I suffered more than generally falls to the lot of any human being in a life time. My ankles at times would measure six inches in diameter; my fingers were drawn into the palms of my hands; pains the most excruciating in my extremities, my hips and back, until I almost wished for death to relieve me of my sufferings. I tried every known remedy, and spent many hundred dollars without obtaining any relief. I have been swindled so many times by miserable Quacks, that I was afraid to try your remedy. Fortunately while reading one of your bills, a friend of mine told me that he had been cured by you. I concluded to try once more, though I had little confidence in it, because my case was of so many years standing; but judge of my surprise, when, after using it two days all my pain left me, and the swelling in my ankles decreased, and I am now, after using your remedy ten days, well and able to leave for my home. God bless you, Doctor. You will be considered a benefactor. Gratefully yours, fe3 ASA WILLEY, Drytown, Amador county.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.
Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.
JOHN CRORCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.
San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE, fe3-5t Att'y for Administrator.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Pianist,

AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms, No 26 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

FEBRUARY 14, 1866.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY!

MISS S. A—'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

I know no form so graceful,
No face so near divine;
Then haste thee love! oh, hasten
And be my Valentine.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find thee faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE:

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his ohlution,
For an appropriate communication,
To suit the occasion,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.

VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery. THIRTY new and original California Comics, "Ye Copperheads," etc.

VALENTINE WRITERS, comic and sentimental.

Appleton's Valentine Express,

with Eight Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour on Valentine's Day in every part of the city.
D. E APPLETON & CO.,
ja27-3t 508 Montgomery street.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES

OF

Standard Books,

ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of

ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!

CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

We have also a splendid assortment of

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SILK HOSE AT COST.

IVINS' PATENT HAIR-CRIMPERS!
No Lady should be without one.

TRIMMINGS, FRINGES,
BUTTONS, THREADS,
COTTONS, NEEDLES,
TAPES, FANCY GOODS,
ETC.

HOOP SKIRTS, NEW STYLES,
Best ever Imported.

ALL TO BE FOUND AT THE

PIONEER TRIMMING EMPORIUM

OF

MRS. NORCROSS,

No. 5 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.
ja21-tf

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 11.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 10, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:

Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
Cultivation of Flowers.—By "Iris."
For the Ladies.—By Clara Morton.
The Eight-Hour System.
The "White Swallow" Flight.
The Currency Question.
New Books from Roman's.

POETRY:

Compensation.—By "Ingle."
Peace.—By Emilie Lawson.

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events of the Week.

SELECTED:

"Mark Twain" among the Spirits at Congress Hall.

The Chest with the Silver Mountings.—By Mrs. Wood, author of "East Lynne," etc.

Riddling by Rule—One of "Dr. Marigold's Prescriptions."—By Charles Dickens.

A Few Words Concerning Bantingism.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

[For the Californian.]

PEACE!

LORD, give us peace!
Who smoothed the frowning wrinkles of the sea,
And tamed the waves in their fierce revelry;
Walk in Thy merciful and kind control,
Upon the troubled waters of the soul!
Bid the vain yearnings of our spirits cease:
Lord, give us peace!

Lord, give us rest!
Who stayed the swift wings of the flying wind,
Calm Thou the restless currents of the mind;
High on the mountain-top the drifting ark
At last found rest—from tempests wild and dark,
So let my soul float onward to Thy breast,
There to find rest.

EMILIE LAWSON.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, February 10th, 1866.

SOME one says that it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die.

Perhaps not; but I don't see where the rest of it comes in on either side.

On the same principle, it might be said that it is not all of loafing to loaf, nor all of dinner to dine. Very many people, when they cannot understand a thing, at once conclude that it must be super-excellent, simply because it is above their comprehension.

For my part, I think it is about time that a few of these alliterative absurdities were kicked out of the language.

A weakness for turning pretty sentences sometimes beguiles a writer into obscurity, not only making it impossible for others to understand him, but also rendering it difficult for him to understand himself. A phrase as jagged as a thunderbolt is preferable to one so smoothly set and so colorless that you cannot tell what it is.

Since "Bret" became bucolic, and retired under the shade of that Rinconian Hill, upon whose summit Kip and Kittle sit comfortably side by side, I have longed to see him, that he might explain to me the preface of his little book... for it reached me simultaneously with a pamphlet upon the Schleswig-Holstein question, and as yet I have not succeeded in comprehending either...

You will think perhaps that I come to bury Bret, not to praise him.

Premising that he was my friend, faithful and just... that is, just so... to me, perhaps I ought to go back on him now, for such is the custom of the literary world. But, on the contrary, I intend to stand by him... staunch and true.

For aside from my estimation of him as an individual, so high in the confidence of the Government that he occupies a high, responsible, and lucrative position in the Mint... with very little to do... I recognize in him a writer of idiomatic English who has few equals at the present day. The only trouble being that occasionally, as in the matter of this preface, he is so idiomatic that I do not exactly understand him.

Besides, he is a family man... he has given pledges to fortune.

He has two pretty little boys, with whom he is on such confidential and familiar terms that the elder calls him "Bret," while the other pulls his whiskers and jokes him about being THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELIST.

It is amusing to see this young father playing with his children. Calling on him the other day I found him in the parlor, flat on his back, tossing one of his boys in the air with his feet, precisely as Buislay père does Buislay fils, at the Metropolitan.

It was very funny indeed. Not quite as dexterous as Buislay is, he yet succeeded in turning the little fellow over like a butter-ball, and making him throw all sorts of somersets and hand-springs.

A summary stop was put to the amusement when Mrs. Bret entered the room, and, from the rapidity with which the curtain fell on the performance, I've an idea that she does not wish to see her children made a circus of.

But to the preface. Says Bret:

"It might be expected that a country whose scenery is remarkable for sublimity and grandeur would have inspired some suitable expression here. But the attempts at descriptive and pastoral poetry have not been generally successful: perhaps a monotonous climate, lacking those vicissitudes of seasons which elsewhere inspire the imagination, has obliged the poet to look oftener in his own heart for that Spring and Autumn from which so much imagery is supposed to flow, or in the fortunes of his fellow-men, which are mostly exempt from this climatic influence. It has therefore been thought preferable to select poems relating to a lower plane of incident and experience, as less likely to exhibit a contrast between the subject and its treatment than more ambitious efforts. For these reasons, some verses have been excluded from this work for which many readers will confidently look, and some admitted which will be equally unexpected."

No preface could be prettier. But if it is appropriate, I intend to put to a work which I am now compiling, to be called Mintdrops, being Specimens of California Coins, the following preface:

It might be expected that a country whose mines are remarkable for richness and extent, would have inspired some persons with the idea of imitation. But the attempts at counterfeiting and shoving the queer have not been generally successful: perhaps a monotonous currency, lacking those vicissitudes of value which elsewhere inspire the imagination, has obliged the prig to look oftener in his own pocket for that gold and silver from which so many blessings are supposed to flow, or in the pockets of his fellow-men, which are mostly exempt from this metallic influence.

I do not see how the monotonousness of the climate can interfere with pastoral and descriptive poetry, when grand and sublime scenery abounds, nor why the poet should look into his own heart or the fortunes of his fellow-men to find a Spring and Autumn, unless he contemplated an ode to the seasons.

A look into his own heart or the fortunes of his fellow-men would teach him something about the first Fall perhaps, but for Spring, Summer, and Winter he might better look in the heart of the Andes.

Nor do I see how inspiration drawn from the human heart and the fortunes of men, possessing a human interest, replete with the mighty and mysterious workings of human passions can produce poems "relating to a lower plane of incident and experience," than rain, snow, heat, frost, valleys and mountains supply.

The lower plane is not plain to me.

For no landscape is complete without a human figure in it. Looking at Church's Heart of the Andes you feel that something is wanting until you discover the man and woman in the foreground, near the old cross. Before, you have felt no sympathy with the picture, grand as it is; now, you are drawn to it by the feeling that it contains something common to you.

Shakspeare drew the greater part of his inspiration from his own heart and the fortunes of his fellow-men, but it has not yet been discovered that his creations have to do with a lower plane of incident and experience than the water-colored pictures of Wordsworth or the pastoral pipings of Thompson.

Ah! good friends, Bret is modest: for I do insist that by and by, when he publishes that book with which he is big, we will all take it up and look for and find inspiration in the pages of our own Harte.

Encouraged by the success of Outcroppings... of which nearly a hundred copies have been sold, after raising a hue and cry, which, in a civilized country like Kamskatka or Patagonia, would have sold ten editions... Bancroft intends to issue a volume to be called Poetry of the Pacific—

In contradistinction, I suppose, to Roman's little book, which has turned out anything but a pacific production—

"May Wentworth" is to be the editor, and a number of gentlemen vouch for her competency. Prominent among these I recognize the name of Sam Brannau... so the thing may be considered as settled... for what he does not know about art and the higher branches of literature, especially poetry, is scarcely worth knowing.

In consequence of this notable head and front to their proposed offending, will all the contributors to the new volume be called Sam-singers?

We trust that many May flowers of fancy may be brought forth under the smiles of the editress, and that the enterprise may be a successful one... it can scarcely be a failure, as the work is contingent upon a certain number of subscriptions.

Ho! ye sucking-bards of the Sage Brush, callow minstrels of the cow-counties, to the rescue!

— The out-going steamer to-day carries away a great many actors and actresses... good, bad, and indifferent.

I hardly know whether to congratulate our community or to condole with it... whether to sympathize with San Francisco or New York.

Prominent among the number, Mr. Charles Wheatleigh goes. It was expected on some sides that he would take a farewell benefit on the wharf, but failing this it is tolerably certain that he will put himself up for two or three before reaching Panama.

From a fondness which this gentleman has lately manifested for sandwiches it was thought that he might be bound for the Sandwich Islands. But to appreciate the joke, you must hear the story.

On the fiftieth night of the representation of Arrah-na-Pogue... the most successful play ever produced by any management in San Francisco... an extraordinary epoch occurred in Mr. Wheatleigh's history.

He took a Benefit.

Before, he had advised his troupe of his intention at the close of the unprecedented run of the piece to give them a banquet.

A degree of Sardanapalism was to prevail only equalled by those old time feasts, of which mention is made in the legends handed down to us from the dusty shelves of antiquity. The little breakfasts that Lucullus used to give his friends, and the dinners that Dionysius indulged in occasionally, were to pale their ineffectual dishes before the splendor of this sop to the buskin and Boucicault.

The eventful evening came. The benefit to the manager was a rousing one, and the whole strength of the company was assembled behind the scenes, hungry and expectant: Enter a waiter bearing a bottle of whiskey and a tray full of ham-sandwiches...

At the close of the benefit of Thursday evening, after the farewell speech had been spoken, a small box, with an accompanying note, was handed to the retiring actor. The box was full of ham sandwiches; the note of warm wishes for the future of the beneficiary.

To have purchased the respect of that company would not have cost much. A hundred dollars even, judiciously laid out, would have feted them well, and avoided being made the recipient of such a parting compliment.

Or, had nothing been said about a banquet at all, none would have been expected, and the expense even of the sandwiches would have been saved.

When will men learn that there is a golden mean between economy and extravagance, and that generosity never yet lost a man anything in the long run!

INIGO.

[For the Californian.]

COMPENSATION.

THE lovely violet smiles more saintly sweet
After the rain;
More golden shines, after the summer's heat,
The waving grain.

And purer still, from out the furnace gloom,
Cometh the gold;
And brighter to the wanderer gleams his home
Through storm and cold.

How fair to watch the white ship seek the strand,
That left us, once, in tears;
How thrilling is the clasping of a hand
After long years.

How dearly prized the love that stays to light
Our lonely way,
While others—false ones—faded as the night
Before the day.

And sweeter yet are kisses, when from lips
Not pressed for years;
And closer far the clasping of an arm
After long grief and tears.

So, looking backward o'er the weary road
Our feet have prest
An hundred times more lovely seems at last Eternal rest.

INGLE.

RIDDLING BY RULE.

ONE OF "DR. MARIGOLD'S PRESCRIPTIONS."

DOES any one know who gives the names to our streets? Does any one know who invents the mottoes which are inserted in the cracker-papers, along with the sugar-plums? —I don't envy him his intellectual faculties, by-the-by, and I suspect him to be the individual who translates the books of the foreign operas. Does any one know who introduces the new dishes, Kromeski's, and such-like? Does any one know who is responsible for new words, such as shunt and thud, shimmer, ping (denoting the crack of the rifle,) and many others? Does any one know who has obliged us to talk forever about "fraternizing" and "cropping up?" Does any one know the Sage to whom perfumers apply when they have invented a shaving-soap, or hair-wash, and who furnishes the trade with such names for their wares as Rypophagon, Euxesis, Depilatory, Bostrakeison? Does any one know who makes the riddles?

To the last question—only—I answer, Yes; I know.

In a certain year, which, I don't mind mentioning may be looked upon as included in the present century, I was a little boy—a sharp little boy, though I say it, and a skinny little boy. The two qualities not unfrequently go together. I will not mention what my age was at the time, but I was at school not far from London, and I was of an age when it is customary, or was customary, to wear a jacket and frill.

In riddles, I had at that early age a profound and solemn joy. To the study of those problems, I was beyond measure addicted, and in the collecting of them I was diligent in the extreme. It was the custom at the time for certain periodicals to give the question of a conundrum in one number, and the answer in the next. There was an interval of seven days and nights between the propounding of the question, and the furnishing of the reply. What a time was that for me! I sought the solution of the enigma, off and on (generally on,) during the leisure hours of the week (no wonder I was skinny!) and sometimes, I am proud to remember, I became acquainted with the answer before the number containing it reached me from the official source. There was another kind of puzzle which used to appear when my sharp and skinny boyhood was at its sharpest and skinniest, by which I was much more perplexed than by conundrums or riddles conveyed in mere words. I speak of what may be called symbolical riddles—rebus is, I believe, their true designation—little squalid woodcuts representing all sorts of impossible objects huddled together in incongruous disorder; letters of the alphabet, at times, and even occasionally fragments of words, being introduced here and there, to add to the general confusion. Thus you would have: a Cupid mending a pen, a gridiron, the letter x, a bar of music, p. u. g., and a fife—you would have these presented to you on a certain Saturday, with the announcement that on the following Saturday there would be issued an explanation of the mysterious and terrific jumble. That explanation would come, but with it new difficulties worse than the former. A bird-cage, a setting sun (not like,) the word "snip," a cradle, and some quadruped to which it would have puzzled Buffon himself to give a name. With these problems I was not successful, never having solved but one in my life, as will presently appear. Neither was I good at poetical riddles, in parts—slightly forced—as "My first is a boa-constrictor, My second's a Roman lictor, My third is a Dean and Chipter, And my whole goes always on tip-ter." These were too much for me.

I remember on one occasion accidentally meeting with a publication in which there was a rebus better executed than those to which I had been accustomed, and which mystified me greatly. First of all there was the letter A; then came a figure of a clearly virtuous man in a long gown, with a scrip, and a staff, and a cockle-shell on his hat; then followed a representation of an extremely old person with flowing white hair and beard; the figure 2 was the next symbol, and beyond this was a gentleman on crutches, looking at a five-barred gate. Oh, how that rebus haunted me! It was at a sea-side library that I met with it during the holidays, and before the next number came out I was back at school. The publication in which this remarkable picture had appeared was an expensive one, and quite beyond my means, so there was no way of getting at the explanation. Determined to conquer, and fearing that one of the symbols might escape my memory, I wrote them down in order. In doing so, an interpretation flashed upon me. A—Pilgrim—Age—To—Cripple—Gate. Ah; was it the right one? Had I triumphed, or had I failed? My anxiety on the subject attained such a pitch at last, that I determined to write to the editor of the periodical in which the rebus had appeared, and implore him to take compassion upon me and relieve my mind. To that communication I received no answer. Perhaps there was one in the notices to correspondents—but then I must have purchased the periodical to get it.

I mention these particulars because they had something—not a little—to do with a certain small incident which, small though it was, had influence on my after life. The incident in question was the composition of a riddle by the present writer. It was composed with difficulty, on a slate; portions of it were frequently rubbed out, the wording of it gave me a world of trouble, but the work was achieved at last. "Why," it was thus that I worded it in its final and corrected form, "Why does a young gentleman who has partaken freely of the pudding, which at this establishment precedes the meat, resemble a meteor? Because he's effulgent—a full gent!"

Hopeful, surely! Nothing unnaturally premature in the composition. Founded on a strictly boyish grievance. Possessing a certain archæological interest in its reference to the now obsolete practice of administering pudding before meat at educational establishments, with the view of damping the appetite (and constitution) of the pupils.

Though inscribed upon perishable and greasy slate, in ephemeral slate-pencil, my riddle lived. It was repeated. It became popular. It was all over the school, and at last it came to the ears of the master. That unimaginative person had no taste for the fine arts. I was sent for, interrogated as to whether this work of art was the product of my brain, and, having given an answer in the affirmative, received a distinct, and even painful, punch on the head, accompanied by specific directions to inscribe straightway the words "Dangerous Satirizing," two thousand times, on the very slate on which my riddle had been originally composed.

Notwithstanding this act of despotism on the part of the unappreciative Beast who invariably treated me as if I were not profitable (when I knew the contrary,) my reverence for the great geniuses who have excelled in the department of which I am speaking, grew with my growth, and strengthened with etc. Think of the pleasure, the rapture, which Riddles afford to persons of wholesomely constituted mind! Think of the innocent sense of triumph felt by the man who propounds a riddle to a company, to every member of which it is a novelty. He alone is the proprietor of the answer. His is a glorious position. He keeps everybody waiting. He wears a calm and placid smile. He has the rest at his mercy. He is happy—innocently happy.

But who makes the Riddles?

I DO.

Am I going to let out a great mystery? Am I going to initiate the uninitiated? Am I going to let the world know how it is done?

Yes. I am.

It is done in the main by the Dictionary; but the consultation of that work of reference, with a view to the construction of riddles, is a process so bewildering—it puts such a strain upon the faculties—that at first you cannot work at it for more than a quarter of an hour at once. The process is terrific. First of all you get yourself thoroughly awake and on the alert—it is good to run the fingers through the hair roughly at this crisis—then you take your Dictionary, and, selecting a particular letter, you go down the column, stopping at every word that looks in the slightest degree promising, drawing back from it as artists draw back from a picture to see it the better, twisting it, and turning it, and if it yielded nothing, passing on to the next. With the substantives you occupy yourself in an especial manner, as more may be done with them than with any of the other parts of speech; while, as to the words with two meanings, you must be in a bad state indeed, or have particularly ill luck, if you fail to get something out of them.

Suppose that you are going in for a day's riddling—your dinner depending on the success of your efforts. Take your Dictionary, and open it at hap-hazard. You open, say, among the Fs, and you go to work.

You make several stoppages as you go down the column. You pause naturally at the word Felt. It is a past participle of the verb to feel, and is a substance used in making hats. You press it hard. Why is a hatter—No—Why may a hatter invariably be looked upon as a considerate person? Because he has always felt for—No. That won't do. You go on. "Fen"—a chance here for a well-timed thing about the Fenian Brotherhood. This is worth a struggle, and you make a desperate one. A Fen is a marsh. In a marsh there is mud. Why was it always expected that the Irish rebels must ultimately stick in the mud? Because theirs was a Fen ian movement. Intolerable! Yet you are loth to abandon the subject. A Fen is a Morass. More-ass. Why is an Irish rebel more ass than knave? No, again it won't do!

Disconsolate, but dogged, you go on till you arrive at "Fertile." Fer-tile. Tile—Tile, a hat. Why is a Hat made of Beaver, like land that always yields fine crops? Because it may be called Fertile (Fur-tile.) That will do. Not first-class, but it will do. Riddling is very like fishing. Sometimes you get a small trout, sometimes a large one. This is a small trout, but it shall go in to the basket, nevertheless. And now you are fairly warming to your work. You come to "Forgery." You again make a point. For gery—For Jerry. A complicated riddle of a high order. Intricate, and of the Coleridge kind. Why—No, If—If a gentleman having a favorite son of tender years, named Jeremiah, were in the course of desert to put a pear in his pocket, stating, as he did so, that the fruit was intended for his beloved boy, why, in making such an explanation, would he mention a certain act of felony once punishable by death? Because he would say that it was Forgery—For Jerry. Into the basket.

It never rains but it pours. Another complex one, of the same type. Fungus! I a well-bred lady should, in sport, poke her cousin Augustus in the ribs with her lilac and white parasol, and hurt him, what vegetable product would she mention in facetiously apologising? Fungus—Fun Gus. In with it.

The Fs being exhausted, you take a short rest. Then, screwing your faculties up afresh, and seizing the Dictionary again, you open it once more. Cs this time lie before you, a page of Cs. You pause, hopeful, at corn. The word has two meanings, it ought to answer. It shall be made to answer. This is a case of a peculiar kind. You determine to construct a riddle by rule. There is no genius needed here. The word has two meanings; both shall be used; it is a mechanical process. Why is a reaper at his work like a chiropodist? Because he's a corn-cutter. Made by rule, complete, impregnable; but yet not interesting. The Cs are not propitious, and you apply to the Bs. In your loitering mood you drop down upon the word "Bring," and with idiotcy at hand sit gazing at it. Suddenly you revive—Bring, Brought, Brought up. Brought up will do. Why is the coal-scuttle which Mary has conveyed from the kitchen to the second floor, like an infant put out to dry nurse? Because it's brought up by hand. You try once more, and this time it is the letter H on which your hopes depend. The columns under H, duly perused, bring you in due time to Horse. Why is a horse attached to the vehicle of a miser like a war steamer of the present day? Because he's driven by a screw. Another? Hoarse. Why is a family, the members of which have always been subject to sore-throats, like "The Derby?" Because it's a hoarse-race (Horse-race.)

It is by no means always the case, however, that the Dictionary affords so large a yield as this. It is hard work—and, worst of all, there is no end to it. You get, after a certain time, incapable of shaking off the shop even in your moments of relaxation. Nay, worse. You feel as if you ought to be always at it, lest you should miss a good chance, that would never return. It is this that makes epigrammatic literature wearing. If you go to the play, if you take up a newspaper, if you ensconce yourself in a corner with a blessed work of fiction, you find yourself still pursued and haunted by your profession. The dialogue to which you listen when you go to the theatre, the words of the book you are reading, may suggest something, and it behoves you to be on the look-out. Horrible and distracting calling! You may get rid of your superfluous flesh more quickly by going through a course of riddling, than by running up-hill in blankets for a week together, or going through a systematic course of Turkish baths.

Moreover, the cultivator of epigrammatic literature has much to undergo in the disposal of his wares, when they are once ready for the market. There is a public sale for them, and, between ourselves, there is a private ditto. The public demand for the article, which it has been so long my lot to supply, is not large, nor, I am constrained to say, is it entirely cordial. The periodicals in which your rebus or your conundrum appears hebdomadally, are not numerous; nor are the proprietors of such journals respectfully eager for this peculiar kind of literature. The conundrum or the rebus will knock about the office for a long time, and, perhaps, only get inserted at last because it fits a vacant space. When we are inserted, we always—always mind—occupy an ignoble place. We come in at the bottom of a column, or occupy the very last lines of the periodical in which we appear—in company with that inevitable game at chess in which white is to check-mate in four moves. One of the best riddles—the best, I think, that I ever made—was knocking about at the office of a certain journal six weeks before it got before the public. It ran thus: Why is a little man who is always telling long stories about nothing like a certain new kind of rifle? ANSWER: Because he's a small-bore.

This work was the means of bringing me acquainted with the fact that there was a Private as well as a public sale for the productions of the epigrammatic artist. A gentleman, who did not give his name—neither will I give it, though I know it well—called at the office of the periodical in which this particular riddle appeared, on the day succeeding its publication, and asked for the name and address of its author. The sub-editor of the journal, a fast friend of mine, to whom I owe many a good turn, furnished him with both, and, on a certain day, a middle-aged gentleman of rather plethoric appearance, with a sly twinkle in his eye, and with humorous lines about his mouth—both eye and mouth were utter imposters, for my friend had not a particle of humor in his composition—came gasping up my stairs, and introducing himself as an admirer of genius—"and therefore," with a courteous wave of the hand, "your very humble servant"—wished to know whether it would suit my purpose to supply him, from time to time, with certain specimens of epigrammatic literature, now a riddle, now an epigram, now a short story that could be briefly and effectively told, all of which should be guaranteed to be entirely new and original, which should be made over wholly and solely to him, and to which no other human being should have access whatever. My gentleman added that he was prepared to pay very handsomely for what he had, and, indeed, mentioned terms which caused me to open my eyes to the fullest extent of which those organs are capable.

I soon found out what my friend Mr. Price Scrooper was at. I call him by this name (which is fictitious, but something like his own,) for the sake of convenience. He was a diner-out, who held a somewhat precarious reputation, which, by hook or crook, he had acquired as a sayer of good things, a man sure to have the last new story at the end of his tongue. Mr. Scrooper liked dining-out above all things, and the horror of that day when there should come a decline in the number of his invitations was always before his eyes. Thus it came about that relations were established between us—between me, the epigrammatic artist, and Price Scrooper, the diner-out.

I fitted him with a good thing or two even on the very day of his paying me a first visit. I gave him a story which I remembered to have heard my father tell when I was an infant—a perfectly safe story, which had been buried for years in oblivion. I supplied him with a riddle or two which I happened to have by me, and which were so very bad that no company could ever suspect them of a professional origin. I set him up in epigram for some time, and he set me up in the necessaries of life for some time, and so we parted mutually satisfied.

The commercial dealings thus satisfactorily established were renewed steadily and at frequent intervals. Of course, as in all earthly relations, there were not wanting some unpleasant elements to qualify the generally comfortable arrangements. Mr. Scrooper would sometimes complain that some of the witticisms with which I had supplied him, failed in creating an effect—had hardly proved remunerative, in short.

What could I reply? I could not tell him that this was his fault. I told him a story given by Isaac Walton, of a clergyman who, hearing a sermon preached by one of his cloth with immense effect, asked for the loan of it. On returning the sermon, however, after having tried it on his own congregation, he complained that it had proved a total failure, and that his audience had responded in no degree to his eloquence. The answer of the original proprietor of the sermon was crushing: "I lent you," he said, "indeed, my fiddle, but not my fiddle-stick;" meaning, as Isaac explains, rather unnecessarily, "the manner and intelligence with which the sermon was to be delivered."

My friend did not seem to feel the application of this anecdote. I believe he was occupied, while I spoke, in committing the story to his memory for future use—thus getting it gratuitously out of me—which was mean.

In fact, Mr. Scrooper, besides his original irreparable deficiency, was getting old and stupid, and would often forget or misapply the point of a story, or the answer to a conundrum. With these last I supplied him freely, working really hard to prepare for his use such articles as were adapted to his peculiar exigencies. As a diner-out, riddles of a convivial sort—alluding to matters connected with the pleasures of the table—are generally in request, and with a supply of these I fitted Mr. Scrooper, much to his satisfaction. Here are some specimens, for which I charged him rather heavily:

Why is wine—observe how easily this is brought in after dinner—why is wine, made up for the British market, like a deserter from the army?

Because it's always brandied (branded) before it's sent off.

Why is a ship, which has to encounter rough weather before it reaches its destination, like a certain wine which is usually adulterated with logwood and other similar matters?

Because it goes through a vast deal before it comes into port.

What portion of the trimming of a lady's dress resembles East India sherry of the first quality?

That which goes round the Cape.

One of his greatest difficulties, my patron told me—for he was as frank with me as a man is with his doctor or his lawyer—was in remembering which were the houses where he had related a certain story, or propounded a certain conundrum; who were the people to whom such and such a riddle would be fresh; who were the people to whom it was already but too familiar. Mr. Scrooper had also a habit of sometimes asking the answer to a riddle instead of the question, which was occasionally productive of confusion; or, giving the question properly, he would, when his audience became desperate, and gave it up, supply them with the answer to an altogether different conundrum.

One day my patron came to me in a state of high indignation. A riddle—bran new, and for which I had demanded a high price, thinking well of it myself—had failed, and Mr. Scrooper came to me in a rage to expostulate.

"It fell as flat as ditch-water," he said. "Indeed, one very disagreeable person said there was nothing in it, and he thought there must be some mistake. A very nasty thing to say, considering that the riddle was given as my own. How could I be mistaken in my own riddle?"

"May I ask," said I, "how you worded the question?"

"Certainly. I worded it thus: Why are we justified in believing that the pilgrims to Mecca undertake the journey with mercenary motives?"

"Quite right," said I; "and the answer?"

"The answer," replied my patron, "was as you gave it me: Because they go for the sake of Mahomet."

"I am not surprised," I said, coldly, for I felt that I had been unjustly blamed. "that your audience was mystified. The answer, as I gave it to you, ran thus: Because they go for the sake of the profit (Prophet)!"

Mr. Scrooper subsequently apologized.

I draw near to the end of my narrative. The termination is painful; so is that of King Lear. The worst feature in it is that it involves the acknowledgment of a certain deplorable piece of weakness on my own part.

I was really in the receipt of a very pretty little income from Mr. Scrooper, when one morning I was again surprised by a visit from a total stranger—again, as on a former occasion, a middle-aged gentleman—again an individual with a twinkling eye and a humorous mouth—again a diner-out, with two surnames—Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite I will call him, which is sailing as near the wind as I consider safe.

Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite came on the errand which had already brought Mr. Scrooper to the top of my stairs. He, too, had seen one of my productions in a certain journal, (for I still kept up my relation with the public press,) and he, too, having a similar reputation to maintain, and finding his brain at times rather sterile, had come to me to make exactly the same proposal which had already been made by Mr. Scrooper.

For a time the singularity of the coincidence absolutely took my breath away, and I remained staring speechlessly at my visitor in a manner which might have suggested to him that I was hardly the man to furnish him with anything very brilliant. However, I managed to recover myself in time. I was very guarded and careful in my speech, but finally expressed my readiness to come to terms with my new employer. These were soon settled: Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite having even more liberal views as to this part of the business than those entertained by Mr. Price Scrooper.

The only difficulty was to supply this gentleman quickly enough with what he wanted. He was in a hurry. He was going that evening to a dinner-party, and it was supremely important that he should distinguish himself. The occasion was a special one. It must be something good. He would not stick at a trifle in the matter of terms, but he did want something super-excellent. A riddle—a perfectly new riddle—he would like best.

My stores were turned over, my desk was ransacked, and still he was not satisfied. Suddenly it flashed into my mind that I had something by me which would exactly do. The very thing—a riddle alluding to a subject of the day; a subject just at that time in everybody's mouth. One which there would be no difficulty in leading up to. In short, a very neat thing indeed. There was but one doubt in my mind. Had I already sold it to my original employer? That was the question, and for the life of me I could not answer it with certainty. The life of one addicted to such pursuits as mine, is chaotic; and with me more particularly, doing an extensive public and private trade, it was especially so. I kept no books, nor any record of my professional transactions. One thing which influenced me strongly to believe the riddle to be still unappropriated, was, that I had certainly received no intelligence as to its success or failure from Mr. Scrooper, whereas that gentleman never failed to keep me informed on that momentous point. I was in doubt, but I ended, (so princely were the terms offered by my new patron,) in giving myself the benefit of that doubt, and handing over the work of art in question to Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite.

If I were to say that I felt comfortable after having brought this transaction to a close, I should not speak the truth. Horrible misgivings filled my mind, and there were moments when, if it had been possible to undo what was done, I should have taken that retrogressive step. This, however, was out of the question. I didn't even know where my new employer was to be found. I had nothing for it but to wait and try my best to feel sanguine.

The circumstances which distinguished the evening of that eventful day on which I first received a visit from my new patron, were subsequently related to me with great accuracy, and not without rancorous comment, by both of those who sustained leading parts in the evening's performances. Yes, terrible to relate, on the following day both my patrons came to me, overflowing with fury, to tell me what had happened, and to denounce me as the first cause of the mischief. Both were furious, but my more recent acquaintance, Mr. Postlethwaite, was the more vehement in his wrath.

It appeared, according to this gentleman's statement, that having repaired at the proper time to the residence of the gentleman whose guest he was to be that evening, and who, he took occasion to inform me, was a personage of consideration, he found himself in the midst of a highly distinguished company. He had intended to be the last arrival, but a fellow named Scrooper, or Price, or something of that sort—both names, perhaps—was yet expected. He soon arrived, however, Mr. Postlethwaite said, and the company went to dinner.

Throughout the meal, the magnificent nature of which I will not dilate upon, these two gentlemen were continually at loggerheads. They appear—and in this both the accounts which reached me tally—to have contradicted each other, interrupted each other, cut into each other's stories, on every occasion, until that sort of hatred was engendered between them which Christian gentlemen sharing a meal together do sometimes feel towards each other. I suspect that each had heard of the other as a "diner-out," though they had not met before, and that each was prepared to hate the other.

Adhering to the Postlethwaitean narrative faithfully, I find that all this time, and even when most aggravated by the conduct of my earliest patron, he was able to comfort himself with the reflection that he had by him in store the weapon wherewith, when the proper moment should arrive, to inflict the coup de grace upon his rival. That weapon was my riddle—my riddle fitted to a topic of the day.

The moment arrived. I shudder as I proceed. The meal was over, the wines had circulated once, and Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite began gently, insidiously, and with all the dexterity of an old performer, to lead the conversation in the direction of THE TOPIC. His place was very near to the seat occupied by my original patron, Mr. Price Scrooper. What was Mr. Postlethwaite's astonishment to hear that gentleman leading such conversation, as was within his jurisdiction, also in the direction of THE TOPIC! "Does he see that I want a lead, and is he playing into my hands?" thought my newest client. "Perhaps he's not such a bad fellow, after all. I'll do as much for him another time." This amicable view of the matter was but of brief duration. Madness was at hand! Two voices were presently heard speaking simultaneously:

MR. PRICE SCROOPER.—The subject suggested a riddle to me this morning, as I was thinking it over.
MR. KERBY POSTLETHWAITE.—A view of the thing struck me in the light of a riddle, this morning, quite suddenly.
Both at once.

The two were silent, each having stopped the other.

I beg your pardon," said my first patron, with ferocious politeness, "you were saying that you—"

"Had made a riddle," replied my second patron. "Yes. I think that you also alluded to your having done something of the sort?"

"I did."

There was silence all round the table. Some illustrious person broke it at last by saying, "What a strange coincidence!"

"At all events," cried the master of the house, "let us hear one of them. Come, Scrooper, you spoke first."

"Mr. Postlethwaite, I insist upon having your riddle," said the lady of the house, with whom Mr. P. was the favorite.

Under these circumstances both gentlemen paused, and then, each bursting forth suddenly, there was a renewal of duet.

MR. PRICE SCROOPER.—Why does the Atlantic cable, in its present condition—
MR. KERBY POSTLETHWAITE.—Why does the Atlantic cable, in its present condition—
Both at once.

At this there was a general roar and commotion among those present. "Our riddles appear to be somewhat alike!" remarked Mr. Postlethwaite, in a bitter tone, and looking darkly at my first patron.

"It is the most extraordinary thing," replied that gentleman, "that I ever heard of!"

"Great wits jump," said the illustrious person who had previously spoken of an "extraordinary coincidence."

"At any rate, let us hear one of them," cried the host. "Perhaps they vary after the first few words. Come, Scrooper."

"Yes, let us hear one of them to the end," said the lady of the house, and she looked at Mr. Postlethwaite. This last, however, was sulky. Mr. Price Scrooper took advantage of the circumstance to come out with the conundrum in all its integrity.

"Why," asked this gentleman once more, "is the Atlantic cable, in its present condition, like a schoolmaster?"

"That is my riddle," said Mr. Postlethwaite, as soon as the other had ceased to speak. "I made it myself."

"On the contrary, it is mine, I assure you," replied Mr. Scrooper, very doggedly. "I composed it while shaving, this morning."

Here again there was a pause, broken only by interjectional expressions of astonishment on the part of those who were present—led by the illustrious man.

Again the master of the house came to the rescue. "The best way of settling it," he said, "will be to ascertain which of our two friends knows the answer. Whoever knows the answer can claim the riddle. Let each of these gentlemen write down the answer on a piece of paper, fold it up, and give it to me. If the answers are identical, the coincidence will indeed be extraordinary.

"It is impossible that any one but myself can know the answer," remarked my first patron, as he wrote on his paper and folded it.

My second patron wrote also, and folded. "The answer," he said, "can only be known to me."

The papers were unfolded by the master of the house, and read one after the other.

Answer written by Mr. Price Scrooper: "Because it's supported by buoys (boys.)"

Answer written by Mr. Kerby Postlethwaite: "Because it's supported by buoys (boys.)"

There was a scene. There were recriminations. As I have said, on the following morning both gentlemen visited me betimes. They had not much to say after all. Were they not both in my power?

The curious thing is, that from that time dates the decline of my professional eminence. Of course, both my patrons took leave of me forever. But I have also to relate that my powers of riddling took leave of me also. My mornings with the Dictionary became less and less productive of results, and, only a fortnight ago last Wednesday, I sent to a certain weekly publication a rebus presenting the following combination of objects: A giraffe, a haystack, a boy driving a hoop, the letter X, a crescent, a human mouth, the words "I wish," a dog standing on its hind legs, and a pair of scales. It appeared. It took. It puzzled the public. But for the life of me I cannot form the remotest idea of what it meant, and I am ruined.—Dickens' New Christmas Story.

FOR THE LADIES.

REPRESENTING to the editor of The Californian, in my mild but persuasive manner, that one great fault with The Californian was, that it has not now and never has had from the beginning—if we exeept the earlier numbers, when an accomplished lady, now wandering on the continent, discoursed in its columns upon dress and dresses—any distinctive feature about it to recommend it to the ladies; no column or corner where they could sit down safe from the intrusion of boots, and read about fashions, flowers, feathers, and other light, graceful topics, without stumbling over horrid murders or worse witticisms, from which a weak woman always turns with an instinctive shudder—representing this to my friend: "Suppose that you take a department in hand, and manage it in your own way for the entertainment of your own sex."

I was forcibly reminded of the suggestion of the old rat, when it was proposed to bell the cat—he proposed that the one that origiuated the idea should be appointed a committee to tie on the bell. But, aside from being amused, I was also shocked in no small degree. For I have never "written for the papers," my whole efforts at composition having hitherto been confined to little notes written with little pens upon little sheets of papers, enclosed in little envelopes, and sealed with the tiniest crest in the world, and the idea of writing on the great broad sheets of foolscap that my friend kindly placed at my disposal, and staining my fingers with ink, startled me. But when he explained to me how easy it was to "clip," and how I could be a free scissorer, as he claims to be a "free lance," my objections were overcome, and I concluded at least to try. And now for it. Out of compliment to my friend, the first selection shall be headed:

"THE REVENGE OF THE RED-HEADED."

Under the above title, M. Jules Denizet has published an article in Paris. He shows that in the time of the Cæsars, certain Roman women were compelled by the authorities to wear no hair; but all this is now changed.

"The Romans," says he, "got enormous quantities of hair from Germany. Most of it in the present day comes also from Germany, as well as Brittany and Normandy. Paris annually exports upwards of 100,000 kilogrammes (about 200,000 pounds) to England and America. A few years ago its price, from a living head, was from five to ten francs the kilogramme, according to the length and color. Red hair, which was formerly unsalable, except for dyeing, is this year at a premium; but the rage cannot last long. Hair of this color is generally coarse and harsh; and taste will, no doubt, soon return to black and blonde, which are twice as fine and three times as soft and glossy. Red hair dries, black and blonde thicken. The first preparation which hair undergoes immediately raises its price to eighty francs the kilogramme. In our time the rehabilitation of the red-haired commenced in the Juif Errant, in which Eugène Sue depicted Mlle. de Cordoville in such glowing colors that, for her charming sake, the hitherto despised shade rose a little in public opinion. How many persons have we known seeking by every means in their power to turn the hated red into brown or chestnut? Oils, pomades, brass and leaden combs, were the supposed remedies, and, these failing, dye was resorted to.

"Now, all that is changed; red hair is the mode. The young mother prays that her coming babe, if a girl, may have red locks, and if it has, its fortune is made. The red-haired beauty is taking her revenge; she carries her chignon like a flag, and gathering under it, aided by fashion, every shade of chestnut, blonde, and black, transforms them all into red. But tout passe, tout lasse; and to-morrow the mode may change. However, although the triumph of the red-haired may prove but that of a season—their glory but ephemeral—still there is no doubt that they will never descend to their former disgraceful position. The prejudice of ages having once been removed, they have been admitted to an equality with their more favored sisters. But now a word of advice and warning: let them descend a few steps from the ladder they have climbed so triumphantly, lest a speedy reaction may precipitate them therefrom."

THE SECRET OF GOLDEN HAIR.

The Nation is not a very lively journal, but I really find the following valuable information in it. Attention, raven-haired beauties who would be golden:

"The Venetian method of dyeing the hair yellow was simple enough, and has been many times described. The illustrissima of that day, when she would be blonde, dipped her hair in a certain solution, and combed it out carefully over the broad brim of a crownless straw hat, and then went to the roof of the palace at noon-day, and, removing the trap-door, sat there and broiled her delicate brain in a sun which knows how to shine with fervor. Repeating this expiation several days, her hair became of that rich ruddy yellow which we admire so much in the paintings of Titian and Paolo Veronese; no doubt the Bella of Titian herself, the fair Violante Palma, had been thus dyed and grilled before she sat to her father for Santa Barbara, and to her lover for his ideal of lovely woman. No doubt—

"But the certain solution—the certain solution! What was the solution in which the Venetians dipped their hair before broiling?" demands the multitudinous treble of the fair who hang upon these words, already resolved, if blonde hair becomes the mode, to undergo any degree of broiling to achieve it. And here, if we were cynical, we should refuse to tell; and if we were sensational, we should coolly write and leave the whole subject to another week. But we are neither cynical nor sensational, and we have happily found in a French journal the receipe of the solution in question. Beauteous beings, desirous to have the heavenly-golden hair, must stoop to facts and apothecaries, and take three drachms of rock-alum, three of sandarac, one of saffron, four of madder, and two of grape-vine ashes. Let them then pulverize the ashes and the madder together, and boil them to one-half their bulk in water, and mix the residue with the alum, the sandarac, and saffron. The precious mixture must then be applied with a sponge, and when the hair is dried (in the Venetian manner,) let it be washed with a decoction of trefoil, barley, cummin, and soap. So shall the most midnight beauty surprise the secret of the noon, and wean away the captive sunshine in her radiant locks."

"To be Continued,"

PARISIAN BONNETS.

A correspondent of that excellent ladies paper, The Boudoir, writing from Paris so late as December 10th, tells us that "Pearl-gray and Regina-blue are the favorite colors for bonnets this winter. A drawn Empire bonnet, made of pearl-gray terry velvet, trimmed with a border of pigeon's feathers, selected to match the terry, is considered in very good taste. Gray crêpe lisse is used for trimming gray velvet bonnets, and silver grecques are added around the edge of the front, as well as upon the narrow curtain and inside the cap; a small white wing is added to stand upright, at the left side of the bonnet. This style of bonnet is made for evening wear in white tulle, the three puffings which form the front being separated by a gold grecque; the curtain, the strings, and coronet inside being ponceau velvet. There appears to be no end to the new bonnet shapes this winter, for since the Pamela, the Talhan has been introduced. This latest novelty is a combination of the Marie Stuart and the Empire, the front of it being Marie Stuart and the crown à la Empire. It is something like a Swiss head dress, and is not so graceful as the Pamela. This newest of bonnets is made of velvet and is embroidered by hand. For example, a large butterfly is worked in chain-stitch, with jet, and sometimes even crystal beads upon the bonnet. Bonnets trimmed with swansdown are very popular for festive occasions, such as weddings, afternoon parties, etc. The swansdown is very light, and there is no necessity to weave borders to ribbons in imitation of it, for the strings can be trimmed with the veritable article. Very fanciful but still pretty collarets have made their appearance with the cold weather. They are called Polish collars, and are made in the form of a victorine without ends. Either curled plush or velvet is the material used for them, and they are edged with swansdown. For wearing over the shoulders, either at home or over a paletot out of doors, these Polish collarets are very comfortable.

THE COIFFURE.

There is much good sense in the following remarks about head dressing: "The coiffure is a matter which demands the greatest amount of individual taste. Every lady ought to consider what suits her own particular style. A single red or white rose is often more harmonious than a wreath, and a simple jewelled comb is perfection on a well-shaped head. We think too little of the beauty of form, and yet how much the tournure depends on it. Nothing can be more ridiculous than to see a fashion promiscuously adopted by tall and short figures, with heads of all sizes and shapes. What can be more odious than to see a piquante beauty with a nez retroussé crowned with a tiara or a severe bandeau—or a girl with a massive head, and a forest of hair, wearing a big wreath? To march with the times is necessary; still, no one's head should be a mere milliner's block, without any individuality of character."

A HIP FOR A BALL DRESS.

Ladies undergarments may seem a somewhat queer subject to discuss in public, but masculine eyes being strictly forbidden a single peep into this column, my own sex will perhaps be glad of a hint about petticoats: "White silk petticoats under white dresses, and self-colored under-skirts, are a great improvement in ball dresses. We prefer all muslin for quite young girls. When muslin petticoats are worn, there should not be less than two clear ones, and a nice worked cambric or fine long-cloth beneath. Book-muslin petticoats are made with Cluny insertion, and one finely goffred frill at the edge, or with Cluny lace edge. The skirts immmediately under the dress should be plain book or Swiss muslin, with a very deep hem."

LOADING WITH SHOT.

"Mark Twain" loaded his frog with shot, and the author of this paragraph intends to carry out the fashion with ladies. He says: "A lady's riding-habit may be kept down very well, so that it will give no inconvenience, by putting up a small quantity of shot in tiny cloth bags, and sewing them around the inside of the habit, a little distance from the side. About five or six bags will be enough, and each should be about an inch square, or even less."

AN AFFECTING FEMALE TRAIT.

Extravagant as we women are, perhaps we don't take good care of our clothes. "Oh, no; certainly not," as Luigo would say: "It is remarked (says a London reporter) by the police of the waterside, as a characteristic circumstance, that nearly every female who throws herself into the water is careful to divest herself of her bonnet and shawl, which are placed on the ground in such a manner as not to be in the least damaged."

THE COMING SPINSTERS.

A great deal having been said about the shipload of young ladies coming out here, and they already being on their perilous way—having put in at Norfolk on the 22d of December—a little description of the ship in which they are embarked ought to be interesting to our young ladies, as some of them may have to be shipped to a foreign port when the market here becomes overstocked. "The Continental," says my authority, "is a large screw-propeller of 1623 tons burden, is 244 feet long and 38 feet beam. She was built in Philadelphia, in 1862. Those competent to judge pronounce her to be one of the finest as well as fastest vessels of her class that ever sailed from this port. The alterations are of the most extensive character, the present accommodations being found entirely inadequate for the large number of passengers which she will take to the Territory. A fine hurricane deck has just been completed, covering about two-thirds of the ship. Underneath this deck is a saloon about seventy-two feet long and twelve wide. This will be used as a general sitting-room; on each side of this saloon is a fine set of state-rooms. On going below we find ourselves in a large and commodious cabin. The stairway leading to this room has been removed back twenty-four feet, making a handsome saloon of about seventy-five long and sixteen feet wide. It will be used as the dining-room. On each side are large and pleasant state-rooms, which will be used by those ladies who have families. Running back from the stair-way to the fore part of the ship is the young ladies' cabin. This is the largest cabin in the ship, being about one hundred and sixty-five feet long, and from sixteen to eighteen feet wide. On each side are state-rooms, as pleasant and cozy as the most fastidious young lady could desire. This cabin will be the exclusive sanctum of the ladies, and no gentleman will, under any circumstances, obtain admittance. A number of sewing-machines are fastened to the floor, which the ladies can use when they feel inclined to work. The sanitary arrangements are very fine. A large bathing room is attached to each cabin for the use of the passengers. An Inspecting Committee will be appointed, who will make it their business to visit all the state-rooms every morning and report their condition to the doctor. A room has been fitted up expressly for the doctor, where he can always be found by the sick, and it is expected that he will be overwhelmed with business the first few days out. One of the rooms in the upper saloon is fitted up as a library, and will be furnished with interesting and instructive reading matter. The arrangements in case of accident are complete. There are from four hundred and seventy-five to five hundred feet of hose on board, which can be rapidly carried to any part of the ship in case of fire, sixty-nine buckets, and fourteen axes. There will be ten large life-boats, most of them metallic, and a life-preserver for each passenger."

ADVICE TO A YOUNG FRIEND, ON HER MARRIAGE.

Do not think that I purpose to give advice to any young friend on the eve of her marriage, for all my counsel could be summed up in these few words: Don't marry at all. Having been twice married, I ought to know something about it. But if the precepts inculcated in the following verses were carried out, I think there would be more and happier marriages than there are. They are sent to me by a young lady, to whom they were handed on the eve of her marriage, having been written and handed to her mother on the eve of her marriage, thirty years ago. The authoress has long been dead. "I suppose," writes my young friend, "these associations, the old-fashioned handwriting, and the quaint folding in the old love-letter style, make it the treasure it is to me. I expect the aroma will all be gone when it is stripped of these—certainly, it can never have the preciousness in other eyes that it has in my mother's and mine. Their author is dead now, and this child of her heart can bring her no added joy." Was there ever a delicate sentiment more tenderly expressed? May only the brightest of roses bloom in the pathway of her who pens it!

Let not my friend, though now a wife,
Bid all her cares adieu;
Comforts there are in married life,
And there are crosses, too.

I do not wish to mar your mirth
With an ungrateful sound,
But know, that perfect bliss on earth
No mortal ever found.

Your prospects and your hopes are great,
May God those hopes fulfill!
Yet you will find, in every state,
Some difficulty still.

The rites which lately joined your hands
Cannot ensure content;
Religion forms the strongest bands,
And love the best cement.

But yet, God's daily blessings crave,
Nor trust your youthful heart;
You must divine assistance have
To act a prudent part.

Though you have left a parent's wing,
Still longer ask its care;
It is not often husbands bring
A lighter yoke to bear.

They have their humors and their faults—
So mutable is man:
Excuse his foibles in your thoughts,
And hide them if you can.

No anger nor resentment keep,
Whatever is amiss,
Be reconciled before you sleep,
And seal it with a kiss.

AN UNFORGIVING HUSBAND.

I cannot give this anecdote without commenting on the folly of the woman in asking permission of her dead husband to do what she had a perfect right to do. Does any one suppose that a man ever went to his wife's grave and asked her to forgive him for filling her vacant chair at the head of his table with another woman? Why, some of them would have to make almost as many calls as they do on New Year's Days among their buried ribs: "Four years ago a needlewoman of Paris lost her husband, and, in the violence of her grief, made a vow she would never marry again. Last October she was re-married. She went, on the Feast of the Dead, to pray on her first husband's grave; she begged him to pardon her violation of the vow; her excited imagination seemed to hear a voice from the grave exclaim, 'Never!' She fainted away, and remained in a swoon for six hours, and died next day."

ARAB LOGIC.

Before closing, let me ask why have we no lovers in this land as ready-witted as this one: "An Arabian having brought a blush to a maiden's cheek by the earnestness of his gaze, said to her: 'My looks have planted roses on your cheeks; why forbid me to gather? The law permits him who sows to reap the harvest.'" I have no doubt that the maiden told him to "gather"—and perhaps "put a pucker" in her lips, as she made the "biassed" remark. There—that's a technical joke for you. Now, in conclusion, if a line is crowded out of my selections, or if I hear a word of unfavorable criticism on any side, this first attempt may be taken as the P. P. C. of

CLARA MORTON.

[For the Californian.]

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

WINDOW-BOXES.

HOW is it that we see so few windows decorated with plants, when it can be so easily accomplished, and is sure to afford so much pleasure both to the occupants and the passer-by? How forcibly the contrast strikes the foreigner, after having for years seen every window and porch of the humblest cottage in his native country filled with choice plants and flowers, and often under great disadvantages, to see the windows of American cottages so generally destitute of floral decoration. It is true in some portions of our city there are to be seen a few straggling pots setting on the edge of a window-sill, ready to be knocked down upon the head of the passer-by, by some stray gust of wind. Many persons think it is too much trouble to have plants inside of their rooms, and are afraid the sun will fade their carpets and the dirt and dust will soil their rooms. To these we say, have a window-box made to fit on the outside of your window, resting on the sill for support, and fastened at the sides for security. Get some carpenter to make you a box of good stout boards strongly nailed together, from eight to twelve inches wide, and about six inches deep, extending the whole width of the window; the front can be ornamented by mouldings in keeping with the style of the windows, and be painted and sanded to match; there should be a few holes bored in the bottom for draining. These boxes can be used as receptacles for the pots of plants, or the plants themselves may be planted in the box. If there is a large supply of plants about the house and gardens, this will be an excellent place to display them to the best advantage, as they can be changed and replaced by others as soon as out of bloom, so keeping up a regular display. Where such is not the case, it is better to plant the various plants directly in the box; besides, the care and attention to watering is much less than when in pots. In planting such a box, put a good layer of charcoal in the bottom for drainage; it also prevents the soil from becoming sour by continued waterings, and is an excellent fertilizer for all kinds of plants. Over this put your soil; the best is good leaf-mold, such as can be obtained from any of the gardeners, or in the suburbs of the city, composed of black sand, decomposed leaves, etc.

The variety of plants which may be grown in such a box, is only limited by the taste and resources of the owner. There are none too poor to extemporize a box and fill it with slips, cuttings, and seeds from some of their more fortunate neighbors, who will esteem it a privilege to contribute to such a display. By those whose means enable them them to gratify their taste, a great variety of rare and beautiful plants may be grown in the greatest perfection. In planting a window-box, the aspect must be taken into consideration, and suitable plants must be chosen for it. Where the window is sheltered from our summer winds and dust, an endless variety of even the tender and delicate plants usually kept in the greenhouse may be cultivated.

The daphne odora, the orange, and the jasmine with their sweet odorous flowers, fill the room with exquisite perfume; to these may be added the violet, the pansy, the mignonette, the lily of the valley, the hyacinth, interspersing among them some of the ferns; over the surface of the ground may be grown the stone-crop and lycopodium; along the front edge may bloom some of the variegated vinca, and the charming little blue lobelia, with its bird-like flowers. At the sides of the window, attached to the ends of the box, may be a trellis of wire for climbing plants, such as the jasmine, honeysuckle, or ivy, the blue maurandia, or even a sweet pea, running up the sides and meeting at the upper centre of the window. From this point, suspend a hanging basket filled with some drooping plants, or a birdcage with your pet bird for a change. In early spring what more delightful than in the morning to open your window and be greeted by the cheerful looks and sweet odors of opening flowers? Plants seen thus against the light, have the most charming appearance possible; every vein and pore is visible as the light streams through them, and in the room the light falls beautifully tinted with a soft green, and chequered with a thousand interlacing shadows. With the bright glare of our long summers what can be more grateful to the weary eyes than the cheerfulness of such a window? To the invalid who is confined to a room, what a source of pleasure such a collection of plants would afford; the facility with which they can be attended to is one of the greatest recommendations.

In this way how many unpleasant views may be shut out, and how much beauty added to the immediate neighborhood. Of all kinds of gardening this is the easiest. Many a person is deterred from growing plants, by the difficulty of getting to the garden or the inclemency of the weather, but by this plan it is at one's hand, and, whenever in the mood, our pets are ready for our care and attention.

"No works indeed,
That ask robust, tough sinews, bred to toil,
Servile employ; but such as may amuse,
Not tire, demanding rather skill than force.'

Nothing would tempt those who have once possessed such a treasure to be without it. Each leaf and bud has a history, and becomes a part of our life.

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

Feb. 4th. St. Margaret of England, Indian Bay, (Laurus Indica.)
Feb. 5th. St. Adelaide, Red Primrose, (Primula Aculis.)
Feb. 6th. St. Barranuphius, Blue Hyacinth (Hyacinthus Orientalis coeraleus.)
Feb. 7th. St. Romula, Cyclamen, (Cyclamen coum.)
Feb. 8th. St. John of Matha, Spring Moss, (Maium Androgynum.)
Feb. 9th. St. Apollonia, Roman Narcissus, (Narcissus Romanus.)
Feb. 10th. St. Coteris, Mezereon, (Daphne Mezereon.)

IRIS.

A FEW WORDS CONCERNING BANTINGISM.

AS every one knows, Mr. Banting was a stout man who became reduced to more seemly dimensions by the adoption of a particular code of diet. As every one also knows, "Bantiugism," or the struggle to become thin by following Mr. Banting's example, is at present the fashion in many quarters. Is, then, this fashion to be encouraged, or is it to be discouraged? Dr. Radcliffe is of opinion that it ought to be discouraged, and the present "few words" are intended to show in brief why it ought to be.

Mr. Banting's rule is to take abundance of lean meat, claret, sherry, Madeira, and tea, and to abstain as much as possible from bread, butter, milk, sugar, beer, and potatoes—articles containing starch and saccharine matter—to abstain as much as possible from the articles upon which Mr. Banting had lived almost exclusively in the days when he was a victim to obesity. The diet in Bantingism, indeed, is essentially the same as that prescribed in training for the ring or for the boat race. The chief peculiarity in each case is to allow a large amount of lean meat, and if there be any difference, it is that the Bantingist deals more liberally with himself in this respect than the athlete. What Mr. Banting allows himself is rather more than is eaten by the average-size man in training. It may be expected, therefore, that the known results of the process of training may throw some light upon some of the consequences of Bantingism. It may be expected that Bantingism cannot be carried beyond a certain point with advantage. In training, this is certainly the case, for after a certain time, longer or shorter, as the case may be, within four months at the longest, the person in training rapidly gets "out of condition." Nor is it otherwise with Bantingism; at any rate Dr. Radcliffe says that he met with several persons who, after trying Bantingism for a while with no disadvantage, have thus got "out of condition" in an unmistakable manner, some of them becoming very gouty, and all of them experiencing a decided failure in strength and spirits.

Dr. Radcliffe is disposed to look upon this loss of "condition" in these two cases of training and Bantingism as depending partly upon excess of nitrogenized food, and partly upon deficiency of fatty matter. The nitrogen of the food escapes in the main by the kidney, as urea or uric acid, and if the kidney be not up to its work, the system is apt to become gouty from the accumulation of these products in the blood. Hence it is not difficult to see how excess of nitrogenized food may, sooner or later, lead to ill-health, and that, especially, in the case in which a proper amount of exercise is neglected. Nor is it difficult to see how deficency of fatty matter may tend to bring about the same result, if, as Dr. Radcliffe supposes, a certain quantity of fatty matter be necessary to the proper nourishment of nerve-tissue. It is not difficult to see that nerve-tissue, which contains a large quantity of fat, may be starved if the food do not contain a sufficient quantity of fat, and that this starving of the tissue may involve a corresponding want of nervous energy. At any rate, Dr. Radcliffe is disposed to look upon the diet in training and in Bantingism as calculated to nourish the muscles rather than the nerves, and he believes that this may be one reason why prize-fighters, like Heenan, have often been so seriously wanting in the power of sustained action, and why the followers of Mr. Banting have after a while begun to flag in the spirit which animated them at first.

In a word, Dr. Radcliffe considers that it is not safe to ignore the old standards of food so completely as is done in Bantingism. He thinks that milk and bread are still typical articles of food. He gives reasons for believing that the farinaceous, and saccharine, and oily articles of food are, in proper proportion, not to be dispensed with without risk, inasmuch as they are the most suitable fuel for keeping up the heat of the human body at the proper point; and he gives reasons also for doubting whether farinaceous matters in excess have the same tendency to favor the formation of fat as oily matters in excess. He is of opinion that certain persons may incline to the type of vegetable feeders rather than to the type of animal feeders, and that these persons may find the nitrogenized part of their food better in the albumen, fibrine, and caseine of vegetables than in the albumen, fibrine, and caseine of animals.—Dublin Medical Press.

THE New York Times has been enlarged to the size of the London Times, and is now the largest paper in the United States.

THE CHEST WITH THE SILVER MOUNTINGS.

BY MRS. WOOD, AUTHOR OF "EAST LYNNE."

SHE was sailing out of Madeira, the good ship South Star, a fine trim British vessel. built more for cargo than for passengers, but carrying the latter when she could get them. On her way home from Brazil she had encountered a succession of bad weather, and had to put into Madeira for repairs and provisions. Some of the crew quitted her there, and whispers went about that they were afraid of her, or something in her. Two passengers only had come in her from Rio de Janeiro, a gentleman and his servant. At Madeira she took on board a Major Gore, his wife, two elegant young ladies, and their maid servant, all in mourning. The major's means were straitened, and the moderate charges of the sailing vessel as compared with the passage-money of the regular packets, had been the inducement to choose the South Star. They had come on board at the last moment, and the usual confusion prevailed.

"Not down there, please; that's the state cabin, and it belongs to the Don," cried a young boy, in a sort of uniform, whose duty seemed to be to show himself in all parts of the ship at once. "The Don doesn't choose for anybody to go into it."

It was the elder-looking of the two young ladies whose descent he thus interrupted. She turned her imperiously handsome face upon the boy, and her fine dark eyes flashed forth the haughty questions, just as plainly as her tongue:

"The Don! Who is the Don? What do you mean, boy?"

"That's him," said the boy, pointing to a distant part of the deck. "He is as rich as all the mines in Brazil knocked into one, and he's as good as master of the ship, for his will's law. If he had nothing else but the chest in his cabin, he'd be richer than he could count, for it's full of gold and diamonds."

In spite of her hauteur, which was natural to her, she gazed in curiosity. Leaning inertly over the side of the ship was a tall, slender man, with a pale fine face, and sleepy dark eyes. She remembered to have seen him there when they came on board, and she had noticed that he never once turned his eyes towards them, but remained utterly indifferent to the new comers and the commotion they were causing.

"He was our only cabin passenger," continued the speaker, "until you came on board. We brought him from Rio. He's English born. So's his servant, Vincent; a fellow that's always larking. The Don can check him, though, with half a turn of his sleepy eyelids. You must get a sight of the chest—such a big one! It is of carved ebony, with silver mountings."

"Why is he called the Don?"

"Because he's so rich, I suppose. He lost his wife and child out there, they say, and he's coming home for good. She was Spanish or Portuguese, and there was something odd about her, I fancy. The sailors, I know, whisper about it, but they won't tell me."

"And pray who are you?" demanded the young lady, resenting the familiar manner.

"Oh, I'm a middy. That's what they call us, at least; and a precious sham it is, only we don't know it before we sail. The skipper——"

To the temporary surprise of his listener, the young gentleman suddenly vanished. Looking round, she saw the "skipper" advancing, along with the gentleman passenger. The captain stopped as he came up, probably thinking it his duty to introduce them to each other.

"Mr. Valencia; Miss Gore."

Mr. Valencia raised his straw hat and bowed. She bent also, but haughtily, as if in resentment of what the captain had done, and her voice carried a sound of scorn to that functionary's ear, as she corrected his mistake.

"I beg your pardon, sir; it is as well to be correct. Mrs. Clytton, not Miss Gore."

"I beg yours, ma'am," replied the captain. "I had understood you were the Major's daughter."

Vouchsafing no explanation, Mrs. Clytton turned away, drawing her flowing black-and-white muslin gown around her slight and stately form, and carrying with her the remembrance of a stern face when in repose, but of a wonderfully attractive one when a smile illumined it—the face of Mr. Valencia. She was accosted by the maid.

"What do you want, Simms?"

"If you please, ma'am, Miss Auta is waiting to know which of the two berths you would be pleased to choose?"

Mrs. Clytton descended to the cabin, one with two berths in it. A young lady, quite as elegant in form as herself, but with a face of little beauty, save what lay in its fair blue eyes and its sweet expression, stood there, patiently waiting.

"Geraldine, will you be so kind as choose your berth?"

"Which is the most comfortable?"

"I think that one; it seems more airy than this."

"I'll take it, then," said Mrs. Clytton. And the younger lady meekly began to put her own things upon the other.

For a few days there was no great approach to intimacy, Mr. Valencia holding himself aloof. He was deferred to in every way, the new passengers found: and perhaps if there was one thing held in more reverence on board than Mr. Valencia himself, it was Mr. Valencia's ebony chest that he kept secluded in his cabin, and before which a handsome curtain was generally drawn. It was of curious value in itself, that chest, with its elaborate carvings and their adjuncts of silver.

The Gores had left their only son in a grave in Madeira, whither they had gone a year before, hoping to prolong his life. So much depended on it. Had he lived but two months longer, he would have come into a large fortune, and could have willed it to his family. He died, and it went from them; and the major was returning to England a bitterly disappointed man; returning to poverty and debt, and all sorts of humiliations, for he had fully counted on this coming money for years, and had lived accordingly. Mrs. Clytton, his only daughter, had been a wife for six months only, and had been back under her father's roof, a widow, these three years. She was five-and-twenty now, and had no fortune whatever, but plenty of pride. Auta Gore, an orphan and the major's niece, lived with them: she possessed about a hundred a year, ninety of which the major and Mrs. Gore took, leaving her the rest for clothes and pocket-money. Tolerated as a dependent more than a relative, poor Auta had been taught the lesson of humility, and had learnt it effectively.

Certainly the ship did not appear to be a lucky one. Contrary weather pursued it after quitting Madeira, just as it had previously; violent head-winds one day, utter calm the next; and the voyage promised to be unusually prolonged. It seemed to Mrs. Clytton, who was a remarkably shrewd observer, that some sort of dissatisfaction reigned amidst the sailors, which was not allowed to transpire beyond themselves. Meanwhile an intimacy sprang up between the Gores and the Anglo-Spaniard, rather remarkable from his previous coldness. They were together always; he pacing the deck with one or other of the young ladies—generally Mrs. Clytton—at his side, or sitting under the awning in the autumn sun, while he told them tales of Brazilian life. And Geraldine Clytton had begun to think the wealthy Don worth her notice. The hidden treasures of that chest, filled to its very lid with diamonds and jewels, floated before her in a dazzling vision by night and by day. Simms had craftily thrown out delicate questions on the subject to the servant, Vincent, and he responded without reserve. They were almost priceless jewels, he affirmed; necklaces, rings, armlets, all fit for a queen; one tiara of diamonds was said to be worth eight thousand pounds. Geraldine Clytton turned half faint with delirious hope as she gathered this: and made up her mind, in the consciousness of her irresistible charms, to be George Valencia's second wife. Not for himself did she care; but to be the mistress of such gems, she would have well nigh bartered her soul. The chest was of curious shape, beautiful as it was, very long and narrow; and Mrs. Clytton sometimes saw the sailors look askance at it, more in dread than in admiration. That some mystery, and not a pleasant one, was connected with it in their minds was evident, and she wondered greatly. Did they fear temptation? Not so, she. "I would give all I am worth to lift the lid!" she passionately murmured, gazing in at it one day from the cabin door, as it stood revealed behind the undrawn curtain. "And I'd not go anigh it to be made skipper tomorrow," shuddered a passing sailor, in whose hearing she had unwittingly spoken.

"Have you been long in the Brazils?" asked Major Gore one day, as they were all, except Mrs. Gore, who suffered from sea sickness, sitting on deck, Mr. Valencia leaning over the side in his customary listless manner, while he watched the waves.

"Ten years."

"Ten years of exile! A short while, though, to make a fortune in: which you have done, I believe?"

"A larger fortune than I shall know how to spend," said Mr. Valencia. "We were originally Spaniards ourselves, and have connections still in Brazil, so that I went out under good auspices. The lady I married was also very rich."

"She must have died young. You cannot be more than forty."

"I am thirty six. I dare say I look forty."

Geraldine Clytton's lips parted as she waited for more. She had become anxious to know somewhat of his first wife. Major Gore continued.

"What did your wife die of, Mr. Valencia?"

Mr. Valencia extended his arm. "See! Is that a petrel? We shall have bad weather again."

Major Gore took his glass. "I think it's only a sea-gull. Your wife, Mr. Valencia—has she been dead long?"

Mr. Valencia turned round and faced the major; his countenance stern, his lips drawn in. "Pardon me, Major Gore, but I would prefer to speak on some other subject. That is a petrel."

Major Gore stared and bowed. He was not gifted with superfluous delicacy, and he presently entered on his questions again.

"Why do the sailors call you the Don?"

Mr. Valencia burst into a laugh. "They know, I suppose; I don't. Perhaps they take me for a Spaniard."

"Nothing less than a Don—whatever that important title may imply—would travel with a chest of jewels such as yours," interposed Geraldine Clytton in a tone between jest and earnest; as she moved to his place at the ship's side, and looked after the bird, the harbinger of storm.

The words seemed to surprise Mr. Valencia. "Who told you I travelled with a chest of jewels, Mrs. Clytton?"

"Who told me? Oh, it's the talk of the ship. That large, beautiful ebony chest, you know, in your cabin."

Had his face turned pale? or was it only Mrs. Clytton's fancy, as she closely watched him? It changed; and the next moment sarcasm was pervading its every line.

"Joking apart, though, Mr. Valencia," she persisted, "does the chest contain jewels?"

"It does. Valuable jewels."

"And what shall you do with so many?"

"Bestow them on my wife, when I marry again," he replied, looking full into her handsome face.

Had he divined her secret thoughts? For once Mrs. Clytton showed that she was annoyed: she turned to her cousin, speaking tartly. "Auta, how neglectful you are! Poor mamma keeps her cabin, and you sit here, never looking after her!"

Auta Gore, meek as ever, and lovely in her meekness, was hastening away, when Mr. Valencia offered his arm. She blushed as she took it.

"Your cousin is curious as to my jewels, Miss Gore. It does seem strange, I suppose, for a single man to possess so many. They were my wife's. Had my child lived, they would have been hers: but she likewise died. My wife had a passion for costly gems. Many of them were heirlooms."

"But do not talk of your wife if it pains you to do so," said Auta, simply, remembering the recently passed scene. "We cannot always bear to speak of the lost when they have been very dear to us."

"True. But my case is the opposite one. I did not love my wife, Miss Gore. Her memory is painful to me: I had almost said hateful."

"Oh!" exclaimed Auta.

"She gave me cause to hate her," he continued, in a low tone. "It was not a happy marriage from the first: "she was older than I by some years, and we did not assimilate. I married her for money, not for love, more shame to me; still I—I—tried to do my duty by her. There's a confidence for you, Miss Gore. But I'm sure I don't know why I've told you: unless it is that you have seemed to belong to me since I knew your name was Auta—it was my child's. Let the confidence rest between us."

She blushed again in the prettiest manner possible, by way of answer, and glanced up an assent from her blue eyes, as Mr. Valencia resigned her at the stairs leading to Mrs. Gore's cabin.

And the contrary winds continued, interspersed with dead calms; and the sailors looked gloomy as death. How long was the voyage to last? One thing it favored—and that was the close and ripening intimacy between the passengers; and Mrs. Clytton might always be seen by the side of Mr. Valencia. For hours together they would pace the deck, her arm in his. Whispers went abroad in the ship that he surely meant to make her his second wife. It might be so: Mr. Valencia was not the first man who has succumbed, spite of will, to the charms of an attractive woman.

Was it a dream? Mrs. Clytton sat up in her berth, the drops of horror gathered on her brow. The ship was tossing about in a fearful storm, and she suspected they were in danger. Not at that was her terror awakened, for she was constitutionally brave; but at the whispered words of two of the crew who had come down to secure something or other that had broken from its fastenings close by her head. Snatches of words, at the best, but their import all distinct and terrible. The ebony chest, which had been the subject of so much comment on board, so much covetousness to her. did not contain jewels, but the wife of Mr. Valencia; the wife whom he was strongly suspected of having murdered. The remains had been smuggled on board in that chest, out of the way of the South American authorities, and he himself set afloat the false report that it held jewels. There had lain the cause of all the ill the ship had encountered; it had led to the desertion of most of the crew at Madeira; and these two sailors lamented in rather strong language that they had not deserted too; and they spoke mutinously of the captain for not hurling the chest overboard, instead of keeping it there to curse the ship and put their lives in danger. Geraldine Clytton's hair stood on end as she listened, and her face turned cold and damp with faintness.

The storm subsided. Not so the tumult in the brain of Mrs. Clytton. Over and over again she asked herself, and did she really hear such words, or were they but the fancies of a troubled dream? In the broad light of day, in the reassuring bustle of social life, she laughed at the utter absurdity of the strange tale; nevertheless, down deep in her heart lay a doubt—true, or untrue? And she saw the sailors exchange discontented whispers one with the other, and heard them say, as they glanced around with ominous faces, that they should never see land again.

"I cannot stand this suspense," she murmured on the evening of the second day. "Yet how end it? It is not a thing I can speak about. The ship would conclude that the fright of the storm had turned me mad—"

"A regular gale, ma'am, that last, wasn't it? But we shall go along well, I hope, now. The weather seems to have cleared."

"Vincent, tell me!" she cried out, laying her hand upon the man's arm in her feverish impulse—for the interruption had come from him, as he was passing her. "Tell me truly, as though you were speaking for your life, what is it that your master really has in that ebony chest?"

"My master has jewels in it, ma'am," was the ready and evidently truthful answer. "Beautiful gems that belonged to his wife. They were to have been her child's, but the little lady died too. When Mr. Valencia was packing them in the chest he said he had half a mind to leave them behind, so little does he care for them. Only there were no relatives to leave them to."

She heaved a sigh of intense relief. "I heard the sailors whispering the night of the storm, Vincent. They said the ship could not get along for what was in the chest; they spoke of a dead body. Of course I knew it was nonsense."

Mr. Vincent swayed himself to and fro in a perfect delirium of laughter. It was some moments before he could beg pardon for it, or speak at all.

"That was my doing, Mrs. Clytton. When we were getting on board at Rio, it somehow came out to the sailors that the chest had jewels in it. Knowing what a light-fingered lot Jack is on occasions, I thought it well to put them on another scent, and confided to them, as a weighty secret, that the chest really contained the ashes of Mrs. Valencia, which were being brought home for interment. And they have believed it all this while! What soft fellows sailors are!"

Entirely reassured, thoroughly convinced, Mrs. Clytton forgave the man's familiarity and laughed with him, forgetting her dignity. She dismissed the subject from her mind from that moment. Vincent entered on a description of some of the treasures of the chest, and she listened till her pretty mouth watered. Two whole hours that evening was she chattering by the side of Mr. Valencia.

The ship did arrive in port, and safely, in spite of the prognostics of the sailors; and the passengers parted at Southampton, only to meet again early in December, for Mr. Valencia had given a cordial invitation to the Major and his family to meet him in his paternal home at Norfolk—his, now—and spend a long Christmas with him. And they arrived early in December, nothing loth, finding a home replete with every convenience, every luxury, and a warm welcome from Mr. Valencia, who in his turn had been warmly welcomed by old friends around. It was an old-fashioned house, full of winding passages, in which Mrs. Clytton and Auta Gore lost themselves perpetually.

"It is a perfect home!" cried the Major, in a rapture of admiration. "You have given it everything, Mr. Valencia, that can assure happiness and comfort."

"Not quite perfect yet," dissented Mr. Valencia. "It wants one thing more, Major, which I suppose I shall have to give it—a mistress."

"Shall you add that?" inquired the Major, his eye resting, perhaps unconsciously, on his daughter.

"I hope so. The happiness denied to me in my first wife may be mine in a second. What do you think, Miss Auta?"

Auta Gore colored so vividly at the unexpected question, that she was glad to escape in very self-consciousness: and Mrs. Clytton, full of contemptuous pity, said Auta was growing more absurdly shy every day.

The days went on for all parties in a sort of Elysium. Major and Mrs. Gore had never been so luxuriously off in their lives; Geraldine was indulging blissful visions, their whole basis, gold; and Auta was in the mazy depths of a first love-dream, whose idol was George Valencia. Her heart had gone out to him in those days when they were on the broad sea, when he had talked to her in low tones, unsuspected by anybody, and gazed into the depths of her blue eyes.

And the ebony chest? It was in Mr. Valencia's private rooms in the west wing of the house, its contents (as was understood) as yet undisturbed. Geraldine Clytton's desire to see those princely jewels, so shortly, as she hoped, to be hers, was growing almost irrepressible, fevering her spirit with its excitement. Why could he not show them to her? The question began to torment her more than was good for her equanimity, and it gave rise to thoughts not justifiable.

But, let us hope that accident alone led to the step she finally took. On Christmas Eve they were sitting out of doors, when Mr. Valencia, in taking something from his pocket, let fall a key, with a small silver chain attached to it. He did not perceive the loss, and Mrs. Clytton stealthily secured it. It was one of the mildest days ever know at that season, the sun shining, the air balmy as in spring, the violets and primroses raising their modest heads. Nothing of the unusual beauty saw Geraldine Clytton; that key, lying unsuspected in her hand, was obscuring her vision physically and mentally. Instinct had told her it was the key of the chest, and she had resolved to take a sly peep for herself, like Bluebeard's wife.

She had to wait for the opportunity, and some delay there must necessarily be; yet her mind was in that feverishly excited state that brooks it not. At the dinner-table that evening an excuse was made for Mrs. Clytton; she was "lying on her bed with a violent headache, and must on no account be disturbed." Half-an-hour of impatient waiting yet, that they might be fairly settled into the dinner, and then she stole away on her expedition. She hated to lose her dinner; but what was dinner, even though taken by the side of George Valencia, compared to the gratification of that irrepressible longing—the sight of those glorious gems.

The moonlight was streaming in at the corridor windows as she made her way to the opposite wing of the house, shielding with her hand the candle she had brought. Her heart was beating, her veins were throbbing; not at the dishonor of the act she was about to commit; not at the dread of detection, but with the morbid eagerness for the sight she had so long and ardently coveted. Of detection there was little fear at that hour. Mr. Valencia was heading his own table, and Vincent was safe behind his master's chair. Opening the green baize door that shut in the wing, and closing it softly after her, she turned into the second room on the left. There it was! the long, beautiful ebony chest; it stood against the wall, opposite the window, in the moonbeams, which glittered on its mountings of silver. There was no time to go to work deliberately; for interruption, involving the awful agony of detection and shame, was not impossible, though unlikely; and she hastily put the key into the lock. Even as she did so a tremor shot through her whole frame; for, in that moment, she knew not how or why, the whispers of the two sailors, that memorable, stormy night on board the South Star, flashed into her mind. What if the chest should contain, not jewels, but ——? As she turned the key, the lid shot back with a spring, startling her well nigh to death. Surely so large and long a lid had never so shot back before! But Geraldine Clytton was not one to yield needlessly to superstition, and she took a good look in at the chest. It was about three parts filled, and evidently had been unpacked, perhaps set in order, since its arrival at its present resting-place. Numbers of small parcels, covered respectively with paper, with cotton wool, with cardboard boxes, as the case might be, completely lined the chest all round, to the width of some inches; they were, no doubt, the jewels; but Mrs. Clytton's attention was caught by what was lying in their midst. Nearly all down the middle of the chest was laid a snow-white damask of cloth, lightly covering what might be underneath. Parures of diamonds, no doubt; and she picked off this cloth with so impatient a jerk that the current of air whiffled against the candle, and put it out. But not before she had caught a glimpse of what looked like a human face lying there, with wide-open flashing black eyes. At first, she could see nothing, the moonlight being so faint as contrasted with the recent light of the candle, and a superstitious terror assailed her, and turned her heart to sickness.

"What a fool I am!" she ejaculated in a few minutes, "I'm thinking of what the sailors said. Those two things that looked like eyes must be gleaming jewels. And the candle out!—and I not to have had the sense to bring matches with me!"

She put out her hand; she meant to pull them forth, those gleaming jewels, and look at them in the moonlight; but her fingers came in contact with—what? A face. A dead face, beyond a doubt, for it was cold and stiff. A cry of awful terror broke from her, echoing in the silence of the dread room; and Geraldine Clytton flew away, she knew not how or where. Instinct took her towards her own chamber, and near it she ran against Simms, the maid.

"Ma'am! whatever is the matter?"

Seizing the astonished servant by the arm, she pulled her into the chamber, and closed the door. She clung to her as as though she would never let her go again. She crouched down in the warmth and light of the fire, her teeth chattering, her breath coming in gasps.

"But what is it?" reiterated Simms, more and more amazed. "Has anything frightened you, ma'am?"

"I—thought—I—saw something in the corridor," came the evasive answer. "Perhaps an owl had got in, Simms."

She caused herself to be dressed: she was alive to the importance of diverting all suspicions from herself, when Mr. Valencia should come to discover the raid on the chest; and she descended to the drawing-room. Mrs. Gore, its only inmate, was asleep by the fire; the Major was sure to be in the dining-room, for he liked to sit long and enjoy a private cigar: but where were Auta and Mr. Valencia? A soft silvery, happy laugh seemed to answer from the conservatory, and Geraldine Clytton turned to it; the mirrors, as she passed them, reflected her own scared face, into which the warm blood would not come.

Auta was indeed there, with Mr. Valencia. But how? Her hands were clasped in his; his face was all close to her bent and blushing one. For one blissful moment Geraldine Clytton truly thought she saw some deceptive vision that had no place in reality—that could have none. The next, she had awakened to the truth, and stood there spell-bound. She had never dreamt of this. Auta his love! when she had surely thought——But whispered words were stealing distinctly on her ear; words that well nigh drove her mad, and turned the current of every pulse she possessed into one living anger.

"My heart went out to you from the first, Auta; and I think you could not have misunderstood me. Geraldine? nonsense! She sought me; I did not seek her. I never had a thought of love but for you. My darling! my darling!"

Auta Gore started from his arm with a cry. That angry woman, with inflamed face and haughty mien, was bearing down upon them like one possessed of an evil spirit. Auta never distinctly remembered what followed. There were raised voices, recriminating words, and some strange charge that lifted her very hair from her head. Major Gore stood holding his daughter back; and Mrs. Gore, only half awake, was staring with her cap hanging to one ear by a single string. Mr. Valencia alone remained calm and cool. The first consecutive words came from him.

"I do not understand it any more than you do, Major. I do know that this is the happiest hour of my life, for your niece has promised to be my wife; but what it is Mrs. Clytton would accuse me of, I really don't know."

"She can never be your wife," retorted Mrs. Clytton. "You marry again! Would you take a second wife, to murder her as you did your first?"

Mr. Valencia's sleepy eyes for once were opened as wide as his antagonist's.

"Murdered my first wife!" he quietly rejoined. "Thank you. I was not aware I had done anything of the sort."

"You know you did," came the panting answer. "You know that you have got her concealed in that ebony chest; that you had her in it on board, while falsely pretending it was filled with jewels. The sailors knew what was in the chest, and nearly broke out in a mutiny; they said it brought a curse on the ship. I accuse you, George Valencia, though you have escaped accusation from others. I have seen the chest and its horrible burthen; I have touched it—the cold dead face of her you keep concealed there."

The bewilderment in Mr. Valencia's countenance gave place to a sudden smile of light, as if the puzzle had cleared itself. "We will go and see this dead face, if you please, Major, all of us. Mrs. Clytton, I must particularly request your company. It will not alarm you, believe me, Mrs. Gore. Auta, my dearest, do not tremble so; I will take care of you."

It lay in the ebony chest, exposed at once to their view—calm, peaceful, infinitely pretty. Not the dead face of a once-living woman, but the wax-work model of a lovely child, its dark eyes wide open, and a rose-leaf color on its smooth cheeks.

"When my child died—my little Auta, who was more precious to me than anything I have yet possessed on earth—I was fond and foolish enough to have a wax model taken of her," said Mr. Valencia in a low tone. "I brought it home in my treasure chest. As you may perceive, I have not yet disturbed it. Mrs. Clytton, it seems, thought she would do so for me. My wife was not murdered, I beg leave to state, Mrs. Clytton; she died peacefully in her bed, surrounded by servants and friends, and she lies buried in Brazil. May I be allowed to inquire, madam, what can have given rise in your mind to so extraordinary a delusion?"

They were soon to know. The culprit was Vincent. The explanation he had given to Mrs. Clytton, on board the South Star, was the simple truth, though not quite all the truth. In his propensity for joking—and perhaps really wishing to guard the chest from sacrilege—he had whispered the foolish invention (of the body, not the ashes, and hinting at foul play) to the sailors, as the ship sailed out of port at Rio de Janeiro; hence the disaffection and fear that arose among them—Mr. Vincent himself being perfectly aware of the state of things, but enjoying the joke too greatly to contradict it. Geraldine Clytton listened to the man's shamefaced explanation to his master, and rather wished the boarded floor would give way and let her in.

And those were jewels, the parcels lining the chest! And as Mr. Valencia took them out, parure after parure, and tried their glittering beauty upon the shrinking, timid, happy girl, so soon to be his wife, she—that other one—had to stand and bear it.

"But what shall you do with them all, Mr. Valencia?" asked Mrs. Gore. "I never saw so many precious stones in my life!"

"They are Auta's from this hour," he replied. "I did not intend to give them to her until our wedding day. Mrs. Clytton has obligingly caused me to forestall the gift. Some of them must be reset."

"I don't believe they are so very valuable, after all," burst forth Mrs. Clytton, her agitated voice vacillating between a sneer and a sob; "and—no, mamma, there's no necessity for you to say it! it's not a case of sour grapes."

"Of course not," said Mr. Valencia, the faintest shade of a smile at the corners of his sleepy eyelids. "But the next time you accuse a man of murder, Mrs. Clytton, I'd make sure beforehand, if I were you, that it did not end in wax-work."—Once a Week.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State; also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1866.

THE "WHITE SWALLOW" FLIGHT.

DIBDIN has sung the charms of the sea and the delights of a sailor's life; other poets have chanted the attractions of salt water until very many men have come to think that it must be pleasant to be pickled. The traditional tar of the stage is a jolly fellow, wearing white duck trousers, a shirt with small anchors embroidered in the collar, a jaunty hat, shining pumps, and if the wardrobe of the theatre will allow it, silk stockings. He is forever hitching up his trousers, rolling his quid of tobacco like a sweet morsel in his larboard or starboard cheek, and swearing oaths that have a nautical flavor. In our visions we have always seen him swaying on halyards, rounding in braces with a cheery yo, ho! sheeting home the courses, clewing up topsails, furling top gallant sails, or doing something else nice, clean, and pleasant.

But gone is the forecastle Jack of our imagination from the fond fancy forever. The arrival of the White Swallow and the trial now progressing before Judge Hoffman of the sailors for mutiny, have let in a different light upon the nautical picture. It is less pretty, but we recognize the sober lines of truth. Sailors, clad in patched breeches and smelling loudly of tar, are suspended over the sides of a swift-sailing ship while their legs dip in the water with every lurch of the vessel. They are not catching skipjacks for dinner; the vessel is just out of harbor and they are scraping her sides. When they come in on deck they are knocked down by way of shaking them up after their cramped positions, and captain and mate have little matches in swearing and obscenity, making the sailors their targets, and generally ringing the bell every time. Wormy biscuit, measley pork and very little of it, bad duff and less of it, with a fluid mixture which resembles water bewitched rather than coffee, constitute the regular food of these jolly sons of Neptune. If indeed they are, as captain and mate so often assure them, the unworthy sons of female dogs, the reflection must often come across them that their mothers in comfortable kennels would turn up their noses at pabulum which even the Gold Hill News—which is a judge of such things—could not pronounce proper "purp-stuff."

If the farmer on shore who hired men to plough and sow, to reap and to mow, slung them over the lee bulwarks of the hogpen to scrape its sides, he would probably find himself short of hands soon after. And if he indulged in the amusement of knocking them over once and a while by way of keeping his hand in for knocking down bullocks, there would perhaps be music in the farmyard. It might not be safe even to call a stout-fisted fellow a demnition bow-wow, let alone going back to a former generation and boldly stating that his mother was a bow-wow before him. If the farm hand struck back it would be justifiable self defence, or if he had the farmer haled before the courts he could procure his conviction for assault and battery, and using oaths and obscene language. But if the hand strikes back at sea it is mutiny, and oaths and obscenity seem to constitute the recognized vernacular of the quarter-deck. One reason, perhaps, why ship-captains go so little in society on shore is because they feel conscious that their language is limited to a number of adjectives, substantives, interjections, and similes not heard in parlors and seldom used in the presence of ladies.

It is time that this was changed. Men at sea have rights as well as masters. It was inhumane to do away with the regular cat-o-nine-tails at sea, if the belaying pin, marlin spike and hand spike are to be permitted to supplant it. Reading the testimony in the White Swallow case—and it bears the unmistakable impress of truth—one's wonder is not that the sailors at last rose and put the officers in irons—the only surprising thing about the transaction is that, after putting the officers securely in irons, they did not throw the irons overboard in company with the brass knuckles, slung shots, and other implements of the modern marine inquisition. Certainly, the officers have every reason to congratulate themselves on not occupying uncomfortably wet beds at the present time.

The main thing to be regretted is the bad precedent the affair furnishes to sailors. Under the circumstances, it hardly seems that they deserve punishment, and yet it will never answer to allow sailors to rise and seize a ship with impunity. An unpleasant dilemma is the result. It is proven that the life of at least one sailor was sacrificed, and that the lives of others were in jeopardy. The law cannot demand that sailors lie supinely as sheep while skippers cut their throats. Neither can it justify them in rising and taking the command of the ship out from the hands in which it is vested. Because, once establish such a precedent, and crews may avail themselves of it upon a very slight pretext. We are somewhat curious to know what judgment will be prononnced.

On the whole, we think the captain of the White Swallow has gone a little too far for the interests of his fraternity in pushing his sailors to this most mild and respectable rebellion. Sailors all the world over will see that they are not so much at the mercy of officers as they supposed, and the balance of power will stand ready to assert itself on all similar occasions. This one White Swallow seems destined to make a summer for sailors. But what will underwriters and shipowners say? If the direct result be to make them entrust their vessels only to humane officers, while the ultimate one be to sweep the sea of the quarter-deck brutes that infest it, perhaps Justice can afford to let the White Swallow men go free.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

AT the present writing it looks as though a repeal of the Specific Contract Law would be effected.

While we are not prepared to take grounds against the repeal, we must confess that we do not share in the general anticipations of the financial millennium which is expected to follow. Introduce greenbacks, cries the needy borrower, and all our troubles are at an end. Money will become plenty, rates of interest will be reduced, and on a tidal wave of paper currency we shall all float to the upper heights of prosperity!

We have grave apprehensions that the halcyon days so confidently predicted on some sides will be slow in dawning, even after an Atheling of Chase's creation is established upon a paper throne to sway the finances of this country.

Greenbacks are a representative of value, and the capitalist will part with them no sooner than he would with gold. He will require quite as good security before he unlocks his coffers and counts out legal-tender notes as he would were he shovelling out the same value in gold. There is no scarcity of money in our market. The only trouble lies in the depreciation of securities, in the general want of confidence that has been begotten in mining stocks. The man possessed of unencumbered real estate can get all the money he wants, and at a not very extravagant interest. But the man who has only certificates of stock in a mining company which has been or promises to be valuable, finds it very difficult to effect a loan. Would it be any different were greenbacks the currency of the country? We see no reason for believing that it would.

At the same time, had California adopted the national currency in the beginning, times would have been better with us, we fancy. Capital would have flowed in and immigration would have been greater. It required a deal of nerve in an Eastern man to invest in this country when the money which he sent out was sheared down sixty cents on the dollar, and the prospective emigrant to our shores very often changed his mind when he found how his little capital would dwindle down after underdoing the necessary translation into metallic currency.

Now we fear it is too late for the breaking down of the barrier to be of any practical good. Other avenues are opened to capital since the close of the war, the South in particular offering a field for its employment with which even our golden coast cannot vie. The introduction of greenbacks would have the effect of advancing the prices of labor and of all commodities, but in reality values would remain unchanged, for a gold basis would of course underlie all. If the wages of the laboring man are advanced twenty-five per cent., and he has to pay twenty-five per cent. more for the necessaries of life, he is no better off than he was before. Three years ago, when the gates of the great South were locked and barred, capital, pent within the confines of the Northern States, swelled and sought an outlet until, in all probability, it would have flowed over the mountains and found our shores, had not our old women stood in the door and swept back the panting waters with the besom of bullion. The South is now opened to trade, and capital will avail itself of contiguous borders rather than seek an isolated point like the Pacific. And with present prejudices it will be no easy matter to bring legal-tender notes into general circulation, even were the Specific Contract Law repealed. The most ready way that we can suggest for effecting the object is to declare that gold and silver is the currency of the country, but at the same time pass a specific contract law, allowing debts to be paid in greenbacks, at the debtor's option. With such a specific contract law in existence, we apprehend that payments would all be made in greenbacks, and that gold would very soon be withdrawn from circulation.

THE "EIGHT-HOUR SYSTEM."

IF the project which has lately passed the Assembly, of cutting down the hours in which we are to labor and do all our work, from ten hours to eight, has not before received that attention at our hands which the importance of the innovation demands, it is only because, amid the whirl and clang of the wheels of commerce, mechanics, and literature, we were unable to arrive at a clear understanding of the subject.

It is now clear to us—thanks to a pamphlet lately issued by J. A. Magagnos, Esq., "of the Evening Bulletin." Whether J. A. M. is leading editor, or simply one of those contributing ones whose pens at regular intervals corruscate and scintillate in the columns of that brilliant journal, we are not informed, but we infer the former, for on every page we see evidences of that profundity of research, that sweep of thought, that keen analyzation of men and principles, that fervor of diction and polish of style, which have made the Bulletin the superior of the Flag, the peer of the Call, and but a few steps below the Alta.

With the preamble with which the pamphlet favors us we have not time to deal. Lost in the mazes of its philosophy, we prefer to stand patiently one side until it emerges from the labyrinth and tosses to us one end of the silken clue. Lamenting that "laborers are deprived by the prejudices of the community from availing themselves of the only day they have for recreation," this Gamaliel of the workmen speaks in their behalf, and says, "therefore we propose to work less hours each day."

What are we to understand from this conclusion of the Bulletin's man—Mr. J. A. M.? Because the unfortunate prejudices of the community prevent him from cheating the Almighty of his Sabbath, does he cast about to see what may be done with man? Certainly, if this be the case, while we mourn that such prejudices should exist on the part of a bigoted community—weep a very river of regrets that these prejudices should cut off the "laborer" in the Bulletin's vineyard from capering nimbly in a lager beer cellar of Sunday evenings to the lascivious pleasing of the rieketty piano forte which constitutes the orchestra of those places of popular resort—debar him from going to the Willows of Sunday afternoons to see patient old bulls worried by vagabonds in red shirts, until they turn over and die in the sublime consolation that they will be totally unfit for beef—while we lament, we say, that these prejudices should subject J. A. M. or his editorial associates to any one or all of these deprivations, compelling him instead to remain at home in the bosom of his family, or offer to them that unexciting but also inexpensive amusement which church-going affords, our sympathy is materially lessened by this proposition to exact from his employer upon earth those hours which he so grudgingly gives to his Master in Heaven.

However, when J. A. M. represents to us that by the introduction of the eight-hour system, "we will get rid of the evil of early rising," he wins upon us to a degree which we are loth to confess. Fully agreeing with him that early rising is prejudicial to the working man's health—yes, going farther and asserting that even the health of the professional man is injured thereby, that whole hecatombs of human victims have been sacrificed upon the altar of the rising sun, that early rising has brought many a promising young man to a premature grave—we join hands with J. A. M. upon this issue, in all faith, and deplore the necessity of anybody's having to get up at all.

That most laborers will prefer the eight-hour system to the ten we are prepared to believe. But when it is further argued that an increase of wages will be the certain result of the movement we are at last obliged to file an exception. Manufacturers certainly cannot afford to pay their employees more for eight hours labor than they hitherto have for ten—or if they can the advance will be so small we apprehend as to be scarcely worth minding. Perhaps printers who set type by the thousand, and a few other working men who work by the piece, will continue to work just as many hours as usual. One thing is certain, the editor who gets out the newspaper which the laborer wishes to read before he goes to his work will have to work quite as long and as far into the night as usual in order to meet the expectations of his master, the public, for whom he labors. And the physician must still be called at all hours of the night, for if J. A. M. lay ill of the measles, or any important event or advent was expected in his family, he would not like to have the physician on being summoned refer him to the eight-hour statute, and plead that he had already worked ten.

Seriously, we are sorry to see a mistaken view taken of this matter by so many intelligent men—exclusive of J. A. M. Cut down the hours of labor, and a curtailment of wages is the inevitable result. No employer will pay a man as much for one hour's work as for two—for eight as for ten. As before remarked, with mechanics and artisans who work by the piece, no change in working hours seems likely to be effected, for the industrious man who has a family dependent upon him will get as much out of daylight as he can. So far as we see, the eight-hour system can only result in bringing all labor down to piece and contract work, and cutting off the present custom of day wages altogether. In this view we are not opposed to the movement, for such a system of compensation would, in our apprehension, be better for all parties. Much as we regret to be obliged to differ from the conclusions arrived at in the pamphlet of Mr. Magagnos "of the Bulletin," we are thus compelled to differ at last.

AMUSEMENTS.

MAGUIRE'S Opera House, on Monday evening, was devoted to Bandmann's complimentary benefit, the beneficiary appearing in "Richard III." He dressed the character unlike any other actor whom we remember to have seen in it, and certainly played it after a conception of his own. Without disputing that in all cases Mr. Bandmann's interpretation of the Great Master is correct, we cannot forbear expressing the opinion that had the Great Master dreamed how this Anglo-German pupil would interpret him in the present century, there would not have been such a discrepancy between Shakspeare and Bandmann. For the former would certainly have yielded and colored his chief characters according to Bandmann's taste. The house was well filled, and at the conclusion of the performance the beneficiary was called before the curtain and presented with a gold medal; he responded with a silver speech—silver, we say, for silence is said to be golden.

On Tuesday evening, The Ticket of Leave Man was produced, Chas. Thorne as "Bob Brierly." We never remember to have seen this actor so wrap himself up in a character as to lose his personal identity, but, from his noble self-sacrifice on this occasion, we confidently predict that he is destined to make a valuable leading-man. So thoroughly, apparently, was he saturated with handsome villain parts, that the odor clung to him as a grain of musk does to a wig. When he stepped out upon the veraudah in honest parts, it was still palpable. But on this occasion he buried Thorne, and at the very bottom of the grave lay "Iago," "Captain Levison," "Hawkshaw," and a whole hectacomb of ennuing rascals. The resurrection was a very good Bob Brierly. Handsome locks were hidden under yellow hair rather closely cropped, the moustache was not the one he sports on the street, nor were the clothes—figure and taste were sacrificed to costume, and he looked the ticket-of-leave-man. And for the first attempt at a dialect part, the character was well played. In the beginning he seemed rather uneasy under the novelty of the situation, but after a full comprehension dawned upon him that for once he was the injured one, the persecuted and not the persecutor, he rose to the sublimity of his new position and filled it. Mrs. Edwin, as the sweetheart and wife—the ticketess of the ticket—was correct as usual; the "Mrs. Willoughby" of Mrs. Saunders was excellent; Franks made a rather festive "Tiger;" Leman's "Hawkshaw" was very good, and Jackson's "Melter Moss" was the traditional Fagin, with a tow wig and whiskers, instead of the dark hirsuteness of the memorial Jew.

Wednesday evening, C. R. Plummer made his début as "Solon Shingle," John Owen's great role. Whether the thinness of the audience encouraged or depressed the débutant we do not know, but the attempt, if not a positive success, was certainly far from a failure. In a very few modest words Mr. Plummer announced his intention, now that he found he could face the foot-lights, of entering upon the profession, beginning at the lowest round of the ladder, and endeavoring to work up.

Miss Crampton appeared in Hamlet on Thursday evening—the occasion being her benefit. As might have been augured from the fact that no one on our stage stands more in need of a full house, she had no house at all, while Mr. Wheatleigh, at the Metropolitan—who neither needed nor deserved a benefit—had a crowded house the same evening. But as some one sententiously remarks, "sich is life." The critic of the Examiner—good authority, perhaps—announces that this lady's Hamlet "is acknowledged to be the greatest on the American stage, excepting Edwin Booth's." This is rather a peremptory way of letting out Murdoch, Barry, Sullivan, Anderson, and Dillon, to say nothing of Bandmann and Frank Lawlor. Having several other Hamlets in our mind's eye just now, we must be pardoned for saying that we do not see Miss Crampton's.

Last evening the Sears-Hayne drama of The Irish Mother, an adaptation from La voleuse d'Enfants, was announced for presentation; it will also constitute the Opera House performances this afternoon and evening.

At the Metropolitan The Elves had a successful run, benefitting Mr. Clayton on Monday evening so handsomely as to please everybody. After Elves on Tuesday, Elves Wednesday, Sam came on Thursday. It may briefly be said of Sam that a more loose-jointed comedy is seldom seen upon the stage. Long and limp, it provokes laughter by its absurd contortions and not by wit or humor, for it is equally destitute of both. And we have known audiences that would drown the double entendres which Mr. Wheatleigh brings out so offensively in their directness, under a storm of hisses. These things are like compliments, and should never be fired point-blank. As in Irish parts this gentleman carries "Danny Mann" into everything, so in English ones his horns as a Bull in a China Shop are everywhere visible. Mrs. Judah, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Thorne, and Miss Hinckley were all very good—Miss Chapman succeeding, contrary to the intention of the author, in making "Miss Euphemia Roslyn" the part of the piece. The wardrobe of Miss Hinckley revived recollections of Mrs. Jordan's dressing—fifteen different dresses she is said to have mounted—silk, satin, and lace relieving each other at regular intervals like sentinels on outposts. As "Richard Jenkins"—who plays the part of an inebriated kangaroo in a wilderness of bad dialogue and improbable situations—Mr. Percy developed an agility only to be rivalled by the grasshopper, and a litheness in which we apprehend he has no equal save the eel. On Thursday, Mr. Wheatleigh took another farewell benefit. As he has taken a benefit every five minutes since he has been in the country, we think he might have dispensed with this one. And as he retires with a nice little fortune, accumulated here, a benefit to some charitable institution would have been in better taste. We regret that he preferred to pattern after the Keans, and go away wealthy and mean. Our public may remember it against his return.

Friday, and Saturday afternoon and evening, The Elves at the Metropolitan. The hobby of the coming week will probably be The Bronze Horse.

NEW BOOKS FROM ROMAN'S.

IT is pleasant among the current novels of the day to occasionally find one like Charles Kingsley's Hereward, the Last of the English. Turning over its pages after reading through the stuff which a vitiated taste receives as fiction, is much like stepping out from a crowded room with its stifling heats and smells into the open air, where a mountain breeze is blowing. The prominent characteristic of the book—as indeed of all of Kingsley's works—is its masculiuity. The voice of Vikings and Bersarkers is heard, stirring the reader's blood like a trumpet call. We have saga and scald, knights, men-at-arms, and outlaws, until amid the clang of arms and the twang of bows the peaceful man rather rejoices that he did not live in those "true old times"

> When every morning brought a noble chance
> And every chance brought out a noble knight.

Beyond doubt it is much pleasanter to read about such things than to have one's skull split with a sword forged by dwarfs in the bowels of mountains, or find oneself of a bright morning "riding Odin's horse"—that is, suspended by the neck from the top of a white ash tree. For hanging is hanging, despite the periphrasis of the middle ages. "Hereward," the hero—son of Godiva, the lady who once rode through Coventry "clothed in naught but her own chastity"—excites the displeasure of his mother, by relieving a monk of a few silver pennies, and is outlawed therefor at the request of his own father. Leaving England, his adventures are without end. First he slays the Witch-bear; then succors the Princess of Cornwall, by which performance he wins a magic sword, called Brain-biter; fights in Flanders, and finally makes all Europe ring with his name and the fame of his doughty deeds. He falls in love with Torfrida, who gives him a suit of magic armor. But we have not space to tell the story of his courtship, nor how, as always, the course of true love did not run smooth. When William the Norman made his raid upon England, and stories came to the Continent, of the iron hand with which he ruled the rightful owners of the land, Hereward sailed away for its green shores, slew the villains who were in possession of his mother's lands, and who had sworn that she should ride through them as she erst did through Coventry; and, altogether, did such feats of arms in his long struggle against the tyrant's power as were never done before—and have not been done since. Torfrida turns out a true womanly help to him—Kingsley's women are real, and a far remove from the sickly creations of modern fiction. But, alas! he yields at last, and the sun of the Viking, Bersarker, scald, outlaw, and true knight, is dimmed in shame before it sets. He is faithless to Torfrida, and she retires to a convent. Could not Kingsley have spared the reader this? for it is unpleasant to see the hero in whose fortunes we have become so interested acting like one of the everyday school, and cruelly wronging the woman by whose aid he reached his greatness. Hereward is good to read.

—To say that H. H. Brownell is a poet who, having risen with the war, will end with the war, would perhaps be untrue. But in his War Lyrics we find very little promise that he will ever reach a permanent eminence. There is a certain vitality in his verse, but the force seems galvanic, suggesting the idea that there are copper wires, zinc plates, and all the other paraphernalia of a battery behind it. And his similes are too perfect, too minute in detail—they seem cut out by rule, and smell of the dictionary. In "Bury Them," for instance, amid all the talk of incisors, molars, and cuspids, it would be hard to persuade the reader that the author had not consulted a work on dentistry in the progress of the poem. Consequently one feels all through it that one is face to face with a false set of teeth. Nor do we like the comparison of our soldiers who fell at Wagner to the Dragon's teeth. It is rather far-fetched to style the whites "The incisors swart and stark;" the blacks "The molars heavy and dark." And it may be urged that a tooth as black as a negro would augur that the dragon didn't pick and brush his teeth with his tail so often as he ought to.

—One of the most real of the crop of poets which flourishes so luxuriantly at the present day is Robert Buchanan. A charming trait about him is that, though a Scottish poet, he does not write in the Scotch jargon. For we must confess to being so heartily tired of all that sort of stuff that we would turn to an epic in pigeon-English or Chinook with a feeling of pleasurable relief. Mr. Buchanan only uses a very few Scotch words—and for this he apologizes, besides affixing a glossary at the close of the book. A companion and friend of David Gray—the youth who came to London to look for fame, and found what so many find instead, disappointment—Mr. Buchanan opens his book with a prologue to "David in Heaven." Of this it may briefly be said that it is the worst piece in the volume. It is allowable to make such rhymes as "also" and "falls so" in burlesque verses, but not in a threnody, and this fault is repeated in the prologue several times. The first part of the volume, "Undertones"—published separately a few months since—is severely classic. Like Algernon Charles Swinburne, Mr. Buchanan has attempted to deal with Greek poetry, but we do not think with the same success which attended the former author in his Atalanta in Calydon. The poet is seen to the best advantage in "Idyls and Legends of Inverburn"—also published separately—which form the second portion of the book. Here his foot is on his native heath, and his verse has the charm of being fresh and natural. "A London Idyl" is the title of a poem which we imagine must have been appended by the American publishers, as it does not appear in the English edition. The subject is that which Hood treats so deftly in his "Bridge of Sighs," and though it may seem strong praise, Buchanan's "London Idyl" is in our thinking not one whit inferior to that remarkable poem. Mr. Buchanan has established a present, but we look to see him build up a still more glorious future.

—In the volume of selections entitled The Late English Poets, Richard Henry Stoddard has produced a work which can very successfully vie with Outcroppings. Perhaps we ought to confess at once that the book is larger and handsomer and everyway better, but as the public will probably make this discovery we will not forestall their verdict. Mr. Stoddard does not show us the paces of Tennyson, the Brownings, and some other of the greatest poets in his compilation, very sensibly concluding that he could not make our people much better acquainted with them than they already are, but he introduces to us others who are not very generally known. For instance, two brothers of the Laureate, Frederick Tennyson, and Charles Turner—the latter having changed his patronymic—find place. Very many will be surprised to find that poetry runs in the Tennyson family. Were Alfred Tennyson not so great, Frederick would be held in no mean estimation, and magazines might struggle for Charles Turner's sonnets—but alas, as it is, people speak only of Tennyson, and no confusion of the brothers' names ever arises. Mr. Stoddard has done his work well, and we are glad that in his selections from Buchanan he leads off with "A London Idyl," for, to our thinking, it shows that notable young poet at his best.

—From all this poetry to prose, the transition is but a step: The Resources of California, "comprising agriculture, mining, geography, climate, commerce, etc., and the past and future development of the State." Verily, here is a book which should not be disposed of in a paragraph! The author, John S. Hittell, is well known as the statistician of the Pacific coast. Of a peculiarly inquiring mind—which sometimes leads him to question propositions which are accepted as abstract and practical truths by other good Christians—Mr. Hittell is peculiarly well fitted for the prosecution of a work of this kind. His head is always brimming with facts and figures, the result of his indefatigable delvings in the legendary history of the country as well as that which is written. No gopher was ever more industrious. And notwithstanding his being employed upon the Alta, it is a singular circumstance that Mr. Hittell's facts and figures are generally found to be correct. Nearly three years since, when the book before us came into our hands for review, we remarked that it was pity that so many statistics conveying such valuable information were not grouped with more care—or art. But this was in ignorance of California and its peculiarities. Now we think the arrangement is in keeping with the country. The treasures lie outspread before you—pick out and assort at will. Mr. Hittell deserves the credit of preparing the first approach to a thorough compilation and estimate of the resources of California yet attempted, and that the need of such a work was felt is demonstrated in the sale the book has met with. It has done us more good at the East than many of our late representatives in Congress.

THE mechanics and other workingmen in favor of the Eight-Hour bill will hold a meeting at Union Hall, to-night.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

☞ AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect ROBUST HEALTH. The preparation is called "ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER," and is for sale at wholesale at the

UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco,
AND AT ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
ja6-1m

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1	.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!
Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH, OR LIQUID PEARL! The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
Wine of Pepsine,
OR,
RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.
For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

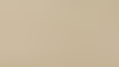
WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
GLUCOLEIN,
A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF
COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.
Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.
Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.
Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fc3

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.
THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:
1st It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.
2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.
3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.
4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.
5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.
DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.
In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.
A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.
Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.
I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,



Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms No 26 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, H. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.
All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.
IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use
For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, Corner of Pine and Sansome street

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

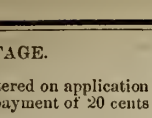
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN



Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

dc23 3m

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

NEW

PIANOS

TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

ja20-1m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;

JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;

STEAMBOAT GIN;

OLD TOM GIN;

IRISH WHISKY,

from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Leidedorff street, San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find a Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel.

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

fe6-3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State Law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m

GOOD NEWS! GOOD NEWS!

CLOSING OUT SALE

—OF—

Fine Clothing,

TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

$100,000 WORTH OF FINE CLOTHING TO BE SOLD, AT PRICES THAT WILL SUIT THE BUYER.

If you want Clothing that will prove what it is represented to be, call on

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, and Corner of Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30-3m

---

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the URETHRAL and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., dc16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior Instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

dc17-3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO

B. H. MC'DONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale

DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices. We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

San Francisco and Sacramento City.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

SACRAMENTO AND SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

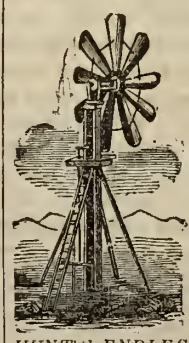
The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,

oc28 and Sacramento City.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.



THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

ja29-3m San Francisco

NEW DANCING ACADEMY,

CONGRESS HALL,

ON BUSH STREET, ADJOINING THE RUSS HOUSE.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS

Will continue teaching all the Fashionable Dances, Department, etc., at the above New, Splendid and Spacious Hall.

REGULAR CLASSES—Mondays and Wednesdays. Ladies at 2 P. M.; Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1 2 P. M.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES—Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2 P. M.

Private Lessons given separately, or to Classes, in Ball Room and Stage Dances.

SOIREES on Friday Evenings.

CONGRESS HALL TO RENT.

The elegantly furnished Hall, and other convenient rooms, for Balls, Private Parties, Weddings, etc. The Hall is 60 by 66; also, large Dining Room. For particulars, apply at the Academy. no11-3m

"MARK TWAIN" AMONG THE SPIRITS.

I ATTENDED the seance last night. After the house was crowded with ladies and gentlemen, Mrs. Foie stepped out upon the stage and said it was usual to elect a committee of two gentlemen to sit up there and see that everything was conducted with perfect honesty and fairness. She said she wished the audience to name gentlemen, whose conscientiousness—in a word, whose high moral character, in every respect, was notorious in the community. The majority arose with one impulse and called my name. This handsome compliment was as grateful as it was graceful, and I felt the tears spring to my eyes. I trust I shall never do anything to forfeit the generous confidence San Francisco has thus shown me. This touching compliment is none the less grateful to me when I reflect that it took me two days to get it up. I "put up" that hand myself. I got all my friends to promise to go there and vote for me to be on that committee—and having reported a good deal in Legislatures, I knew how to do it right. I had a two-third vote secured—I wanted enough to elect me over the medium's veto, you know. I was elected, and I was glad of it. I thought I would feel a good deal better satisfied if I could have a chance to examine into this mystery myself, without being obliged to take somebody else's word for its fairness, and I did not go on that stand to find fault or make fun of the affair—a thing which would not speak well for my modesty when I reflect that so many men so much older and wiser than I am see nothing in Spiritualism to scoff at, but firmly believe in it as a religion.

Mr. Whiting was chosen as the other committeeman, and we sat down at a little table on the stage with the medium, and proceeded to business. We wrote the names of various departed persons. Mr. W. wrote a good many, but I found that I did not know many dead people; however, I put in the names of two or three whom I had known well, and then filled out the list with names of citizens of San Francisco who had been distinguished in life, so that most persons in the audience could tell whether facts stated by such spirits concerning themselves were correct or not. I will remark here that not a solitary spirit summoned by me paid the least attention to the invitation. I never got a word out of any of them. One of Mr. Whiting's spirits came up and stated some things about itself which were correct. Then some five hundred closely folded slips of paper were dumped in a pile on the table, and the lady began to lay them aside one by one. Finally a rap was heard. I took the folded paper; the spirit, so-called, seized the lady's hand and wrote "J. M. Cooke" backwards and upside down on a sheet of paper. I opened the slip I held, and, as Captain Cuttle would say, "J. M. Cooke" was the "didentical" name in it. A gentleman in the audience said he sent up the name. He asked a question or so, and the spirit wrote "Would like to communicate with you alone." The privacy of this ghost was respected, and he was permitted to go to thunder again unmolested. [I would remark here that I cannot discover any dissimilarity in the handwriting of these spirits—there is a very powerful family likeness in it, and they have all that absurd fashion of writing backwards, upside down, and wrong end foremost. They are a rum lot, altogether.] "William Nelson" reported himself from the other world, and in answer to questions asked by a former friend of his in the audience, said he was aged twenty-four when he died; died by violence; died in battle; was a soldier; had fought both in the infantry and cavalry; fell at Chickamauga; had been a Catholic on earth—was not one now. Then, in answer to a pelting volley of questions, the shadowy warrior wrote: "I don't want to answer any more about it." Exit Nelson.

About this time it was suggested that a couple of Germans be added to the committee, and it was done. Mr. Wallenstein, an elderly man, came forward, and also Mr. Ollendorff, a spry young fellow, cocked and primed for a sensation. They wrote some names. Then young Ollendorff said something which sounded like—

"Ist ein geist hieraus?" [Bursts of laughter from the audience.]

Three raps—signifying that there was a geist hieraus.

"Vollen sie sehrichen?" [More laughter.]

Three raps.

"Finzig stollen, linsowfterowlickterhairowfterfrowleinerunhackfolderol?" [Oh, this is too rough, you know. I can't keep the run of this sort of thing.] Incredible as it may seem, the spirit cheerfully answered yes to that astonishing proposition.

The audience grew more and more boisterously mirthful with every fresh question, and they were informed that the performance could not go on in the midst of so much levity. They became quiet.

The German ghost didn't appear to know anything at all—couldn't answer the simplest questions. Young Ollendorff finally stated some numbers, and tried to get at the time of the spirit's death; it appeared to be considerably mixed as to whether it died in 1811 or 1812, which was reasonable enough, as it had been so long ago. At last it wrote "12."

Tableau! Young Ollendorff sprang to his feet in a state of consuming excitement. He exclaimed:

"Laties und shentlemen! I write de name fon a man vot lifs! Speerit-rabbing dells me he ties in yahr eighteen hoodert uud dwelf, but he yoos as live und helty as—"

The Medium—"Sit down, sir!"

Ollendorff—"But I vant to—"

Medium—"You are not here to make speeches, sir—sit down!" [Mr. O. had squared himself for an oration.]

Mr. O.—"But de speerit cheat!—dere is no such speerit—" [All this time applause and laughter by turns from the audience.]

Medium—"Take your seat, sir, and I will explain this matter."

And she explained. And in that explanation she let off a blast which was so terrific that I half expected to see young Ollendorff shot up through the roof. She said he had come up there with fraud and deceit and cheating in his heart, and a kindred spirit had come from the land of shadows to commune with him! She was terribly bitter. She said in substance, though not in words, that perdition was full of just such fellows as Ollendorff, and they were ready on the slightest pretext to rush in and assume anybody's name, and rap, and write, and lie, and swindle with a perfect looseness whenever they could rope in a living affinity like poor Ollendorff to communicate with! [Great applause and laughter.]

Ollendorff stood his ground with good pluck, and was going to open his batteries again, when a storm of cries arose all over the house, "Get down! Go on! Clear out! Speak on—we'll hear you! Climb down from that platform! Stay where you are! Vamose! Stick to your post—say your say!"

The medium rose up and said if Ollendorff remained, she would not. She recognized no one's right to come there and insult her by practicing a deception upon her and attempting to bring ridicule upon so solemn a thing as her religious belief.

The audience then became quiet, and the subjugated Ollendorff retired from the platform.

The other German raised a spirit, questioned it at some length in his own language, and said the answers were correct. The medium claims to be entirely unacquainted with the German language.

About this time a gentleman called me to the edge of the platform and asked me if I were a Spiritualist. I said I was not. He asked me if I were prejudiced. I said not more than any other unbeliever; but I could not believe in a thing which I could not understand, and I had not seen anything yet that I could by any possibility cipher out. He said, then, that he didn't think I was the cause of the diffidence shown by the spirits, but he knew there was an antagonistic influence around that table somewhere; he had noticed it from the first; there was a painful negative passing to his sensitive organization from that direction constantly. I told him I guessed it was that other fellow; and I said, Blame a man who was all the time shedding these infernal negative currents. This appeared to satisfy the mind of the inquiring fanatic, and he sat down.

The spirit of "Henry Wandell" wrote his name, but it was so long before the gentleman in the audience who called for him would acknowledge him, that Henry grew offended and meandered back to Heaven again. The medium said he was offended at any rate. And just here I want to remark that those spirits appear to be uncommon sticklers for etiquette. You call up an old dead scalliwag of a shoemaker, and he will put on more frills and require more polite attentions than a prince of the blood. You have to tackle him right off or he will get mad at the delay and go off in a huff. And yet the mediums all say that spirits have no appreciation of time whatever.

A lady in the audience (holding up a slip of paper) said: "I have got the name of a dear spirit friend here, and I would like to communicate with him. He promised to be here this evening—said he would come, and I never knew him to fail before. But I have sent his name up twice to-night and he has not manifested his presence yet. I want to send it up again."

Medium—"It will be hardly worth while. If he had been present he would have said so before this."

Anxious Friend of Progress—"But he promised to come; he promised, and I never knew him to fail before."

Medium—"Still there may be influences around us which deter him, or he may be here and still not desirous of communicating. Suppose you address him."

The anxious Friend of Progress called on her spectral friend, but he failed to qualify. Circumstances over which he had no control put it out of his power to be at Congress Hall, and so he went back on his promise. The anxious inquirer seemed very much disappointed—she really seemed distressed at this execrable conduct of her pet ghost.

A spirit seized the medium's hand and wrote "G. L. Smith" very distinctly. She hunted through the mass of papers, and finally the spirit rapped. She handed me the folded paper she had just picked up. It had "T. J. Smith" in it. [You never can depend on these Smiths; you call for one and the whole tribe will come clattering out of hell to answer you.] Upon further inquiry it was discovered that both these Smiths were present. We chose "T. J." A gentleman in the audience said that this was his Smith. So he questioned him, and Smith said he died by violence; he had been a good deal tangled in his religious belief, and was a sort of a cross between a Universalist and a Unitarian; has got straightened out and changed his opinions since he left here; said he was perfectly happy. Mr. George Purnell, having been added to the committee, proceeded, in connection with myself, Mrs. Foie and a number of persons in the audience, to question this talkative and frolicsome old parson. Among spirits I judge he is the gayest of the gay. He said he had no tangible body; a bullet could pass through him and never make a hole; rain could pass through him as through vapor and not discommode him in the least (wherefore I suppose he don't know enough to come in when it rains—or don't care enough;) says heaven and hell are simply mental conditions: spirits in the former have happy and contented minds, and those in the latter are torn by remorse of conscience; says as far as he is concerned, he is all right—he is happy; would not say whether he was a very good or a very bad man on earth (the shrewd old water-proof nonentity!—I asked the question so that I might average my own chances for his luck in the other world, but he saw my drift;) says he has an occupation there—puts in his time teaching and being taught; says there are spheres—grades of perfection—he is making very good progress—has been promoted a sphere or so since his matriculation; (I said mentally, "Go slow, old man, go slow—you have got all eternity before you"—and he replied not;) he don't know how many spheres there are (but I suppose there must be millions, because if a man goes galloping through them at the rate this old Universalist is doing, he will get through an infinitude of them by the time he has there as long as old Sesostris and those ancient mummies; and there is no estimating how high he will get in even the infancy of eternity—I am afraid the old man is scouring along rather too fast for the style of his surroundings, and the length of time he has got on his hands); says spirits cannot feel heat or cold (which militates somewhat against all my notions of orthodox damnation—fire and brimstone); says spirits commune with each other by thought—they have no language; says the distinctions of sex are preserved there—and so forth and so on.

The old parson wrote and talked for an hour, and showed by his quick, shrewd, intelligent replies, that he had not been sitting up nights in the other world for nothing; he had been prying into everything worth knowing, and finding out everything he possibly could—as he said himself, when he did not understand a thing he hunted up a spirit who could explain it; consequently he is pretty thoroughly posted; and for his accommodating conduct and his uniform courtesy to me, I sincerely hope he will continue to progress at his present velocity until he lands on the very roof of the highest sphere of all, and thus achieve perfection.—Enterprise, Feb. 4th.

DEPOSITORS IN SAVINGS BANKS.—We think the most equitable mode of receiving deposits is that adopted by the California Building and Loan Society. First, the money draws interest at one per cent. per month from the day it is lodged, provided it remains with the Company thirty days. Second, it may be drawn at pleasure, but no interest will be given unless the money is thirty days lodged. Third, the interest, if not drawn half yearly, is compounded and becomes capital and draws new interest. Fourth, as all the loans made by the Company are on city real estate, under the provisions of the Specific Contract Law the borrowers are constrained, under penalty of losing their Homesteads, to pay up their loans in gold coin, wherefore the Company cannot lose by any possible future enactments of the Legislature. Fifth, the Company guarantees on the face of the Bank book given to their depositors that their "deposits shall be repaid with interest in United States gold coin." Come what may, the shares, property, and assets, are pledged and ample to pay the depositor in gold coin. Sixth, an excellent rule, no charge is made as an "entrance fee." No charge is made either entering or departing. Morning Call.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY will be Wednesday next. Appleton, who may justly be termed the god-father of the day in this locality, has, as usual, pretty well established the fact in the minds of Love's devotees, by his lengthy poetical advertisements, which adorn the columns of the local press, thus rendering a dissertation on the day and its associations unnecessary. We can only add that his depots for the sale of those elegant gold and silver embossed, and racy, comic and satirical Valentines, that have made his name famous, will be open on Monday morning, and are to be located at No. 8 Montgomery street, opposite the Lick House; 618 Washington street, in Baley & Cramer's lower reception rooms; and No. 2 Virginia Block, Stockton street, above Pacific. Headquarters at Appleton's Store, 508 Montgomery street.

INVESTING IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.—The first corporation in this State investing its capital in United States Bonds, is the National Insurance Company, lately organized in this city, which has so invested its entire capital—one million dollars; thus insuring a monthly income of over six thousand dollars from interest alone, besides guaranteeing policy holders a certain security against loss, even in the contingency arising of the entire city being burned, as was the case in the earlier days of its existence. This company was organized, its capital stock subscribed and paid in within a period of five weeks, and is now doing business in a temporary office, corner of Montgomery and California streets, while awaiting the completion of the improvements the old "Adams & Co.'s Express" building a few doors above is undergoing, for its occupancy as a permanent place of business.

IF your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—To whom it may concern: Thousands of lives are annually sacrificed for want of properly directed and timely use of the only remedy that will surely check Incipient Consumption. Delay is dangerous, and may end in death! Why then put off the use of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup—a strictly scientific and efficient remedy for all lung complaints.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

THE CHARM OF YOUTH.—Ladies, have you that delicious toilet article, for rendering the complexion pure and fragrant, free from all blemishes—a skin of parian beauty, clear, smooth and life like—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Try it, for it is beyond all praise

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and nggravated misery is endured by the victims of medieal inefficiency and ignorance, which eonld be cured just as speedily ns was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other eases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which neeounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Musonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an uttack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most exeruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me wulking about the streets in tbree days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I diseharged my earringe and walked with n friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly u mile) and home again, and so on until eured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I um happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends nnd acquaintances as may elunce to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Astrology.—The oeeult sciences of the middle ages, magie, nlchemy, necromaney, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who ean interpret the influenee of the stars and predict by tbeir oeeultations the hidden events of the future.

In uffairs of Past, Present or Fulnre, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go nnd consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Siekness treated nnd eured through a science unknowu to others.

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding us fully as possible not only against the reeurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the eonsequences that arise from them. Aceidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes bnt we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislatiou is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growtb of Aecideut Insurnnce Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Aecidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their ageney in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of tbis city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while tbe benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in ease of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it eosts. We prediet a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institutiou, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment nnd nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Burs, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medieal skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose proeesses of applying eleetricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of exeellent reputation, and as a Medieal Eleetrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruetion in penmanship. It is the eheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veener,
Prineipal of City College, San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and prineiples of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimouy in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more eordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruetion.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard nuthorities for the language. The Babbitonian Penmanship, an Amerieau system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the Englisb first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medieal and Surgical Institute is beeoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted witb gentlemeu who had suffered for years under chronie disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Dohertv, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to annonnce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to estahlish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no ease does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a eure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronie disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his eare. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgieal Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.

The following card will explain itself without comment:

San Francisco, Jan. 19, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been for seven years afflicted with rheumatism, and during that time I suffered more than generally falls to the lot of any human being in a life time. My ankles at times would measure six inches in diameter; my fingers were drawn into the palms of my hands; pains the most excruciating in my extremities, my hips and back, until I almost wished for death to relieve me of my sufferings. I tried every known remedy, and spent many hundred dollars without obtaining any relief. I have been swindled so many times by miserable Quacks, that I was afraid to try your remedy. Fortunately while reading one of your bills, a friend of mine told me that he had been cured by you. I eoncluded to try once more, though I had little confidence in it, because my ease was of so many years standing; but judge of my surprise, when, after using it two days all my pain left me, and the swelling in my ankles decreased, and I am now, after using your remedy ten days, well and able to leave for my home. God bless you, Doctor. You will be considered a benefactor. Gratefully yours, fe3 Asa Willey, Drytown, Amador county.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim, neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these artieles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Kaowlton & Co., removed to 120 Moatgomery.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.

Georgo H. Clapp, coruer Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wbolers & Sturke, Pine and Moutgouery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

C. Beacb, 34 Montgomcry street.
S. Friedman, 1168 Stockton street.
A. Gensoul, 311 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Moatgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Adolph Levy, 19 Secoad street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale maaufae.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.

Marcus Pezold, 46 Secoad street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washingtoa street.

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearay.
Dr. L. W. Dennis, removed to 14 Geary.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgo mery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Moatgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Saasome, cor. Pine.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.

Wm. Brown & Co., 160 Third street.

FURNITURE.

N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pierce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.

Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesalo and retail) 227 Montgomcry street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heinburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Moatgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swam & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Moutgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 Californaia street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Moatgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Moutgomery st.
W. H. Pillner & Hunter, Gallery 14 Secoud street.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Moutgomery street.

SALOONS.

Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Ketchum, Third and Mission.
Donahue & Phelan, 31 Second street.
Ohio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchiason, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 324 Moutgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Moutgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Moutgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Moatgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made exteusive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructivo effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture

THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,

and solicit the continued patronage of our Californaia friends, which braneh of trade

WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless aess, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE

AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oct4

THE NEW WARM
SWIMMING BATH,

THIRD STREET, OPPOSITE SOUTH PARK,

IS NOW OPEN!

ja6

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

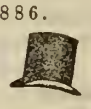
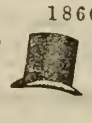
1886. 1866. 1866.



AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.



LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCFR OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTablishmeot at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety nf Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
de30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery. Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactnred by

E. O. HUNT,
oc29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE
no18-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at he last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

---

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1861, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON SATURDAY, - - - - FEBRUARY —, 1866
AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The establishment of this Line of Steamers affords a most favorable opportunity for invalids and pleasure seekers to enjoy the salubrious climate of the Hawaiian Group.

The attention of Merchants is especially invited to this new enterprise.

Bills of Lading will be furnished at the office, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage, having unequalled accommodations, apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

ja23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

SCALES!

MANUFACTURERS' Branch House on the Pacific coast.

Fairbanks' Standard Hay, Cattle, Miners' Druggists' and Grocers' Scales, adjusted to English, Spanish and Chinese weight.

We also REPAIR (supplying parts when broken or worn out) and re-adjust our Scales to the original standard.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
Send for Illustrated Catalogue. ja27 3m

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding

WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY AND Children's Clothing STORE,

Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to

Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,

OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27 1m

---

SILK HOSE AT COST.

IVINS' PATENT HAIR-CRIMPERS!
No Lady should be without one.

TRIMMINGS, FRINGES,
BUTTONS, THREADS,
COTTONS, NEEDLES,
TAPES, FANCY GOODS,
ETC.

HOOP SKIRTS, NEW STYLES,
Best ever Imported.

ALL TO BE FOUND AT THE
PIONEER TRIMMING EMPORIUM
OF
MRS. NORCROSS,
No. 5 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.
ja21-tf

IRISH LINENS.

FOR THE BEST MAKES OF

IRISH LINEN GOODS!

GO TO

MOSGROVE & BLAKELY,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja23 tf

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."

For sale in glass only, by
ja27 1m BARRY & PATTEN

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church.)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.

Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30 3m

---

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

ja25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulatious of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons actiug as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value. 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
de23-3m By JAMES C. ASUCOM, Deputy Clerk.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN CRORCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.

San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE,
fe3-5t Att'y for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Audrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. Int. rev. stamp. de23-3m } By JAS. E. ASUCOM, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS,
Plaintiff's Attorney.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D. 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. } H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.) Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.

no11 3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends delared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTABLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.
L. P. GAUTIER, Med. Examiner, San Francisco.

STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
ja20-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 141 Broadway, New York,
FOR INSURING AGAINST
Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000	30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Traveling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Twenty Days	4
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

GREAT AMERICAN
PRIZE CONCERT!
AT
CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,
Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11 3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, FEB. 10,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

THE IRISH MOTHER!

THIS EVENING, FEBRUARY 10,

Miss Charlotte Crampton

SUPPORTED BY THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY,
IN
DR. HAYNE'S AND J. F. SEARS'
ADAPTATION FROM "LA VOLEUSE D'ENFANTS," ENTITLED,

THE IRISH MOTHER,

OR

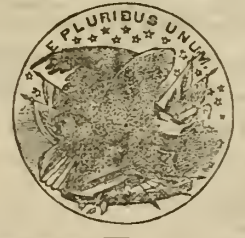
THE WILD BRIAR PATH.

Ellen O'Brien.....Miss Charlotte Crampton
John Atkins.....C. R. Thorne, Jr.
Lord Trevallian.....W. M. Leman
Oliver Sidney.....Fred Franks
Jacobson.....W. Barry
Pibroch.....Harry Jackson
Daniel Wickfield.....J. H. Ruby
Jonathan Bugle.....F. Woodhull
Adams.....C. L. Graves
Lady Helen.....Mrs. Fred Franks
Miss Fanny.....Miss F. R. Gass
Mistress Maggie.....Mrs. W. Smitten

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NATIONAL

Insurance Company.



TEMPORARY OFFICE,
Brannan's Express Building,
402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)
PERMANENT OFFICE,
(After March 1st,)
408 Montgomery street,
Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,
Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President.
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10 3m

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - - C. TIBBETS

CONTINUED SUCCESS
OF
THE ELVES!

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, FEB. 10,

The Elves,

And THE BUISLAY FAMILY, in their Wonderful Acts.

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, FEBRUARY 10TH, will be presented the Grand Romantic Fairy Spectacle, entitled,

THE ELVES.

Count Coldstream.....Mr. L. F. Beatty
Prince Pomp.....S. W. Leach
Colin.....F. Percy
Blazini.....Senor Buislay
Daphne.....Miss Katy
Sylvia.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Prince Lubin Jockey Club.....Miss Hinckley
Phillis.....Miss Caroline Chapman
Mme Chloe.....Mrs. Judah
Princess Jonquil.....Miss Julia Gould
Eoline.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Perdita.....Madame Buislay

A Grand Ballet, Tableaux,

SONGS, GLEES, AND DUETS.

MONDAY NIGHT:
The Grand Spectacular Play entitled,

The Bronze Horse,

Will be produced.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
ja19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and steamer running to Guayquil, touching at Tumaco, the port of the new mines, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

FEB. 19TH, - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

FEB. 28th, - - - - - - COLORADO,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

FEBRUARY 14, 1866.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY!

MISS S. A—'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

I know no form so graceful,
No face so near divine;
Then haste thee love! oh, hasten
And be my Valentine.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find thee faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE:

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate communication,
To suit the occasion,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.

VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.

THIRTY new and original California Comics, "Ye Copperheads," etc.

VALENTINE WRITERS, comic and sentimental.

Appleton's Valentine Express,

with Eight Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour on Valentine's Day in every part of the city.
D. E APPLETON & CO.,
ja27-3t 508 Montgomery street.

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE
SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - - Commander,
FOR HONOLULU,
ON THURSDAY, - - - - - MARCH 1, 1866,
AT ELEVEN O'CLOCK, A. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.
ja23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,
AND
Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE
TO THE
CLIFF HOUSE
TRUE ENJOYMENT!

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and the resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-tf

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN COUCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.
San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE, fe10-5t Att'y for Administrator.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865. fc10-3m

THE

MUTUAL

Life Insurance Company

OF NEW YORK.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

DIVIDENDS, ANNUAL,

AND

CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS,

IMMEDIATELY!

LIFE AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES ISSUED,

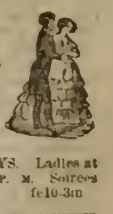
PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.

H. S. HOMANS,
General Agent,
No. 609 Clay street,
fe10-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,



On Bush-st., adjoining Rues House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 12. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 17, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- Cultivation of Flowers.—By "Iris."
- For the Ladies.—By Clara Morton.
- Lost in the Mountains.—By Sedgeley.
- A Needed Reform.
- "Nation Bad" Verse.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

POETRY:
- Coquette.—By Chas. Warren Stoddard.
- "If I were a Bee-Bird."—By "Inigo."

SELECTED:
- How Hereward Slew the Bear.—A Thrilling Story by Kingsley.
- Dress and its Critics.—From the "Nation."
- The Toilet: How to Take Care of the Hair—Perfumed Oils, etc. From the New York "Boudoir."
- The Danger of Neglecting Colds.
- Curious Etymologies.
- The London "Times."
- How to Prevent Cholera.

POETRY:
- Antony in Arms.—By Robert Buchanan.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, February 17th, 1866.

IF the inquisitive Dutchman were to enter almost any house in town with his question of, Who's been here since I've been gone? I think the universal answer would be: St. Valentine.

Traces of his late presence are visible on every side. And his coming was heralded by signs which could not be misinterpreted. Rhyming dictionaries had an immense sale, and books of poetical quotations could not be had in the market for love or money—

And what can't be had for love isn't worth having—

Young ladies, for a week back, have been writing mysterious notes in disguised hands in surreptitious corners. In the fly-leaves of bibles, and other secret hiding places, where it is supposed that the casual caller would never think of looking, you found valentines in various stages of progression—some just budding and others full blown.

I haven't received many valentines of late years. Why it is I cannot tell, but, for some reason or another, they've quit on me. Last Wednesday, for instance, beyond a brief, but warm and expressive little valentine from a tailor, and an eloquent reminder from another noble gentleman whose family crest is a Golden Boot—it is displayed over his door, so that he may be said to sit under the shade of his own vine and boot-tree—beyond these testimonials of consideration and remembrance, I got no valentines at all.

And yet I went on writing them just as industriously as ever. You will see them in several newspapers with which I have the honor to be connected—don't ask me what newspapers they are, nor over what signatures I write, for these are secrets which are kept inviolate. But just take up the first respectable journal that comes to hand, and, if there be anything brilliant in it, give me the credit.

But, aside from valentines about the weather, the immortality of the soul, our foreign relations, Judge Hagar's School Bill, the Eight-hour System, the Repeal of the Specific Contract Law, and other topics of public interest, I wrote a valentine to a young lady in Sonoma county, which rather pleased me. Of course, it was an impromptu, for all writers are accustomed to do their best things in this way. Very often, while we sit thinking of many things in general and nothing in particular—perhaps at the tea table, or while playing billiards on a carom table—the spell comes upon one, a spirit seizes your hand, and you dash off a few brilliant verses in an upside-down hand, which very few people can read. This it is to be an impromptist.

It is curious how my Valentine came to be written. I was up in Sonoma spending Sunday. Sonoma is a great place for porches. Every one that has a house has a porch—and sometimes two porches, if the family happens to be a large one and in easy circumstances. I sat in a porch, and beside me sat a maiden of sixteen summers—

Or some'eres thereabouts—

Suddenly the conversation turned upon bees. How it happened I can't for the life of me remember, but I think I was playfully pressing her hand and she said: Let me be.

Upon which, such a subtle thing is suggestion, I said I wished I were a bee.

And she, kindly leading the conversation up to me and not afraid of a sell, asked: What would you do if you were?

I instantly, with a diamond ring which I wear for such occasions, traced the following lines upon the window. To understand them you must know that the young person was baptized as Louisa Jane, but that we call her Lily because it is a much prettier name:

"IF I WERE A BEE-BIRD."

If I were a bee-bird,
What would I do?
I'll tell to no other,
Darling, but you.
On the breast of the lily,
Folding my wings—
Think it no harm, darling,
'Tis a bee sings—

The tears of the blue-bell
Ever might fall;
The rose and the woodbine
Cling to the wall;
The cowslip and daisy
Lie in the sun—
I would not kiss them,
Never a one.

But alone with my lily
Ever I'd rest
Kissing the blossom
Of her white breast—
Think it no harm, darling,
Not mine the tongue,
I but interpret
What the bee sung.

The success of my valentine did not equal my anticipations. The head of the family, though he did not pronounce it purp-stuff, remarked that he didn't like to have his windows scratched up, and besides he did not think it proper that such sentiments should be expressed to "the young person." And the glazier was called and the light was taken out and my light put out in the same breath.

And such is life:

C'est un verre qui luit
Q'un souffle peut detruire et q'un souffle a produit.

Oddly enough, St. Valentine's day was also Ash Wednesday. In my native town there was a family named Ash, and Wednesday was their reception day. What a famous joke that was of mine about the Ash Wednesdays! No one had thought of it before, and so I was patted on the head for it, called a bright boy, and a brilliant future predicted for me.

How pleasant the prediction of a brilliant future is to a young and ambitious man. One is cheered upon his lonely way by it much as the donkey is by the bunch of turnips that is tied before his nose, and which he jogs along in a vain endeavor to reach. It is good to have something to look forward to, you know——And just at this moment the Poet Stoddard... dreamy-eyed and silver-voiced, with a song upon his lips before which my Lily-putian verses pale and wither into nothingness... comes into the room. And the tenor of his song leads me to believe that he, too, has been to Sonoma. Had I addressed my valentine to a sunflower, would a similar coincidence have occurred?

And another friend has just dropped in, calling my attention to a little valentine addressed to me through the columns of my favorite Flag a few days since.

In its course I am called "a despicable libeller," because I last week gave the current news item about the sandwich symposium of a late manager. And the author signs himself "Vindicator."

Restaurateur would perhaps have been a more appropriate signature, for I am told that he is the proprietor of the lunch stand from which the sandwiches were ordered.

It is eminently unkind of Vindicator to do this thing; I did not say the sandwiches were bad. Peculiarly honest in all my relations with the public, I am persuaded that they were made of the best wheat... should I say Wheatleigh?... bread and butter that the market afforded.

Bless Vindicator's heart, I have no prejudice or malice against his patron.

With my present understanding of his versatility of talent, I would go very far to see him in any role... a hot roll would be preferred to cold bread... and I certainly think he might now play an excellent Hamlet.

Besides the stripes of the Flag I received a delicate little compliment in a badly printed and worse edited little advertising sheet.

Some time ago, it seems, I had occasion to use the word "mollusk." By a typographical error, a c got sandwiched where the s should have been... is it any wonder I am somewhat prejudiced against sandwiches after that?... and it read "mclluck." And in a notice of Chastelard, some two weeks since, a word was omitted, making the conclusion of a sentence read "the masses chant conventicles," instead of like conventicles.

No one possessed himself of even a common school education would assume that these errors lay with the writer, for they are palpably typographical. Malice alone could place any other construction upon them.

For the favor of yesterday, and similar ones, they tell me I am indebted to some one called "Trem"... short, I suppose, for Tremens, his first name being Delirium....and that this constant snapping at my heels is because he fancies that I set a mouse trap of his out in the cold.

Because the interests of the paper demanded the abatement of a nuisance, why should I, who had nothing to do with the matter, be held responsible? The Sunday Mercury is said to have also concluded that the Mouse-Trap is scarcely the cheese... should it be thrown overboard from its deck, will the sanitary precaution of that exigeant vessel bring a double clatter about my ears?

Toward the misguided mouser I bear no dislike... the result, perhaps, of having no acquaintance with him... I cannot see, however, why... with an excellent situation as dramatic critic on one of the few daily papers in the city that is actually worth its subscription price, knowing that his criticisms of the performances at the Olympic are read and admired by all the patrons of that establishment, and that by virtue of his position he enjoys a good social status... he should constitute himself my constant censor. My proverbia good-nature will not let him become an incensor.

INIGO.

THE second bal masqué of the Eureka Club came off at Platt's Hall on Thurday evening, according to announcement. The floor was filled with gay masquers, and the gallery above fairly groaned with the weight of spectators. Fun and jollity ruled until morning had well dawned. The prizes were awarded to a personation of Emperor Norton, and a "wild Irish mother"—very much after the pattern which Sears has lately created. Mr. Barry (Norton I.) received a gold-headed cane; Miss Goldstein (the wild Irish mother) a beautiful watch.

YESTERDAY'S leader in the Flag was headed "Concerning Salt-marsh and Tide Lands." Being vindicative now instead of vindictive, might not an instructive essay upon salt-ham and sandwiches have been more to the point? for, aside from being more competent to grapple with the theme, that journal is fond of picking bones.

MODERN COURTSHIP.

Young Arthur, when his Maud he left,
A ringlet from her chignon cleft:
"Dear curl!" cried he. "Dear? yes, you ninny!
My chignon, stupid, cost a guinea!"

ANTONY IN ARMS.

LO, we are side by side!—One dark arm furls
Aronnd me like a serpent warm and hare;
The other, lifted 'mid a gleam of pearls,
Holds a full golden goblet in the air:
Her face is shining through her clondy cnrls
With light that makes me drunken nnaware,
And with my chin upon my breast I smile
Upon her, darkening inward all the while.

And through the chamber cnrtains, backward roll'd
By spicy winds that fan my fever'd head,
I see a sandy flat slope yellow as gold
To the brown banks of Nilus wriukling red
In the slow sunset; and mine eyes behold
The West, low down beyond the river's bed,
Grow sullen, ribb'd with many a brazen bar,
Under the white smile of the Cyprian star.

A bitter Roman vision floateth black
Before me, in my dizzy brain's despite;
The Roman armor brindles on my back,
My swelling nostrils drink the fumes of fight:
But then, she smiles upon me!—and I lack
The warrior will that frowns on lewd delight,
And, passionately proud and desolate,
I smile to answer to the joy I hate.

Joy coming uninvoked, asleep, awake,
Makes sunshine on the grave of buried powers;
Oft-times I wholly loathe her for the sake
Of manhood slipt away in easeful hours;
But from her lips mild words and kisses break,
Till I am like a ruin mocked with flowers;
I think of Honor's face—then turn to hers—
Dark, like the splendid shame that she confers.

Lo, how her dark arm holds me!—I am bound
By the soft touch of fingers light as leaves:
I drag my face aside, hnt at the sound
Of her low voice I turn—and she perceives
The cloud of Rome upon my face, and round
My neck she twines her odorous arms and grieves,
Shedding upon a heart as soft as they
Tears 't is a hero's task to kiss away!

And then she loosens from me, trembling still Like a bright throbbing robe, and bids me "go!"
When pearly tears her drooping eyelids fill,
And her swart beauty whitens into snow;
And lost to use of life and hope and will,
I gaze upon her with a warrior's woe,
And turn, and watch her sidelong in annoy—
Then snatch her to me, flush'd with shame and joy!

Once more, O Rome! I would be son of thine—
This constant prayer my chain d sonl ever saith—
I thirst for honorable end—I pine
Not thus to kiss away my mortal breath.
But comfort such as this may not be mine—
I cannot even die a Roman death:
I seek a Roman's grave, a Romau's rest—
But, dying, I would die upon her breast!

[Robert Buchanan.

HOW HEREWARD SLEW THE BEAR.

ALL this is not only possible, but probable enough, the dates considered: the chroniclers, however, are silent. They only say that Hereward was in those days beyond Northumberland with Gisebert of Ghent.

Gisebert, Gislebert, Gilbert, Guibert, Goisbricht, of Ghent, who afterwards owned, by chance of war, many a fair manor about Lincoln city, was one of those valiant Flemings who settled along the east and northeast coast of Scotland in the eleventh century. They fought with the Celtic princes, and theu married with their daughters; got to themselves lands "by the title-deed of the sword;" and so became—the famous "Freskin the Fleming" especially—the ancestors of the finest aristocracy, both physically and intellectually, in the world. They had their connections, moreover, with the Norman court of Rouen, through the Duchess Matilda, daughter of their old Seigneur, Baldwin, Marquis of Flanders; their connections, too, with the English Court, through Countess Judith, wife of Earl Tosti Godwinsson, another daughter of Baldwin's. Their friendship was sought, their enmity feared, far and wide throughout the north. They seem to have been civilizers and cultivators and traders—with the instinct of true Flemings—as well as conquerors; they were in those very days bringing to order and tillage the rich lands of the northeast, from the Frith of Moray to that of Forth; and forming a rampart for Scotland against the invasions of Sweyn, Hardraade, and all the wild Vikings of the northern seas.

Amongst them, in those days, Gilbert of Ghent seems to have been a notable personage, to judge from the great house which he kept, and the "milites tyrones," or squires in training for the honor of knighthood, who fed at his table. Where he lived, the chroniclers report not. To them the country "ultra Northumbriam," beyond the Forth, was as Russia or Cathay, where

> "Geographers on pathless downs
> Put elephants for want of towns."

As indeed it was to that French map-maker who, as late as the middle of the eighteenth century (not having been to Aberdeen or Elgin,) leaves all the country north of the Tay a blank, with the inscription: "Terre inculte et sauvage, habitée par les Higlanders.

Wherever Gilbert lived, however, he heard that Hereward was outlawed, and sent for him, says the story. And there he lived, doubtless happily enough, fighting Highlanders and hunting deer, so that as yet the pains and penalties of exile did not press very hardly upon him. The handsome, petulant, good-humored lad had become in a few weeks the darling of Gilbert's ladies, and the envy of all his knights and gentlemen. Hereward the singer, harp-player, dancer, Hereward the rider and hunter, was in all mouths; but he himself was discontented at having as yet fallen in with no adventure worthy of a man, and looked curiously and longingly at the menagerie of wild beasts enclosed in strong wooden cages, which Gilbert kept in one corner of the great court-yard, not for any scientific purposes, but to try with them, at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, the mettle of the young gentlemeu who were candidates for the honor of knighthood. But after looking over the bulls and stags, wolves and bears, Hereward settled it in his mind that there was none worthy of his steel, save one huge white bear, whom no man had yet dared to face, and whom Hereward, indeed, had never seen, hidden as he was all day within the old oven-shaped Pict's house of stone, which had been turned into his den. There was a mystery about the uncanny brute which charmed Hereward. He was said to be half-human, perhaps wholly human; to be the son of the Fairy Bear, near kinsman, if not uncle or cousin, of Siward Digre. He had, like his fairy father, iron claws; he had human intellect, and understood human speech, and the arts of war—at least so all in the place believed, and not as absurdly as at first sight seems.

For the brown bear, and much more the white, was, among the Northern nations, in himself a creature magical and superhuman. "He is God's dog," whispered the Lapp, and called him "the old man in the fur cloak," afraid to use his right name, even inside the tent, for fear of his overhearing and avenging the insult. "He has twelve men's strength, and eleven men's wit," sang the Norseman, and prided himself accordingly, like a true Norseman, on outwitting and slaying the enchanted monster.

Terrible was the brown bear: but more terrible "the white sea-deer," as the Saxons called him; the hound of Hrymir, the whale's bane, the seal's dread, the rider of the iceberg, the sailer of the floe, who ranged for his prey under the six months' night, lighted by Surtur's fires, even to the gates of Muspelheim. To slay him was a feat worthy of Beowulf's self; and the greatest wonder, perhaps, among all the wealth of Crowland, was the twelve white bear-skins which lay before the altars, the gift of the great Canute. How Gilbert had obtained his white bear, and why he kept him there in durance vile, was a mystery over which men shook their heads. Again and again Hereward asked his host to let him try his strength against the mouster of the North. Again and again the shrieks of the ladies, and Gilbert's own pity for the stripling youth, brought a refusal. But Hereward settled it in his heart, nevertheless, that somehow or other, when Christmas time came round, he would extract from Gilbert, drunk or sober, leave to fight that bear; and then either make himself a name, or die like a man.

Meanwhile Hereward made a friend. Among all the ladies of Gilbert's household, however kind they were inclined to be to him, he took a fancy but to one—and that was to a little girl of eight years old. Alftruda was her name. He liked to amuse himself with this child, without, as he fancied, any danger of falling in love; for already his dreams of love were of the highest and most fantastic; and an Emir's daughter, or a Princess of Constantinople, were the very lowest game at which he meant to fly. Alftruda was beautiful, too, exceedingly, and precocious, and, it may be, vain enough to repay his attentions in good earnest. Moreover she was English as he was, and royal likewise; a relation of Elfgiva, daughter of Ethelred, once King of England, who, as all know, married Uchtred, prince of Northumberland and grandfather of Gospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, and ancestor of all the Dunbars. Between the English lad then and the English maiden grew up in a few weeks an innocent friendship, which had almost become more, by the intervention of the Fairy Bear.

For as Hereward was coming in one afternoon from hunting, hawk on fist, with Martin Lightfoot trotting behind, crane and heron, duck and hare, slung over his shoulder, on reaching the court-yard gates he was aware of screams and shouts within, tumult and terror among man and beast. Hereward tried to force his horse in at the gate. The beast stopped and turned, snorting with fear; and no wonder; for in the midst of the court-yard stood the Fairy Bear; his white mane bristled up till he seemed twice as big as any of the sober brown bears which Hereward yet had seen: his long snake neck and cruel visage wreathed about in search of prey. A dead horse, its back broken by a single blow of the paw, and two or three writhing dogs, showed that the beast had turned (like too many of his human kindred) "Berserker." The court-yard was utterly empty: but from the ladies' bower came shrieks and shouts, not only of women, but of men; and knocking at the bower door, adding her screams to those inside, was a little white figure, which Hereward recognized as Alftruda's. They had barricaded themselves inside, leaving the child out; and now dared not open the door, as the bear swung and rolled towards it, looking savagely right and left for a fresh victim.

Hereward leaped from his horse, and, drawing his sword, rushed forward with a shout which made the bear turn round.

He looked once back at the child; then round again at Hereward: and, making up his mind to take the largest morsel first, made straight at him with a growl which there was no mistaking.

He was within two paces; then he rose on his hind legs, a head and shoulders taller than Hereward, and lifted the iron talons high in air. Hereward knew that there was but one spot at which to strike; and he struck true and strong, before the iron paw could fall, right on the muzzle of the monster.

He heard the dull crash of the steel; he felt the sword jammed tight. He shut his eyes for an instant, fearing lest, as in dreams, his blow had come to naught; lest his sword had turned aside, or melted like water in his hand, and the next moment would find him crushed to earth, blinded and stunned. Something tugged at his sword. He opened his eyes, and saw the huge carcass bend, reel, roll slowly over to one side dead, tearing out of his hand the sword, which was firmly fixed into the skull.

Hereward stood awhile staring at the beast like a man astonished at what he himself had done. He had had his first adventure, and he had conquered. He was now a champion in his own right—a hero of the heroes—one who might take rank, if he went on, beside Beowulf, Frotho, Ragnar, Lodbrog, or Harald Hadraade. He had done this deed. What was there after this which he might not do? And he stood there in the fulness of his pride, defiant of earth and heaven, while in his heart arose the thought of that old Viking who cried, in the pride of his godlessness: "I never on earth met him whom I feared, and why should I fear Him in heaven? If I met Odin, I would fight with Odin. If Odin were the stronger, he would slay me; if I were the stronger, I would slay him." And there he stood, staring and dreaming over renown to come—a true pattern of the half-savage hero of those rough times, capable of all vices except cowardice, and capable, too, of all virtues save humility.

"Do you not see," said Martin Lightfoot's voice, close by, "that there is a fair lady trying to thank you, while you are so rude or so proud that you will not vouchsafe her one look?"

It was true. Little Alftruda had been clinging to him for five minutes past. He took the child up in his arms and kissed her with pure kisses, which for a moment softened his hard heart; then, setting her down, he turned to Martin.

"I have done it, Martin."

"Yes, you have done it; I spied you. What will the old folks at home say to this?"

"What care I?"

Martin Lightfoot shook his head, and drew out his knife.

"What is that for?" said Hereward.

"When the master kills the game, the knave can but skin it. We may sleep warm under this fur in many a cold night by sea and moor."

"Nay," said Hereward, laughing: "when the master kills the game he must first carry it home. Let us take him and set him up against the bower door there, to astonish the brave knights inside." And stooping down, he attempted to lift the huge carcass; but in vain. At last, with Martin's help, he got it fairly on his shoulders, and the two dragged their burden to the bower and dashed it against the door, shouting with all their might to those within to open.

Windows, it must be remembered, were in those days so few and far between that the folks inside had remained quite unaware of what was going on without.

The door was opened cautiously enough; and ont looked, to the shame of knighthood be it said, two or three knights who had taken shelter in the bower with the ladies. Whatever they were going to say the ladies forestalled, for, rushing out across the prostrate bear, they overwhelmed Hereward with praises, thanks, and, after the straightforward custom of those days, with substantial kisses.

"You must be knighted at once," cried they. "You have knighted yourself by that single blow."

"A pity, then," said one of the knights to the others, "that he had not given that accolade to himself, instead of to the bear."

"Unless some means are found," said another, "of taking down this boy's conceit, life will soon be not worth having here."

"Either he must take ship," said a third, "and look for adventures elsewhere, or I must."

Martin Lightfoot heard those words; and knowing that envy and hatred, like all other vices in those rough-hewn times, were apt to take very startling and unmistakeable shapes, kept his eye accordingly on those three knights.

"He must be knighted—he shall be knighted, as soon as Sir Gilbert comes home," said all the ladies in chorus.

"I should be sorry to think," said Hereward, with the blundering mock humility of a self-conceited boy, "that I had done anything worthy of such an honor. I hope to win my spurs by greater feats than these."

A burst of laughter from the knights and gentlemen followed.

"How loud the young bantam crows after his first little scuffle!"

"Hark to him! What will he do next? Eat a dragon? Fly to the moon? Marry the Sophy of Egypt's daughter?"

The last touched Hereward to the quick, for it was just what he thought of doing; and his blood, heated enough already, beat quicker, as some one cried, with the evident intent of picking a quarrel: "That was meant for us. If the man who killed the bear has not earned knighthood, what must we be, who have not killed him? You understand his meaning, gentlemen—don't forget it!"

Hereward looked down, and setting his foot on the bear's head, wrenched out of it the sword which he had left till now, with pardonable pride, fast set in the skull.

Martin Lightfoot, for his part, drew stealthily from his bosom the little magic axe, keeping his eye on the brain-pan of the last speaker.

The lady of the house cried "Shame!" and ordered the knights away with haughty words and gestures, which, because they were so well deserved, only made the quarrel more deadly.

Then she commanded Hereward to sheathe his sword.

He did so; and turning to the knights, said with all courtesy: "You mistake me, sirs. You were where brave knights should be, within the beleagured fortress, defending the ladies. Had you remained outside, and been eaten by the bear, what must have befallen them, had he burst open the door? As for this little lass, whom you left outside, she is too young to requite knight's prowess by lady's love; and therefore beneath your attention, and only fit for the care of a boy like me." And taking up Aftruda in his arms, he carried her in and disappeared.

Who now but Hereward was in all men's mouths? The minstrels made ballads on him; the lasses sang his praises (says the chronicler) as they danced upon the green. Gilbert's lady would need give him the seat, and all the honors of a belted knight, though knight he was none. And daily and weekly the valaint lad grew and hardened into a valiant man, and a courteous one withal, giving no offence himself, and not over ready to take offence at other men.

The knights were civil enough to him, the ladies more than civil; he hunted, he wrestled, he tilted; he was promised a chance of fighting for glory, as soon as a Highland chief should declare war against Gilbert, or drive off his cattle—an event which (and small blame to the Highland chiefs) happened every six months.

No one was so well content with himself as Hereward; and therefore he fancied that the world must be equally content with him, and was much disconcerted when Martin drew him aside one day, and whispered: "If I were my lord, I should wear a mail shirt under my coat to-morrow out hunting."

"What?"

"The arrow that can go through a deer's blade-bone can go through a man's."

"Who should harm me?"

"Any man of the twelve who eat at the same table."

"What have I done to them? If I have had my laugh at them, they have had their laugh at me; and we are quits."

"There is another score, my lord, which you have forgotten, and that is all on your side."

"Eh?"

"You killed the bear. Do you expect them to forgive you that, till they have repaid you with interest?"

"Pish!"

"You do not want for wit, my lord. Use it, and think. What right has a little boy like you to come here, killing bears which grown men cannot kill? What can you expect but just punishment for your insolence—say, a lance between your shoulders when you stoop to drink, as Sigfried had for daring to tame Brunhild? And more, what right have you to come here, and so win the hearts of the ladies, that the lady of all the ladies should say, 'If aught happen to my poor boy—and he cannot live long—I would adopt Hereward for my own son, and show his mother what a fool some folks think her.' So, my lord, put on your mail shirt to-morrow, and take care of narrow ways, and sharp corners. For to-morrow it will be tried, that I know, before my Lord Gilbert comes back from the Highlands; but by whom I know not, and care little, seeing that there are half a dozen in the house who would be glad enough of the chance."

Hereward took his advice, and rode out with three or four knights the next morning into the fir-forest; not afraid, but angry and sad. He was not yet old enough to estimate the virulence of envy; to take ingratitude and treachery for granted. He was to learn the lesson then, as a wholesome chastener to the pride of success. He was to learn it again in later years, as an additional bitterness in the humiliation of defeat; and find out, as does many a man, that if he once fall, or seem to fall, a hundred curs spring up to bark at him, who dared not open their mouths while he was on his legs.

So they rode into the forest, and parted, each with his footman and his dogs, in search of boar and deer; and each one had his sport without meeting again for some two hours or more.

Hereward and Martin came at last to a narrow gully, a murderous place enough. Huge fir-trees roofed it in, and made a night of noon. High banks of earth and great boulders walled it in right and left for twenty feet above. The track, what with pack-horses' feet, and what with five hundred years' rain-fall, was a rut three feet deep and two feet broad, in which no horse could turn. Any other day Hereward would have cantered down it with merely a tightened rein. To-day he turned to Martin and said:

"A very fit and proper place for this same treason, unless you have been drinking beer and thinking beer."

But Martin was nowhere to be seen.

A pebble thrown from the right bank struck him, and he looked up. Martin's face was peering through the heather overhead, his finger on his lips. Then he pointed cautiously, first up the pass, then down.

Hereward felt that his sword was loose in the sheath, and then griped his lance with a heart beating, but not with fear. The next moment he heard the rattle of a horse's hoofs behind him; looked back; and saw a knight charging desperately down the gully, his bow in hand, and arrow drawn to the head.

To turn was impossible. To stop, even to walk on, was to be ridden over and hurled to the ground helplessly. To gain the mouth of the gully, and then turn on his pursuer was his only chance. For the first and almost the last time in his life, he struck spurs into his horse, and ran away. As he went, an arrow struck him sharply in the back, piercing the corslet, but hardly entering the flesh. As he neared the mouth, two other knights crashed their horses through the brushwood from right and left, and stood awaiting him, their spears ready to strike. He was caught in a trap. A shield might have saved him; but he had none.

He did not flinch. Dropping his reins, and driving in the spurs once more, he met them in full shock. With his left hand he hurled aside the left-hand lance, with his right he hurled his own with all his force at the right-hand foe, and saw it pass clean through the felon's chest, while his lance-point dropped, and passed harmlessly behind his knee.

So much for lances in front. But the knight behind? Would not his sword the next moment be through his brain?

There was a clatter, a crash, and looking back Hereward saw horse and man rolling in the rut, and rolling with them Martin Lightfoot. He had already pinned the felon knight's head against the steep bank, and, with uplifted axe, was meditating a pick at his face which would have stopped alike his love-making and his fighting.

"Hold thy hand," shouted Hereward. "Let us see who he is: and remember that he is at least a knight."

"But one that will ride no more to-day. I finished his horse's going as I rolled down the bank."

It was true. He had broken the poor beast's leg with a blow of the axe, and they had to kill the horse out of pity ere they left.

Martin dragged his prisoner forward.

"You?" cried Hereward. "And I saved your life three days ago!"

The knight answered nothing.

"You will have to walk home. Let that be punishment enough for you," and he turned.

"He will have to ride in a woodman's cart, if he have the luck to find one."

The third knight had fled, and after him the dead man's horse. Hereward and his man rode home in peace, and the third knight, after trying vainly to walk a mile or two, fell and lay, and was fain to fulfil Martin's prophecy, and be brought home in a cart, to carry for years after, like Sir Lancelot, the nickname of the Chevalier de la Charette.

And so was Hereward avenged of his enemies. Judicial, even private, inquiry into the matter there was none. That gentlemen should meet in the forest and commit, or try to commit, murder on each other's bodies, was far too common a mishap in the ages of faith to stir up more than an extra gossipping and cackling among the women, and an extra cursing and threatening among the men; and as the former were all but unanimously on Hereward's side, his plain and honest story was taken as it stood.

"And now, fair lady," said Hereward to his hostess, "I must thank you for all your hospitality, and bid you farewell for ever and a day."

She wept, and entreated him only to stay till her lord came back; but Hereward was firm.

"You, lady, and your good lord I will ever love; and at your service my sword shall ever be: but not here. Ill blood I will not make. Among traitors I will not dwell. I have killed two of them, and shall have to kill two of their kinsmen next, and then two more, till you have no knights left; and pity that would be. No; the world is wide, and there are plenty of good fellows in it who will welcome me without forcing me to wear mail under my coat out hunting."

And he armed himself cap-a-pie, and rode away. Great was the weeping in the bower, and great the chuckling in the hall: but never saw they Hereward again upon the Scottish shore.

From Kingsley's "Hereward, or The Last of the English."

[For the Californian.]

LOST IN THE MOUNTAINS.

IN the State of New Hampshire, the most important accumulation of earth is Mount Washington; the most beautiful collection of water is Lake Winnipiseogee. The measurements in North Carolina have stolen from the former the honor of being the highest mountain east of the Rocky; but it may be doubted whether the latter will soon yield the palm of beauty to any other lake.

In passing southward from one of these points to the other, the traveller follows half way the valley of the Saco river. Near the point where it leaves him to seek the rising sun, its left current is touched by the far-reaching skirt of Kearsage mountain, and its right ready to enjoy the same honor from the garment of Mote, did not precipitous walls of rock, just at the water's edge, suddenly bear the unmoistened hem a thousand feet toward the sky. To ascend Kearsarge mountain—at sunrise to behold in the westward valley its clearly defined shadow of fourteen miles in length, or, at sunset, to admire the golden lakes of its western sky, and the silver ones of its eastern plain, and then be left alone with its night-hawk—is quite common.

But Mote is pathless and perilous: rough, from its thick, prostrate, and charred forests; rough, from its sharp and heaped up rocks; and hence rarely asceuded by man—never by woman. But three of us attempted the ascent, accomplished it, returned to our homes, and are now alive to tell our story. Yet we are diffident about it, after all. Strong and hardy pioneers have heard our tale, and come out of their shell of reserve enough to shake their heads solemnly. Tender ladies have heard it, sighed deeply, and turned pale. Good talkers have lent us their ears, and afterwards made a first-rate thing out of it. And all parties in a leading earthing place (not watering,) have looked at us and talked about us a very great deal. Yet these persons have all had the advantage of knowing the locality, or assisting their imaginations by our personal presence and gestures and explanations, whereas, my gentle reader, in your case there is both the probability that you were never in New Hampshire, and the certainty that we must talk to you by words only, and not at all by looks and gestures. Thus, you see, we run the risk of paining ourselves afresh by leaving you with a feeble conception of our distresses, and consequently a slight contempt for our ado about them. But we are reminded that our risk is one common to all writers, and we proceed.

We were three, representing the Eastern and Middle States, and Ireland. Suffer us each to lay aside the name of his almissima mater, and take his Alma mater. Our names, then, were Yale, Nassau, and Belfast. Soon after eight o'clock in the morning, we crossed the valley of the Saco to the foot of the precipitous rocks before mentioned, which overhang its right and western bank. Though presenting to the river these high, broad, flat faces of rock, they descend behind very gradually into the valley between them and Mote mountain. They resemble two huge bridge abutments, intended to lift one end of a mighty "suspension" across the valley of the Saco. The other valley behind these, and between them and Mote mountain, is several miles in length and width, and traversed by a stream, which, at the northern outlet, forms a series of cascades by way of beauty, and turns a mill by way of utility. I hope I need not tell the reader who has been on the spot, that I have been describing White Horse and Hart's Ledges, Diana's Baths and Merrill's Mills.

Going around from the base of the Ledges, we came to the Mill and the Baths, and here commenced our ascent of the valley and the stream. For several miles we were helped on our way very comfortably by a logging-road. As often before, so here especially, we had occasion to remark the almost intoxicating purity of the air, and the unutterable stillness of the forest. While the air braced every faculty to do double service, and there were delicate hues and odors for the eye and nose, the ear was positively unfed save by our own footfalls. Not a song, not a chirp, not a nut-fall—hardly the hum of an insect—awakened the air. Expecting to return over the same path, we strewed here and there leaves and berries to welcome us, and assure us of our being in the same way. At last the road terminated, just beside a clear, dark-bottomed brook, in which large trout floated, all unscared by our approach and gaze.

Pressing towards the base of the mountains, we were obliged to cross several acres of almost impassibility in the shape of prostrate birch trees which had been overrun with fire, and the soil between which, rendered fertile by the burning, gave forth every variety of prickly, thorny, and tangled undergrowth. But the base of the mountain was won, and the Alpine and travelled staff in the hands of one of our trio, being mated by a virgin and unjourneyed one cut by the wayside in the hands of another, we began the ascent. This was steep, but relieved by many stops to regale ourselves with the most luscious blackberries, and to obtain delightful views of the surrounding country. The first point won was a ledge of rock which we followed upward and southward to the base of the cone which forms the extreme top of Mote. Here we paused to dine. Our keen appetites easily persuaded us that our basket was very heavy and would be a great incumbrance in surmounting the last dread ascent.

Forgetting various traditional sanitary precepts, we rose immediately from our half-emptied basket, and braced ourselves for the last struggle. And struggle indeed it was! The cone of Mote mountain combines the elements of mandefiance and inaccessibility very happily. Within the memory of the inhabitants of Conway this cone bristled with pine trees. But, a few years ago, a whirlwind descended upon it from a vengeful heaven, and in a few terrible sweeps around it, every tree was laid flat. Then, over this heaped-up forest, swept a conflagration, which added the only element lacking to complete its difficulty of ascent. The trees were charred to begrime the pilgrim, their roots and branches sharpened into so many daggers to stab him, and the rocks below them loosened and disintegrated into untrustworthiness. But a good staff, a resolute spirit, strong pantaloons, and perseverance, carried us through triumphantly. Following the invaluable rule not to look ahead and borrow that trouble which all the future was so ready to lend, we found ourselves at last triumphantly at the tip-top.

The view was fine. Old Kearsarge rose in unparalleled majesty at the end of the valley between Mote and the Ledges. Yale declared somewhat poetically that the lofty parapet of Kearsarge (who would rather have been excused, I presume,) and the far-sweeping amphitheatre between that and ourselves formed a fitting place for the Miltonic spectacle of Satan exalted, and addressing the numberless hosts of hell! But we thought more of triumphing than of enjoying Milton or nature, and forthwith lighted for ourselves two flaming beacons—the aspiring tongues of which we hoped might seem to the dwellers on the plain to lick the very stars! (P. S. They were not seen.) Nassau also engaged himself in planting a graduated candle in a sheltered nook with a mass of powder at its base. He pictured himself leading forth a certain maiden that evening to a point whence the top of Mote could be seen, and mysteriously predicting a strange flame soon to appear. He says, Abracadabra!—bracadabra!—cadabra!—dabra!—bra!! and the summit of the mountain is ablaze! Meanwhile his companions laugh at him, grumble at his delaying them, then get interested in his work, and finally help him—though pretending of course that they do it merely to expedite a return.

That return is decided upon, and at four o'clock begins. But, lo, in the meantime a fog has gathered, and we take the wrong direction in leaving the top—a mistake which we do not feel, however, till we have advanced sufficiently far to be rid of the evils of the cone of mountain and to have reached the northward-stretching ledge by which we ascended. In fact, we left the cone to enter a gorge reaching down the side of the mountain almost directly to the base, but even worse than the cone to traverse. Paved with rocks, piled in endless confusion, and slippery from occasional streamlets as well as from a rain which had arisen to complicate our miseries; covered with the same sharp, charred forest of prostrate trees which had before bled and blackened us; often hopelessly steep, and offering to the foot rocks which not only betrayed it but rolled and threatened the lives of companions below, it was the wild, dismal, fearful track of an ancient land-slide.

Yet sunset found us at its foot, with the fog somewhat lifted so as to show us the backs of the Ledges opposite, and a cleared space toward the north that seemed to be near the Mill and Baths. Toward this point, through a part of the valley that made up for its lacking the slippery rocks and the steepness of the gorge by a maze of undergrowth, we tiresomely but hopefully plodded our way.

Soon we struck the bed of a dried-up stream. This was what we wanted. It would doubtless lead us, we thought, to the main stream beside which was the logging road, and at the foot of which was the Mill. We clung to it faithfully and forgetfully of all other means of extrication. This, we thought, is the clue to the labyrinth, and the points of the compass and the landmark mountains and the sense of direction need be retained or remembered no longer. Without reserve, mental or actional, we cast ourselves upon the stream-bed as our guide. But it played us false. Treacherously it soon ramified itself towards every point of the compass, and with involutions and complications in endless variety through a black and dismal swamp. Now this way, now that; now hopeful, now despairing; now in soft places, now on pebbles; now up stream, now down; now fording the stream, now crossing it on a log; now in dark places, and now in darker, we plodded and dragged, and conjectured, and picked, and fought our way for a good, long, brave time. But the truth had dawned upon us. Bleeding, ragged, soaked, muddy, worn out, we were lost!—lost in a complication of forests, standing and prostrate; of swamps; of tracts of tangled and prickly undergrowth; between mountains: miles from a house; in the rain; in the night; without a landmark: with matches and kindling wet; starless; pathless, and almost hopeless!

We resolved to halt and await the appearance of some token indicating our position. That we might take advantage of any lifting of the fog, or of the appearance of any stray star or the moon, we emerged from the forest, and, in spite of the drenching rain, began to clear for ourselves a spot under the open sky. It was now only half-past eight in the evening, and the dismal prospect was before us of remaining in that place and under these circumstances till daybreak. To while away the time we at first, of course, occupied ourselves as long as possible in clearing our camping-ground. In that ten feet square the most insignificant weeds and bushes received unnatural attention. Bushes which could not be pulled with innumerable random and superfluous pulls were whacked down with innumerable, blind and superfluous whacks. Logs and stumps, which needed elephants or powder for their removal, were tugged at in vain, by each separately, and then by all together. Logs and stumps which could be moved occupied an astonishingly long time in the process. But, finally, the last whack, the last pull, and the last lift for which there was the least apology in the world, were expended, and the fiction of clearing our camping ground was at an end. Then we danced. Positions, figures, movements, for which the speech of ball rooms has no name, served a while longer to keep us employed. But while the world lasts never may dancer again carry through gay motions a body body dispirited by so sombre a heart as ours. Then we walked backwards and forwards, around and around, across and returning, together and alone, walked, walked, till nature seemed ready to sink under the tedious attrition. Meanwhile, we talked as cheerfully as possible. We summed up the redeeming features of our situation. We were one in age, and could sympathize strongly: it was not freezing cold—we still had some life left. We told one another stories. We recited the gems of the poets. There among the Alps of America, Belfast showed us that the "Excelsior" was a household word in Ireland. There, in sight of death, Nassau recalled the "Thanatopsis" of Bryant. There, shut out from light, Yale remembered the "Offspring of Heaven, First-born." We recited original poetry. With no premonition of the present, our Belfast had written

LINES COMPOSED ON A CLOUDY DAY.

Post Nubila Phabus.

High above the ken of mortals
On a cloudy day,
Bright upon the heavenly portals
Shines the sun alway.
Though we see him not, resplendant,
Beaming from the sky,
Still he runs his course transcendent
In the empyrean high.

Clouds and darkness round may hover,
Trials sore may come;
And, bereft of friend and lover,
Sad may be our home.
But above us far exalted
On his kingly throne,
Far above the heavens vaulted,
Sits our God alone.

Through the gloom that o'er us lowers
Soon his light shall shine;
Gladly shall our earthborn flowers
Greet the rays divine!
Soon shall tears and sighs be banished,
Joys eternal given;
Then, life's troubled dreamings vanished,
Hail, blest Day of Heaven!

With no foresight of the value of a compass at this time, another had composed a

SONG OF THE MARINER'S NEEDLE.

Ho! burnish well, ye cunning hands,
A palace-home for me,
For I would ride in royal state
Across the briny sea.
Bring ivory from the Indian main,
To pave my mystic floor,
And build my dome of crystal sheen,
My walls of shining ore.

Now mount the wave, ye fearful ones,
Though raging storms assail,
My sparry lance o'ercometh all—
My arm is sheathed in mail.
The Storm-Fiend wraps his murky clouds
Around your trembling sight,
But I can pierce that gloomy vail,
And soar beyond the night.

The lone Enchantress of the Deep,
I rule its boisterous realm;
Watch ye my lithe and quivering wand,
To guide your straining helm.
Ay, bend your anxious gaze on me!
The Polar Star is dim,
And waves and tempests fill the night,
With Ocean's awful hymn.

For I commune with spirit-forms
Within my wizard cell,
And brooding shadows wing their flight
Before my magic spell.
O, angel of my constant heart
O, peerless Northern Star!
What midnight shall our spirits part—
Our sweet communings mar!

And sapient eyes have watched me long,
And science has grown gray,
And still ye dream not how nor why
I keep my wondrous way.
Ye know me as ye know the storm
That heaps your heaving path;
Ye love me, though, since mine is not
The mystery of wrath!

Then each buried himself in his own painful reflections. Moving, moving, movi g—with bodies in poor condition to move; thinking, thinking, thinking—with minds in sad condition to think; the hours were leaden-paced, indeed. Twice did one of our number seat himself worn out in body and despouding in soul. But, moved more by the evident pain that his thus exposing himself to be overtaken by numbness gave to his companions, than by regard to his own welfare, he lifted himself to his feet again. Three times aloud, and, who shall say how many times to ourselves, did we unite in another exercise, the value of which we believe ourselves to have experienced in the common impulse which, near midnight, came over us, to leave our place on another excursion in search of a path. Yale had suggested a theory as to where we were. At first the others dissented from it totally, but at last each, reflecting upon it himself, came to the conclusion that it was plausible. Forcing ourselves to take a mouthful of food, and fortifying ourselves with a thimbleful apiece from our nearly wasted flask, we set forth once more into the woods and swamps.

For a while our theory lasted us, but the landmark on which it was based at last disappeared on our becoming involved in the woods, and again we were without any thought of where we were. Still we pressed on, following wherever accessibility invited. The same difficulties with which we had before struggled, aggravated by the deeper night, our greater fatigue, and less hope, again obstructed our every footstep. To our bleeding hands and aching limbs the mud seemed more clogging, the logs more difficult to overcome, and the thorns and broken branches more relentlessly piercing, than before we stopped.

At last, near one o'clock, we were following one another's steps amid the blackness of a small piece of woods. But, what is this? We have certainly come to a cleared place of several rods square! We grope around with a grateful struggling of something like hope. The staff of one strikes something white and hard. He hails his companions—it is a chip! Joyfully each grasps it and feels its sharp edges. It is a chip, and not a very old one—doubtless we are near the logging-road, or some branch of it. We grope further, and find a stump. This, too, feels sharp, and rasps gratefully on our torn hands. We grope further and find an outlet!—but, whither will it lead us? Perhaps back again to the mountain; perhaps into a labyrinth, like the false stream-bed. At wide intervals and carefully exploring every side outlet we follow it. At last it crosses a stream whose waters are so dark that we are unable to see which way they run, for we know this much, that to follow any stream up must lead us wrongly. We find some large leaves and throw them in. They sail in the opposite direction to that in which we are on. Doubtless we are wrong, and must retrace our steps to the clearing. Now we search for an opening opposite to this. It is found, and we enter it eagerly. Onward, onward we follow it for what seems a long, long time. Yet no familiar tree or combination of trees greets us. We doubt whether we are not following some forsaken road off, off into the deep forest. Ah, ye berries and branches that we strewed here on our morning journey! though we did tear you from your clinging places yet we know ye would have smiled encouragement upon us there, in very pity, had the moon given ye leave.

Soon another source of hope is opened. We find a pool in the road, and by its side is certainly the footprint of a cow! Into such importance may circumstances elevate the most insignificant objects! And now only a little longer are we in doubt. The sound of falling water bursts upon us. "The Falls! it must be the falls near the Mill!" A little further, and the Mill itself leaps upon our view! We are safe! Five miles yet must be traversed; our twelve hours of walking must be filled up; the risen Saco must be forded in three places; the rain is yet pouring, and the mud and sand make the roads almost impassable—but who cares? we are safe! Thanks to God above, we are safe! One shall rave on the subject feverishly for two days; another in his absence of mind shall report himself in person to an inquirer as reclining in the other room, but—we are safe!

SEDGELEY.

DEPOSITORS IN SAVINGS BANKS.—We think the most equitable mode of receiving deposits is that adopted by the California Building and Loan Society. First, the money draws interest at one per cent. per month from the day it is lodged, provided it remains with the Company thirty days. Second, it may be drawn at pleasure, but no interest will be given unless the money is thirty days lodged. Third, the interest, if not drawn half yearly, is compounded and becomes capital and draws new interest. Fourth, as all the loans made by the Company are on city real estate, under the provisions of the Specific Contract Law the borrowers are constrained, under penalty of losing their Homesteads, to pay up their loans in gold coin, wherefore the Company cannot lose by any possible future enactments of the Legislature. Fifth, the Company guarantees on the face of the Bank book given to their depositors that their "deposits shall be repaid with interest in United States gold coin." Come what may, the shares, property, and assets, are pledged and ample to pay the depositor in gold coin. Sixth, an excellent rule, no charge is made as an "entrance fee." No charge is made either entering or departing. Morning Call.

FOR THE LADIES.

I AM indignant—and not without reason. Unlike all the other contributors to THE CALIFORNIAN, I do not write for money—I write for fame, for glory.

It was a new sensation for me last week, seeing my name in print—"CLARA MORTON"—I read it over and over, and thought how nice it looked and sounded. It is so appropriate as the colophon and final flourish of a fashion article: Morton—more ton—do you see? And Clara is a nice name too. It sounds honest, and has a certain significancy besides. Behold in me the de-Clara-tion of woman's supremacy as well as independence. Talk of woman's rights! I tell you she has more than rights—she has privileges, and immunities—and it is only right that she should have them, for she has her sorrows as well—sorrows to which man is a stranger.

I can't say I agree with Mrs. Cuppy—and I must say I wish that such women were not taken as the exponents of our sex. Mrs. Cuppy says that woman has a mission, and I think she has, but if Mrs. Cuppy really thought so I think she'd be at home fulfilling it instead of making us ridiculous by spouting all sorts of nonsense in public places.

But I started out by saying I was indignant, and perhaps I might as well tell why.

When I write "A slip for a ball-dress," I don't like to have it printed "A HIP for a ball-dress." I used to like THE CALIFORNIAN for its correctness, but now my respect for it is gone. I say to the editor as somebody says to somebody in one of Shakspeare's plays, "Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip." If it had only been a respectable blunder, but such an awkward, such an inexcusable one. Why, the great stupid, sprawling Alta couldn't have done worse. "A hip for a ball-dress!" how could a printer make such a mistake, and how could a proof-reader overlook it? To make a ball-dress or any other dress set well, two hips are necessary—so you see it was indeed a singular mistake. But "whatever" did Monsieur le rédacteur think I meant? Oh, but I'm provoked at him. And at the same time I feel a little pleased, for he always assumes airs of superior wisdom about things, and lectures me on graces of style, and sticks commas all through my articles as though he were planting carrots, and paragraphs my articles, and chops them up like cold meats for a cheap breakfast. Now I can crow over him a little—he doesn't know so much after all. Hip, hip—hurrah! How it may be about a hip I don't know, but he's got no eye for a ball-dress—that's certain.

Still he's in a measure pardonable, for he isn't a married man. But those wretched Alta people—I will not forgive them. Last week I printed something about the young ladies who were coming out here—how they are coming at least. And in Tuesday's great grimy bed-quilt of an Alta—it can't be called a sheet—which blacks your fingers if you handle it, and drives you crazy if you attempt to get any sense out of it—there was an article about these poor women. That there may be no mistake about the authorship they print over it "From the resident correspondent of the Alta California"—it is dated in New York. This statement occurs:

"It is said, and I have no doubt with a good deal of truth, that many of the females who came to New York to secure passage on the Continental, were, in consequence of the length of their stay in this city, coupled with the fact that they were without money, compelled to obtain a livelihood by means and in places which the finer feelings of humanity abhor."

And not satisfied with printing the infamous scandal in one part of the paper, the weak-minded young man who calls himself "Fitz Smythe," and gets up the jokes which appear among the news items—and cannot be distinguished from them—calls attention to it in another part of the paper.

"It is said, and I have no doubt with a good deal of truth," indeed! Now, do you know, not knowing who "the resident correspondent of the Alta California," writing from New York is, I feel perfectly confident that he is a wretch whom 't were base flattery to call coward. "It is said"—the on dit under cover of which all lies which stab at reputations start, you know—and then he adds that he "hasn't a doubt." These young women are coming out here to seek a home—not with us, but in a still more uncivilized country. And this creature attempts to blast their reputations in advance, with the on dit of anonymousness and his own equally worthless endorsement of sans doute. Ladies have never had any cause for liking the Alta, but now let them despise it, and if their husbands will persist in taking it, consign it to the coal-hole as soon as they get out of the house.

I'm afraid you'll think I'm angry—well I am. And though an angry man is bad enough, there is nothing on earth so unattractive as an angry woman. So let me smooth the wrinkles from my brow and harvest some of the fashions and follies I reap by the aid of my sharp scissor blades.

NEW COIFFURES.

One is of blonde hair, arranged in short puff-curls on the brow, and surmounted by a coronet of scarlet velvet dotted with pearl. A band corresponding to the coronet crosses the middle of the head, and a comb back of the same projects above a fall of short curls. The peculiarity of these ornaments is, that they do not extend to the sides of the head but form three brilliant bars on the top. The sides are full of short clustering curls, and the back hair is drawn up high from the back of the head, showing the roots at the nape of the neck, after the manner of English ladies a century ago. (Ladies who have not good "napes" can acquire them by following the recipe given in another column, headed "The Toilet," which I have appropriated bodily from The Boudoir.) There is another pretty style in blonde hair called the St. Cecelia. It consists of a row of Metternich curls on the brow. A half wreath of white violets in their leaves begins near the middle of the brow and extends along the side; the hair is combed back from the temples and puffed; the back is formed of one loop of very large braid; two ringlets hang in the centre of the loop, and two on the right side of the braid: zephyr curls on the nape of the neck. Another—demanding a classical face—curled a la Metternich on the brow, the side hair combed plainly back, showing the temples, a gloriole of apple-blossoms around the crown, and sprays descending among the curls on the brow and the knot of hair behind; said knot being curled here and there, affecting carelessness with most artistic effect.

BONNETS.

Parepa's farewell concerts in New York were largely attended by the elite, and the dressing is said to have been magnificent. I am glad to learn that not a lady's hat was in the house, except a few scattering ones in the gallery. Among the bonnets, says the Boudoir, one which particularly struck us was made of pink uncut velvet, trimmed with white blonde. It was Empire-shape, and the bandeau in front was a large leaf of Lily of the Valley, with its beautiful blossoms nestling under it as if for protection. A white tulle veil, vandyked, blonde bordered, and tasselated, was held at the right side, in the beak of a bird of paradise. The tail of the Edenic bird streaming on the left, formed at once a plume and a balance to the veil on the right. Near it was an Empire—so "Empirey" as to look like a Fanchon. "How can that be?" you ask. Imagine a small flaring front, one puff for crown, same width and following the same general outline of the front; a frill of doubled satin for the band or bavelot, sticking up retrossé to a frightful degree. This, too, followed the sweep of the flaring front, and the whole had the effect of three puffs of satin tied a la Fanchon across the back slope of the head. We would not note this ugly bonnet, were it not significant as indicating the extent to which some ladies will go in outré lines in quest of novelty. Across the house from this was a bonnet of the same material—white satin; an Empire, too, yet so different! The front did not flare, nor yet stick close to the side of the face a la nightcap, after the manner of too many Empires; but preserved the golden mean between. It was bound in front with blue pleated velvet. The crown consisted of three puffs arranged across—each headed by a roulen of blue velvet—a blue velvet band, instead of curtain. A bunch of white margarites, yellow-hearted and silver-leaved, adorned the left side. The face-trimming was a bandeau of blue velvet, blonde-edged, with a cluster of margarite on the right. white satin string. Divided from this by an ugly salmon-colored satin "Josephine," with heavy black velvet trimmings, was one of the prettiest, if not the prettiest, bonnets in the room—for evening wear, we mean. It was a "Marie Stuart." The front was of white satin, covered with bloude in basket design. A white tulle crown-covering, disposed in irregular plaits almost simulating gathers, was continued diagonally across to the front of the bonnet, where it was met by a large cluster of hyacinths with silver leaves. A spray of white hyacinths was continued along the lower side of the crown-covering, and hung, or rather swung, at the bottom of the crown. A blue velvet ribbon described with seeming carelessness about the same line, and hung behind near the spray. On the left side, a triangular piece of blue velvet, edged on two sides with wide blonde, formed the principal ornament. From under the blonde fell a couple of ends of blue ribbon, which were carelessly knotted. A baudeau of blue velvet, and the large cluster of hyacinths before mentioned, formed the face-trimming, though the large cluster was so arranged that it did duty also as outside bouquet. Strings of white silk, frosted with silver.

A PICTURESQUE TOILET.

At a ball recently given by the Empress Carlotta, at Vera Cruz, many picturesque toilets were exploited. Her Majesty wore a white silk jupon, over which was looped an elegant tunic of Scotch plaid in brilliant colors. Her head-dress consisted of three bandeaux of plaid ribbons, the front puffs and curls, the back in Alexandrine curls, arranged into loose coils, fastened with knots of plain ribbon.

THE SPACE A WOMAN IS ENTITLED TO.

An important decision has been rendered in England, which determines that a diameter of seven feet is not unreasonably large for a lady's hoop skirt. A lady, walking along the street in London, caught her dress on a nail of a packing box, which a merchant had left on the sidewalk, and sued for damages. The merchant showed that the box occupied only three feet on the inner side of the sidewalk, and that seven feet were left for the lady, and claimed that the accident was due to her negligence. But the court decided in favor of the lady, holding that seven feet was not an unreasonable space for her to cover. To this decision I wish to call the attention of our merchants who leave boxes with nails sticking out on the sidewalks. I am little, but for the future I shall claim seven feet "in the clear" for my pathway. And I have several suits for damages already cut out.

A CLEVER ENIGMA.

The following clever enigma will perhaps amuse some of my lady friends. It is not very difficult—and let me do the friend whom I have so abused about that slip—I mean that hip—the justice of saying that he solved it in less than two minutes:

"First find out a word which doth silence proclaim,
Which backwards and forwards is always the same.
Then next you must find out a feminine name
Which backwards and forwards is always the same.
An act or a writing on parchment, whose name
Both backwards and forwards is always the same.
A fruit that is rare, whose botanical name
Read backwards and forwards is always the same.
A note used in music, which time doth proclaim,
And backwards and forwards is always the same.
Their initials connected a title will frame,
That is justly the due of a fair married dame,
Which backwards and forwards is always the same."

WOMEN WRITERS IN ITALY.

Who says that ladies do nothing for literature? It seems that Italian Signoras and Signorinas have laid aside their daggers and taken up the pen.

A letter from Florence, the new capital of Italy, in speaking of Italian authors and writers, says: "I have been rather surprised to learn that the other sex have a large representation in letters. I have before me now a list of sixty female writers who are to contribute to a New-Year's book to be published at Venice; and, large as the list is for a country in which only two hundred and ten females in a thousand can read, my personal knowledge of female writers enables me to extend the number to more than one hundred. Madame Enrichetta Caraccialo, an ex-nun, excited quite a sensation last year by her disclosures of the secrets of monastic life, which have been translated into English, French, and German. She is expected to 'continue the subject' this year."

MEASURING DROPS IN MEDICINE.

And now, having given so much about the ornamental, I may as well end off with something useful. Doctors tell mothers to give their children so many drops of such a medicine. But Chambers' Journal says here comes a very remarkable question: are the drops the same size, whether they succeed each other rapidly or slowly? Most of us say, yes, if all the other conditions remain the same; but our learned experamentalist says no. He arranges his apparatus (which he calls a stagometer or drop-measurer) in such a way that he could make the drops of cocoanut oil fall from the little ivory ball at intervals varying from one-third of a second up to twelve seconds. He finds that the drops are twice as large and twice as heavy in the first instance as in the last; that is, when the drops succeed each other more rapidly, they are individually larger than when they fall slowly, amounting actually to double when the difference is as great as that above stated. The Lady Bountiful and Mrs. Nurse need not be troubled with a scientific explanation of the fact—how it depends on the time which the gravitation of the drop has to overcome the adhesion between the oil and the ivory ball; but they were very much concerned in knowing that when they administer medicine "as the fore," in so many drops per dose, the quantity will vary according to the interval of time between the drops. If they hurry, by dropping too much, they may administer thirty drops to baby instead of twenty, and then—we draw a veil over the consequences. Even medical practitioners themselves are cautioned. "A pharmaceutist who administers one hundred drops of a liquid at the rate of three drops per second may give half as much again as one who measures the succession at the rate of one drop in two seconds." Another caution to the dispensers of drops: Look to the size of the neck and lips of the phial containing medicines; if the vessel is thick and rounded at the spot from which the drops are made to fall, rely upon it that the drops themselves will be individually larger than when a thin-lipped phial is used.

And I wish to suggest that gentlemen, in drinking, perhaps had better look to the contents of their glasses as well as to the thickness of their rims, for, otherwise, they may perhaps get "a drop too much," which is quite as bad for men as for babies.

CLARA MORTON.

ON CHLORIS WALKING IN THE SNOW.

[1654.]

I saw fair Chloris walk alone,
When feathered rain came softly down;
Then Jove descended from his tower,
To woo her in a silver shower.
The wanton snow flew to her breast,
Like little birds unto their nest,
But overcome with whiteness there
For grief it thawed into a tear,
Then falling down her garment hem,
To deck her, froze into a gem.

DRESS AND ITS CRITICS.

IT has recently become popular, if not fashionable, to promulgate diatribes against the extravagant toilets of American women. On the other hand, many foreigners have openly remarked, and not a few natives more quietly observed, a growing inattention to dress, a tendency to shabbiness and sloveliness, on the part of American men. The misogynist would probably explain at once that the former phenomenon was the direct cause of the latter; the lords of creation cannot attire themselves properly because the ladies of creation —their wives and daughters—spend all the money for their own adornment. But the complaint against female extravagance is as old as imperial Rome, nay, as republican Athens: it has often coincided with the greatest displays of male dandyism; and besides, this hypothesis omits all consideration of unmarried men.

Many of the distinctive features of modern male dress may be explained on the obvious principle of convenience and common sense. Take, for instance, the trousers of to-day as compared with the breeches of our great-grandfathers. By-gone wits, in various languages, have handed down to us several descriptions of the beaux in former centuries getting into their breeches; an operation which took nearly as much time and trouble as it now does to launch a man-of-war. For a later example take the cloak. Men by no means old enough to be grandsires can remember when they sported the "full circle," with its dozen yards or threabouts of blue cloth. Elegant and graceful it was, and, for a carriage ride to a full-dress party, very convenient, but for all other purposes very inconvenient, wherefore it has everywhere given place to some form of great-coat. Even the "stove-pipe" hat is gradually yielding to the "wide-awake."

Influences like these affect all nations; but something further seems to be at work among ourselves. It would hardly be safe to accept as gospel the dicta of all foreigners, such as Prince Napoleon's friend, who asserted that tailors proper were unknown in the land: "the American buys his clothes at a slop-shop and wears the same suit till it is worn out;" or the more recent writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes, who says that the millionaires of St. Louis dress like hodmen, and the only decently attired males in the West are the professional gamblers; but, after paring down these exaggerations, there is a very positive amount of truth in the charge, and it is the more singular from the fact that, till within a very few years, Americans were noted for the very opposite quality, too great attention to dress. (Vide Thackeray's "Kicklebury's on the Rhine," and almost any foreign visitor's book between 1840 and 1860.)

Shall we say that this change is merely another illustration of our national tendency to run from one extreme to another? If so, why do not the women participate in it to a greater extent? Or is it a necessary result of war? Hardly; for the war has not put down equipages, or dinners, or many things that cost quite as much as a man's wardrobe. Besides, the deficiency is one of care rather than expense; a lack of wash-tub and brush, rather than of new broadcloth. Still, war prices may well have had their share in the result. A comparatively minor expense may change all a man's habit of dress. If he has to pay three dollars instead of one for his dress-gloves, he will begin to economize in them, and, from wearing shabby gloves, he comes rapidly to neglect other details.

One of the main causes of negligence in dress doubtless is the increasing size of our cities and the want of any decent transport for persons of moderate means. Men will not dress themselves carefully to go to places of public resort if they have no reasonable prospect of making a cleanly voyage thither; hence the very rusty appearance presented by the pit, not merely of our best theatres, but even of the opera. Another is the increasing pressure of the public demands upon every man whose labor is of any value to the public. He is obliged to take the shortest cut to his business, in dress as in all other things. He cannot afford the time necessary to take precautions against soiling his clothes. He does not change them or buy new ones as often as he ought to for the same reason.

But whatever be the cause of the evil, we decidedly maintain that it is not inherent in the modern shape and style of dress: and we cannot join in the condemnation of that dress often uttered under artistic pretences. Thus, it is frequently said that our attire is "unpicturesque," which really means little more than that we are too familiar with it. Horner praised the beauty of a formal garden because the "uncivilization" of his day made it a rare object. The want of color is a commonly urged fault; but we must remember that grave tints for gentlemen's wear are no modern invention; the Spaniards adopted them centuries ago. One strong objection to colored upper garments, is their glaring shabbiness when ever so little worn or faded; an old claret-colored coat, for instance, is ten times seedier to view than an old black one.

But then, there is no need of men's wearing either a claret-colored coat or a black one. The love of black broadcloth is, perhaps, that weakness of the Yankee character which is best known to foreigners, and has afforded foreign tourists most opportunities of making little jokes in their diaries upon the personal appearance of the American traveller. Not that there is any inherent impropriety in wearing black. On the contrary, there is, perhaps, no color so suitable to the great mass of men. In some sorts of material—velvet, for instance—it furnishes the most becoming suit for almost any kind of wear ever devised by the wit of tailor. But the fact is, it is a bad working or lounging color, the worst that ever a man amused himself or did business in. The consequence is that it has been discarded in Europe for morning wear, and is now there mainly restricted to clergymen, notaries, and tradesmen in their best clothes, and gentlemen in deep mourning. A person presenting himself at a great London house to make a morning call in a full suit of black, would, probably, be received by the footman as a person who had come to take my lady's measure for a pair of boots; and in Paris a flaneur who appeared on the Boulevards in such melancholy attire would be set down by his friends as being engaged in a "lark" or an intrigue, or, in fact, as having some special reason for disguising himself.

And this conventional prohibition of the color has, like nearly every other fashion in modern dress—such, for instance, as the low collars and light cravats of our day—a certain basis in common sense and convenience. Modern life is not the stiff and stately thing that it was when Vandyke and Velasquez painted noblemen and grandees in lace and ruffles and black velvet doublets. Men, even gentlemen, are now-a-days all actively engaged either in business or in pleasure. They are either hard at work in offices, or in the fields, or in libraries. They flit about muddy streets on foot, ride in dirty hacks, or stand in dirtier cars, exposed to mud, dust, tobacco smoke, and all the other plagues of modern life. They are constantly rubbing against something with back or elbows. Consequently, the grand requisite in their clothes is that they shall not soil easily, show the dust readily, or wear out rapidly. Black cloth, however, grows seedy-looking sooner than most other colors, shows dust sooner, and, therefore, has been most wisely discarded by "good society," except for evening dress and state occasions, when dress is a subject of great care and a matter of importance. Through a large portion of the United States, however, this distinction is unknown, black broadcloth being considered the proper thing to wear to church; at home it is considered the proper thing to wear on all occasions when a man wishes to appear "dressed," no matter at what hour of the day. Consequently, when the untravelled American goes to Europe, he arrays himself carefully in the usual color, and appears at all the railway stations and hotels as black as midnight.

At the South, where, owing to the wild life led by most of the population, one would expect black to be rarely seen, it is, or rather was before the war—we presume now any color is welcome—the color par excellence which a "gentleman" was bound to wear, and, as every white man is ex officio a gentleman, everybody who could afford it wore black, the other colors being left somewhat scornfully to stage-drivers and such like. Every keeper of a wretched tavern in the Southwest did his best to dawn on his guests every morning in a full suit of black and patent-leather boots, and many a Northern traveller will remember being consigned to the state-room over the boiler on a Mississippi steamboat, owing to the shabby appearance which he presented in a good suit of travelling grey to the "polite and gentlemanly clerk," who sat behind the window black as a crow, but resplendent with diamonds. The fact is, that as there is no country in which there is so much work and so much travelling done as in this, in which men's lives are so intensely active, there is none in which black broadcloth as an everyday dress should be more carefully avoided by everybody who does not wish to look both dirty and shabby most of his time. The same remark applies to patent-leather and prunella boots with patent-leather toes, to which third-rate "swells," and, for some inscrutable reason, young farmers, most of whose time is passed in muddy or dusty fields or roads, are greatly addicted.

Long hair is another piece of personal ornamentation which, in old countries, is being gradually laid aside by the class which devotes most attention to personal appearance. And yet amongst us those who, being least able to take care of their hair, are least entitled to wear it long, are the very men who cling most tenaciously to it. It may be laid down as a general rule, with regard to all matters of dress, that a man's first duty is to be clean, and to look clean and neat. Therefore, if he insists on having ringlets flown on his shoulders, he ought either to keep them clean himself or have a valet to do it, or ought not to expose them to the dust and dirt of everyday life. Moreover, if he considers it his duty to grease them every day, he ought not to let them lie on the collar of his coat, as the shiny appearance assumed by woollen cloth after repeated applications of pomatum is not pleasing, to say the least. By soldiers and men actively engaged during the day, with any real love of work and any real dislike of dirt, the scissors ought to be unsparingly applied to their "luxuriant locks," which ought to be kept at such a length that a brush and a sponge will keep them in order. In other words, we as a nation, ought to be as remarkable for the shortness of our hair as we are for its length.

Timothy Titcomb, in one of the bits of advice which he gives to young men, lays it down somewhere, that there should be in every man's dress some central point, from which everything else should radiate, and this point he declares to be the shirt-front, which he would, doubtless, have of expansive dimensions and snowy whiteness. But in this Timothy must have spoken without due consideration. Snowy linen and plenty of it is a pleasing spectacle, but it is a species of display in which nobody should indulge who has not time enough or money enough to change very frequently, or whose occupation is of a nature to soil or ruffle his shirt-front rapidly. And yet, in this matter, as in the matter of hair, we are apt to find that those who can bestow least attention on their shirt-fronts are the very men who make most display of them. No class, probably, wear so few buttons in their waistcoats as street-car conductors. The fact is that workers should button well up, and, if they show any more linen than their shirt-collars, they should show only as much as they can fairly protect from being soiled. The whole question of modern dress is in fact, or ought to be, determined by the exigencies of modern life. In this, as in other things, we are growing daily more practical.—The Nation.

CURIOUS ETYMOLOGIES.

TAKE the very fertile Latin root, port. From this, among many others, we have port, meaning a gate, a harbor for ships, and a kind of wine. It came to signify a gate from the circumstance that when Romulus caused a plough furrow to be drawn to show the position of the walls of future Rome, the plough was carried over the places meant for gates. The transition from port, a gate, to port, a harbor, is easy, but from that to Port wine is not so apparent, but that species of wine was brought from what was then considered the furthest west harbor in the world—hence called Portugal or West Port, and hence Port wine. I may mention here that brandy is a contraction of brand (or burned) wine. As port is derived from the vine, so we have a very curious derivation from the fig—namely, the word sycophant, used to signify a selfish flatterer, but originally a shower of figs, which is accounted for in this wise: Once on a time, in a certate State of Greece, the Chancellor of Exchequer, if such an officer then existed, being at his wits' end how to raise ways and means for the exigencies of the Government, happily recollected that figs formed a necessary article of consumption by the people, so he resolved to put the screw on that fruit, and thereby squeeze out the needful sinews of war. Naturally, those possessed of figs tried to evade the impost by concealing their store. But persons were not found wanting ready enough to inform the Greek gaugers as to the whereabouts of these stores, and to share in the plunder. These informers got the name of sycophants, or showers of figs—a class of men not unrepresented at the present day. The word panic, signifying sudden fear without cause, is derived from Pan, the god of shepherds, and the original inventor of Pan's pipes. He was of monstrous size, partly like a man, partly like a goat. This homo-hirsute (as good a word as hermaphrodite, any day in the week.) seen leaping along the tops of the mountains, inspired the shepherds with great but groundless terror, because they were under his special protection—hence a sudden fear without cause is called a panic.

When a person sought election to any office in the Roman republic, he had to appear in the forum wearing a white tunic, in order that the citizens might recognize their candidate, which term is still applied to a person seeking any office, though the word simply means appearing white. The word pagan originally signified the inhabitant of a village, and came to have its present meaning from the circumstance that the propagators of Christian doctrines first addressed themselves to large towns, as the speediest means of disseminating the truths they were sent to teach among the greatest number. Consequently, the inhabitants of the remoter villages remained longer in heathen darkness than the citizens of towns—hence a pagan and a heathen became terms of of equal import. Those dreaded devotees, trained unhesitatingly to execute the fatal fiat of the Old Man of the Mountain, either upon themselves or on others, were called hesch-heschins, from which is derived the word assassin. In our own language there are some words very curiously formed; for instance, the plant foxglove, apparently the fox's glove. Now, though Reynard is known to have a keen eye to his own comfort and interest, he cannot be charged with the dandyism of covering his fox-clad paws with party-colored gloves. There was, however, believed to be a race of beings who delighted to deck themselves with such ornaments as the woods and glens could supply; these were the fairies, otherwise good-folk. The plant was termed the fairies', or good-folk's glove, shortened into folk's glove, and again contracted into foxglove. By a similar process, the daisy has been contracted from day's eye, or eye of the day—a most appropriate name for this favorite little flower. It is well known that bread and highly-flavored toasted cheese form one of the most esteemed viands among the Welsh. Being imported thence by English tourist, the pabulum and its condiments were together called a Welsh rarebit. By pronouncing these two syllables rapidly, and, in English fashion, eliding the middle r, you will get a Welsh rabbit, with little trouble and no expense.

Names of men who have rendered themselves famous or infamous by their deeds, or misdeeds, are formed into words expressive of similar conduct in others. The story of Tantalus furnishes a good instance of this sort. He, for divulging the secrets of the gods, was placed up to the chin in water, yet so fixed as in that position to die of thirst; hence, when one is almost within reach of something he desires much, yet cannot attain, he is said to be tantalized. The German general, Merode, who rendered himself universally feared and detested by subsisting his troops on supplies forced from the people among whom they were quartered, suggested the word marauder. For a word of similar formation we are indebted to the genius of Mr. William Burke, who, in the former part of this century, favored the West Port of Edinburgh with his residence and exploits, and, by his ingenious method of putting troublesome subjects to silence, first suggested the idea —greatly expanded since—of Burking a question.

The names of many articles in common use are derived from the places where they were first known, or whence imported; thus, we have calico from Calicut, damask from Damascus, muslin from Mosul, tobacco from Tabac, coffee from Caffa, the bayonet from Bayonne, sherry from Xeres, Cordovan leather from Cordova, delft-ware and Gouda cheese from towns of the same name in Holland, etc. The feminine occupations of mantua-maker and milliner are recent imports from Mantua and Milan. It is not very long since the mysteries of these arts were understood and practiced by men; one of Falstaff's ragged recruits, and the most valiant of the corps, having been a woman-tailor.

In Glasgow and London are two streets, which, though pronounced differently, are identical in derivation—the former, a wretched pile of rickety buildings, called the Rattanraw; the latter, Rotton Row. These are derived from route au roi, the route or road of the king. Anthony Trollope mentions a curious instance of word-degeneracy. One of Oliver Cromwell's Ironsides, after the civil wars, settled down as landlord of a village inn. True to his training, he selected a scriptural motto for his signboard, on which he inscribed the words, "God encompasseth us." The words became obliterated through time, but something of their sound remained; and when, long after, the signboard was renewed by a new landlord, the motto reappeared, with a suitable device in the centre, as the "Goat and Compasses.'—Chambers' Journal.

National Peculiarities.—Edmund About says: At the age of twenty-five an American has tried a dozen ways of life, made four fortunes, a bankruptcy, and two campaigns, pleaded a cause, preached a religion, killed six men with a revolver, enfranchised a negress and conquered an island. An Englishman has passed two examinations, been attached to an embassy, founded a counting-house, converted a Catholic, made the tour of the world, and read the complete works of Sir Walter Scott. A Frenchman has rhymed a tragedy, written in two journals, received three sword wounds, attempted two suicides, troubled the peace of fourteen husbands, and changed his political opinions nineteen times over. A German has scarred the faces of fourteen of his intimate friends, swallowed sixty tons of beer and the philosophy of Hegel, sung eleven thousand couplets, compromised a maid servant, smoked a million of pipes, and been concerned in two revolutions. The Romish prince has done nothing, learnt nothing, suffered nothing. The grate of a cloister is thrown open, a young girl with no more experience than himself is led forth, and these two innocents proceed to kneel before a priest, who licenses them to begin a fresh stock of innocents.

Turtles.—The Chinese gourmands have, it is recorded, a method of cooking turtles that even a London alderman would esteem rare. A turtle is put into water at first only moderately warm, and covered over with a lid just sufficient to admit the animal all but the head and neck. Within reach of his mouth is placed a bowl filled with highly spiced wine. As the water gets warmer the turtle gets thirsty, and is thus induced to drink the spiced wine, and with more and more eagerness, until he becomes so completely saturated with it that when cooked every part of his body is impregnated with a delicate flavor of wine and spices that is highly prized.

There is an amusing story of an Irish reporter who, having fallen asleep while Mr. Wilberforce was upon his thin legs in the House of Commons, was told by his mischievous companions that the philanthropist had been sounding the virtues of the potato and lamenting that he had not in his youth been nourished upon that homely vegetable. The poor man fell plumply into the snare, and the next morning he amused the British breakfast-table by printing the kindly gentleman's praises of the great Hibernian root.

THE TOILET.

HOW TO TAKE CARE OF THE HAIR.

As the ladies of this country consider the growth of hair upon the upper lip, arms, and on the back of the neck, to be detrimental to beauty, those who are troubled with such physical indications of good health and vital stamina, have long had recourse to rusma or depilatories for removing it. We must, however, caution our fair readers not to apply them to the little tufts of hair which grow on moles. The most simple depilatory is moistened quicklime, but it is less energetic than the following:

Depilatory Powder.—Best slaked lime, 3 lbs. Orpiment, in powder, ½ lb.

Mix the materials by means of a drum sieve; preserve the same in well-corked bottles.

Directions for use.—Mix the powder with sufficient water to render it of a creamy consistency; lay it upon the hair for about five minutes, or until its caustic action upon the skin renders it necessary to be removed. A similar process to shaving is then to be gone through, but instead of using a razor, operate with an ivory or bone paper-knife; then wash the part with plenty of water, and apply a little cold cream, made as follows:

Almond oil, ½ pint; Rose water, ¼ pint; White wax, 1 oz.; Spermaceti, 1 oz.; Oil rose, ½ drachm.

In a well-glazed thick porcelain vessel, which should be deep in preference to shallow, and capable of holding twice the quantity of cream that is to be made, place the wax and sperm. Now put the jar into a bath of boiling water. When these are melted, add the oil, and again subject the whole to heat until the flocks of wax and sperm are liquified. Now remove the jar and contents, and very gradually add the rose water, stirring the mixture rapidly all the while with a perforated ladle. An egg beater will answer the purpose admirably. When the whole of the water has been incorporated, add the oil of rose, and pour the cream into jars for use. This makes a beautiful snow-white cream—which will keep for one or two years if kept from the air.

We need hardly inform our readers that, with respect to the hair, particular cleanliness is absolutely necessary. It must be thoroughly brushed and combed every morning and evening. The brush should be brought into requisition at each time of dressing, or the dust will accumulate upon the long hair of ladies.

If the hair does not require thickening or strengthening, the free use of the brush, the occasional use of rosemary hair wash to cleanse the hair, and a liberal use of oil or pomade, will keep it in a high state of perfection.

Having well cleansed the hair, a liberal use of pomade, or oil, will tend much to thicken and strengthen it. One of the best unguents for the hair that is made is termed "Philocome," the name of which is a compound of Greek and Latin, signifying a friend to the hair:

White Wax, 5 ozs.; Almond Oil, 2 lbs.; Oil Bergamot, 1 oz.; Oil Lemon, ½ oz.; Oil Lavender, ¼ oz.; Oil Cloves, 1 drachm.

Melt the wax in the oil of almonds by a water bath at as low a temperature as possible; stir the mixture as it cools, first adding the essential oils. Do not pour it out into jars until it is nearly cool enough to set, and let the jars it is to be poured into be slightly warmed.

PERFUMED OILS FOR THE HAIR.

The basis of these oils is either almond, olive oil, or oil of ben. Whichever is used should be perfectly fresh, and of the best quality.

Macassar Oil.—This oil is made by the natives in the island. It is obtained by boiling the kernel of the fruit of a tree resembling the walnut, called in Malay badean. The oil is mixed with other ingredients, and has somewhat of a creosote smell. But the Macassar oil sold in this country has probably no relation to the above, except in name. The following will produce a good article of Macassar oil:

Olive oil, 1 lb.; Oil of Origanum, 1 drachm; Oil of Rosemary, 1 drachm. Mix.

Rose Hair Oil is made of fine olive or almond oil, 1 pint; oil of rose, 20 drops. If required red, color the oil with alkanet root, and strain before adding the perfume.

BANDOLINE FOR KEEPING THE HAIR IN PLACE.

Mucilage of quince seeds is used—mucilage of picked Irish moss, carefully strained, is said to answer still better. The following is particularly recommended:

Gum Tragacanth (finest picked,) 1 oz.; reduce it to a coarse powder; rose-water, 1 pint.

Put them into a wide-mouthed vessel and shake them together for two or three days, then strain with gentle pressure through fine linen.

The world over, the practice of dyeing the hair is adopted by persons who have gray hair. The following is an excellent recipe for hair dye:

Powdered Litharge, 2 lbs.; Quick-lime, ½ lb.; Calcined Magnesia, ½ lb.

Slake the lime, using as little water as possible to make it disintegrate, then mix the whole. Directions for use: Mix the powder with enough water to form a thick, creamy fluid; with the aid of a small brush completely cover the hair to be dyed with this mixture. To dye a light brown, allow it to remain on the hair four hours; dark brown, eight hours; black, twelve hours. As the dye does not act unless it is moist, it is necessary to keep it so by wearing an oiled silk cap. After the hair is dyed, the refuse must be thoroughly washed from the head with plain water. When dry, the hair must be oiled.

An excellent application for the hair, which is also a remedy for skin diseases, blemishes of the complexion, etc., is as follows: take of precipitated sulphur and sugar of lead, each 1 drachm; rose water, 4 ozs.; mix well.

This is not an instantaneous dye, but should be applied twice a day till it gradually restores the color to its natural shade. The addition of half an ounce of glycerine will take from it a drying property which is undesirable.—Boudoir.

THE DANGER OF NEGLECTING COLDS.

Colds are generally considered but simple things, and, as a natural consequence, are too much neglected. How often do you hear the remark: "Oh! it's only a cold?" True, only a cold; but what is being done for it? Frequently nothing. Many a long and dangerous, and sometimes fatal, fit of illness might be prevented by paying that proper attention to a cold which it so seriously demands. Most of the causes of consumption come from cold being in the first instance neglected. To many other diseases does it also give rise. In a climate where frequent changes in the temperature occur, it is impossible to avoid cold unless due precaution be observed. Persons should clothe themselves as much as possible in keeping with the temperature of the atmosphere.

Ladies are very apt to dress for going out, and then sit in a warm room for half an hour, perhaps more, if something delays them, by which perspiration is produced, and in that state from the warm house into the cold air they go. It must be remembered that to the corresponding temperature of the atmosphere do the pores close or open; a uniform temperature should be observed, as by so doing the circulation is regularly maintained. Any one leaving an atmosphere of eighty degrees, and going to one of sixty degrees, experiences a great change, and to avoid cold should be clad in such manner as to make up for the proportionate difference in the temperature. For this reason great uniformity in the temperature of the house should be observed. Change the atmosphere in the house frequently by admitting as often as possible during the day, fresh air.

Another thing to which we wish to draw attention is that of neglecting to change shoes and stockings after being out on a damp or rainy day. Though they may neither appear nor feel damp, yet they should be changed, care being observed to keep the feet always warm. As long as one is walking the circulation is kept up, no matter how wet the feet may be, but the instant you remain quiet it is checked, unless the stockings and shoes be changed. Holding the feet but a few minutes to a fire or over a register, is not sufficient, as you only by that means dry the external part of the shoe. If the feet are cold, they should be rubbed thoroughly with a rough towel until warmth has been restored, when they might be, if desired, held for a short time before the fire. Jumping out of bed and walking about on the carpet, as is too often done, should be avoided. A pair of slippers can be so placed by the bed at night, when retiring, as to be accessible on rising. New York Lancet.

How to Fall Asleep.—The great point to be gained in order to secure sleep, is escape from thought, especially from that clinging, tenacious, imperious thought, which in most cases, of wakefulness has possession of the mind. I effect this by the following simple process: "I turn my eyeballs as far to the right or left, or upward or downward, as I can without pain, and then commence rolling them slowly, with that divergence from a direct line of vision around in their sockets, and continue doing thus until I fall asleep, which occurs generally within three minutes—always within five at the most. The immediate effect of this procedure differs from that of any other I have ever heard, to procure sleep. It not merely diverts thought into a new channel, but actually suspends it. Since I became aware of this I have endeavored, innumerable times, while thus rolling my eyes, to think upon a particular subject, and even upon that which before kept me awake, but I could not. As long as they were moving around, my mind was bland. If any one doubts this, let him try the experiment for himself. I wish he would; let him pause just here and make it. I venture to assure him that, if he makes it in good faith in the manner described, the promise of 'a penny for his thoughts,' or for each of them, while the operation was in progress, will add very little to his wealth. Such being its effects, we cannot wonder that it should bring sleep to a nervous and wakeful man at night. The philosophy of the matter is very simple. A suspension of thought is to the mind what a suspension of travel or labor is to a weary body. It enjoys the luxury of rest; the strain upon its faculties is removed; it falls asleep as naturally as the farmer in his chair after toiling all day in his fields."

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. F. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1866.

A NEEDED REFORM.

OUR Legislature is busy just now with plans for the moral reformation of this most wicked community. Some time since it swung-to the doors of theatres on Sunday evenings, and sealed them with a statute. It is taking a severe stand against gambling, as well as the common school system, and there is no telling what a model and moral people we may become if our Solons only push their work of reformation to the end.

But let us make a suggestion to them. Our city abounds with cellars where women are employed and more vice is generated in one night than the sermons of a century can root out. These females, known as "pretty waiter girls" at the East, by one of those euphemisms of which our shores are so prolific are here termed "beer slingers." All the night through these cellars are open, and drunkenness and damnation are ladled out to all ages with liberal hand by the attendant women. You will see the youth, his chin yet destitute of beard, sitting cheek by jowl with a woman old and ugly enough to be his mother, drinking in moral as well as physical defilement. All the night through the screeching and howling from these places comes shrilling upon the ear like the cry of hungry hyenas. They are brothels without that certain reticence, quiet, and air of decency which brothels are compelled to maintain. What use to open church doors and close theatres on Sunday, if these foul sinks are to be kept open, week in and week out, doing their work of iniquity even upon that sacred day when honest labor is forbidden? Do away with the "pretty waiter girls"—an excellent illustration of the lucus a non lucendo is found in the phrase—and a blow is struck at the very root of the evil. Even the most persistent advocates of never employing men in any work which women can do, would perhaps consent to let waiter men pass beer and circulate cigars in a rum cellar. For the present system of pretty waiter girls substitute plain waiter boys, and the attractiveness would be gone from these institutions and morality much benefitted. And on Sundays see that they are closed altogether. If they cannot be cleared completely away with one sweep of the besom of legislation, they can at least be swept of their present most objectionable feature—hanging out women as signs. It is competent for the Legislature to enact a statute that will do away with the nuisance. A bill is before the Legislature of New York State, which forbids the employment of females in all drinking saloons, and in any concert saloon, to wait upon customers. Let our Legislature look to it and take some similar action, for we are weary of seeing them strain at gnats and swallowing such camels of wickedness.

THE Boudoir is the title of a new illustrated ladies' journal, lately started in New York. It is without exception the most successful effort of the kind ever made on this side of the Atlantic. A model of typographical excellence, it is printed upon the heaviest and whitest of paper, and in contents it is as gossippy and chatty as a whole roomful of clever women, with their tongues loosened by tea. In every respect it has the high endorsement of the fastidious "Clara Morton"—who shows her appreciation by transferring nearly the whole paper to her columns. John Swinton, one of the Times editorial corps, is proprietor. Finding that he could not get rid of his money fast enough by leaving packages of four or five thousand dollars lying around on restaurant tables, he has started a ladies' paper—but we predict a pecuniary success for the Boudoir. Mr. Swinton is just the man for the enterprise—being a noted ladies' man, familiar with all the details of fashion and feminine dress, and regarded as an authority upon such matters from which there is no appeal.

A POEM by our well-known contributor, Emilie Lawson, after crossing the Atlantic to be copied into the English papers, finds a re-reprint in Littell's Living Age. The poem is entitled "Blossom and Fruit." Originally blossoming in these columns, it has found fruit beyond the sea.

"NATION BAD" VERSE.

THE Nation of New York is a critical journal. It makes no pretension to being very lively, and sometimes we have fancied while wading through its wide, but still columns, that stagnation might be a more appropriate name. But in the field of criticism the utterances of the Nation are oracular. When a little volume of verse made up of selections from the fugitive pieces of California poets came into its hands, the Nation assumed an especially owlish air and disposed of the contributors in the briefest but most positive way. It dealt with the sweet singers of our coast as an owl might with canary birds—a few snaps of its bill and they were all disposed of finally and forever. This one, it said, is a real poet, this one is not, and still another is a half-poet. For some time we remained rather puzzled as to what the Nation's ideas of poetry could be: we are glad to find them illustrated in the following piece of original verse which we copy from its columns:

STRUGGLES FOR LIFE.

I STARTED up one winter's night,
All in a mighty flutter,
And vowed that I thenceforth would earn
My salt and bread and butter.

And first I thought I'd keep a school,
And then I thought I wouldn't;
For cause I hate to try to rule,
And cause I knew I couldn't.

And then I thought I'd keep a store
In some great town or city;
For if I couldn't measure silks
And laces 't was a pity.

But standing on my feet all day
Was more than pleased my fancy;
I feared to sink into my shoes,
Like Reuben's sister Nancy.

So then I thought I'd write a book,
And be a famous poet;
This was the maddest scheme of all;
But then I didn't know it.

I went and bought a pound of tea,
Green as I could desire,
And made it strong, and drank it hot,
My genius to inspire.

It scalded as I forced it down,
But I was bent on trying
My project through, though it was hard
To keep myself from crying.

And when the hot and bitter dose
Was resolutely swallowed,
I sat all night with pen in hand,
And not one stanza followed.

Oh, it was hard! and on the theme
I do not dare to tarry;
My hopes were crushed, my courage gone—
What could I do but marry?

And so, when Reuben asked again
If he his wife might make me,
I really felt relieved, and said,
"Oh! yes, I thank you; take me."

The Nation pays for its poetry. The above gem probably cost it any amount from five to twenty-five dollars. With our verse writers the labor is one of love, and the only reward they ask or expect is an occasional half-line of deprecation in some critical journal like the Nation. But never a week goes by that THE CALIFORNIAN does not reject better verse than the Nation's "Struggles for Life." We print the poem at length for the encouragement of those of our local bards who did not win that journal's praise, and also as a proof of the correctness of the assertion which we ventured a few weeks since, that none of the original poems which have appeared in THE CALIFORNIAN'S columns would have been refused if contributed to the critical journals of the East. We are not certain however, that the journal which publishes the above verses would have recognized a real poem if presented to its pages. But we rest happy in the belief that the Nation's standard of poetry is not that of the nation at large.

GEORGE T. BROMLEY, one of the best known residents of this city or any county, is to be the proprietor of the new hotel at Santa Cruz. The widow's cruise in that vicinity will probably be the Widow Cliquot's. We rejoice to hear that Mr. Bromley is relieved from duty at San José, and that he will soon be standing guard upon the coast. For a more genial gentleman, or one who is, as he looks, every inch a landlord, is seldom met with. The new hotel is to be called the Pacific Ocean House, and will probably open about the middle of March. As proprietor of the "Continental," in the adjoining colony of San José, we do not know whether or not Mr. Bromley made money, but he certainly made reputation; in any event, we trust that he will retire from his Santa Cruz wealthy though he goes there without a Continental.

ONE hundred and fifty lawyers in this city have been indicted for practising their profession without licenses. License or not, was ever a lawyer seen that had not the sense to lie?

AMUSEMENTS.

MAGUIRE'S Opera House, during the week, has been occupied with the Sears-Hayne adaptation, called The Irish Mother, or The Wild-Brier Path. Miss Crampton filled the principal part, and made a Wild Irish Mother indeed. Properly managed, the character is a good one, tender traits and the strong current of natural affection underlying and relieving the coarser fibres of the child-stealer's nature, but Miss Crampton succeeded in making the character repulsive. Too much steam is not good for a boiler. And true power is reticent, husbanding its strength. The plot of the piece is powerful, and it abounds in situations almost to redundancy. After the test afforded by the first night's representation, it would have been judicious to cut down the dialogue, hasten the action, and bring on the dénouement more rapidly. Killing the Irish Mother a half hour earlier would have added materially to the interest of the piece. As it is, dying in a rocking-chair with a long-winded speech, the murderer discussing abstract social questions with her the while, no doctor summoned, and the police and by-standers looking on disinterestedly, as if inspired by the conviction that it is not their funeral—that is a trifle unnatural. Thorne's acting throughout was excellent—excellent. Leman was up to his reputation, and that is saying a good deal. Franks did "Oliver Sidney" very well. Mrs. Franks, as "Helen," played to the best of her ability, but her rendition of the role points the moral that the management of this theatre at the present time is sadly in want of a walking lady. Barry was Barry to perfection, but, without being a close student of Chesterfield, he might know that a policeman generally does not walk into a nobleman's drawing-room hat on head—James Yellowplush would relieve him of it at the hall door. Harry Jackson's "Pibroch" would have been capital, had he not marred it by those tricks of costume to which we have before called attention. What need of the blackened mouth? and what justification for coming in at the death in the garb which he assumes? These bids to the galleries are what the artist should avoid. Some actors manage to win boisterous rounds of applause by allowing a few inches of linen to protrude from the rear of their trousers in an unconscious way, but more are offended than are pleased by the display. Aside from the fault which we have indicated, and to which he is prone, Mr. Jackson's acting in the piece was so good, especially in the pugilistic scene, that we regret it was marred at all. Miss Gass was very good as the rather fast young lady of Pibroch's fancy. Last evening, the piece was announced with Mrs. Edwin as the Irish Mother. The character, we think, will do better in her hands. This afternoon and evening, The Irish Mother in its re-cast. On Monday, Harry Courtaine puts in an appearance in the new play of Marcillac, the Honest Man. Miss Thorne, whose Sacramento engagement is ended, is underlined for appearance very soon.

At the Metropolitan, on Monday and Tuesday, Sam was performed—Percy as "Sam," and Roundy as the jumping "Jenkinsini." Roundy replaced Percy much more successfully than the latter did Wheatleigh. Wednesday evening, Neighbor Jackwood and The Elves were given, and on Thursday evening the long promised Bronze Horse was trotted out. This is indeed a spectacular piece, and it came very appropriately to assist in the celebration of the Chinese New Year's, for it is full of Chinese characters, and the scene is laid in the floweriest of kingdoms. It is capitally put upon the stage, and does additional credit to a management which has before proved itself eminently capable. Miss Chapman—one of the best artistes that ever stepped upon the San Francisco stage—lighted up the occasional obscurity of the piece by her really inimitable acting. Mrs. Judah, another lady who can never lose her hold upon popular favor, was as mirth-provoking as possible, and, in conjunction with Mr. Leach, kept the audience in continual good humor. Mrs. Brown sat her bronze horse as though she were indeed the Head Centaur we have heard so much of lately, and dressed and sang with her usual taste. Miss Hinckley made a charming "Margelia," her enchanted Princess proving an excellent companion role to the enchanting Prince which she lately played. Mrs. Thorne, with her pretty petite figure, fresh face and voice, and graceful dancing, contributed her full share to the success. Of the Buislays it is not necessary to say a word, for in their line of business it is now acknowledged that they have no superiors. The chorus was effective and good, but we do think that Mr. Tibbetts could have improved upon the corps de ballet, though probably a scarcity of material from which to select was more at fault than his taste. There was, as usual, some dragginess on the first representation, but we look to see the Bronze Horse have a long and successful run. On Monday, Mr. Tibbetts takes a benefit, which has been tendered him by the entire company, and, if the attendance is to equal his deserts, a wing might as well be added to the Metropolitan for the occasion.

THE Temperance Legion have adopted as their motto the little remark of Grant about intending to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer. One swallow, we fear, would scarcely make a summer for these followers of Aquarius.

NEW BOOKS FROM ROMAN'S

MEMORIES of the Colfax party are renewed by the appearanee of a very handsome volume entitled Across the Continent, by Samuel Bowles. Mainly eomposed of the letters whieh that gentleman eontributed to the Springfield Republican, a few essays from other pens upon Mormoning and mining, and extracts from a few of the speeehes whieh Mr. Colfax was eompelled to make during his tour, are added as "supplementary papers." One's first wonder, on opening the book, is how the author found time in his hurried trip, and amid the eonstant boring to whieh the whole party was subjeeted, to use his eyes so well. But a praetieal newspaper man is generally able to take snap shots at flying faets, and bag about all that are going. We admire the kindness of heart whieh Mr. Bowles shows in not publishing the names of the toadies and tormenters who pursued him, though perhaps they would have been pleased with a mention. We have reason to congratulate ourselves that the sins of the few who insisted upon dragging "our distinguished guests" through the eleemosynary institutions of the city, to say nothing of the Magdalen Asylum, are not visited upon the whole eommunity. Glaneing over the pages of this exeellent book, brimming with valuable information regarding the resourees of our State, we eannot but refleet what a most admirable work the author eould have produeed, had he been left alone by our Standing Committee of Eminent Bores. In the main Mr. Bowles' statements are eorreet, though his comments upon "society" in San Franeiseo must have been gathered, we fancy, from hearsay, rather than from aetual observation, and we are sorry that he went away with the impression that it is "the cussedest plaee for women" extant. We also regret that a little more time had not been devoted to the revision of the letters, as the effeet would have been to divest the book of a certain newspaper flavor, whieh does not add to its merit as a literary production.

Winning His Way, by Charles Carleton Coffin, is an interesting and instruetive little book for boys. Paul, the hero, wins his way through the world, and grows up to an honorable manhood, of eourse he enlists in the Union army, has a love passage, eomes out alive, and the eurtain falls while Paul is leading a fair Virginia towards the altar.

In The Belton Estate, we have the usual novel whieh Anthony Trollope makes. The eharacters that we meet are all modern ones, and eonventional to a eharm—they dress and conduet themselves precisely like the thousand-and-one people we meet in every-day life. Their eonversation eonsists of the mild platitudes that we hear in drawing-rooms and at dinner tables; no one laughs rudely, displays any great emotion, or in any way violates deeorum. Deeidedly, Mr. Anthony Trollope is not a novelist of the sensational sehool. Sometimes we eannot forbear wishing that he would light up a little, even if it beeame neeessary to burn a small quantity of blue fire.

Edna Dean Proetor publishes a pretty little volume of poems, most of which originally appeared in the New York Independent. Miss Proetor's verse is eharaeterized by musieal flow and felicity of language rather than by originality of thought, but these merits alone are suffieient to entitle her to consideration in the present reign of ragged rhythm. All women are not Brownings, and Miss Proetor's sweet and tender singing should not be made to suffer by unealled for comparison with the treble bass of any of the feminine wonders of the world.

Wheeler's Dictionary of the Noted Names of Fiction, is a compilation of mueh that is eurious in literature. We are not aware that such a work has ever before been attempted, and certainly one was much needed. Most persons understand, for instance, what dining with the Barmeeide means, though unaequainted perhaps with the origin of the phrase, but an invitation to a dinner with Duke Humphrey might be aeeepted in sober earnest by many very well informed people. The author has been at special pains to give the proper spelling and pronunciation of the names, and this in itself eonstitutes a very valuable feature of the book.

Winifred Bertram is an Ameriean reprint of one of those quiet tales of English life, whieh find favor with a very respectable class of readers. A religious aroma pervades the book well calculated to please those who like no story that is destitute of a pious bias. It is by the author of The Schonberg-Cotta Family.

Seribner publishes a supplement to the Cyclopædia of American Literature, aiming to bring the work down to the latest dates It is still, however, very ineomplete, and little the wonder, when every morning brings another author, and every author brings out a dozen books. William V. Wells, formerly of this city, whose recent very sueeessful Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams certainly entitles him to the honor, finds a plaee in the supplement: but where is John S. Hittell, whose Resources of California is by no means the least valuable book that the century has produced?

[For the Californian.]

COQUETTE.

HER heart was like a honey-comb
As full of bees as it could hold;
And I was never happy there,
Although my lodge was gold.

Forever bringing sweets to her—
For sooth a not unpleasant toil—
Was sadder when I also seemed
A portion of her spoil.

And when I wearied with the task,
She truly hesitated not
To thrust me from her busy hive
And warn me from the spot.

I never can repay the slight
Until that dame's undoubted age
Shall prove it profitless to swarm,
Unless she can engage

Some youthful queen to take her place
And settle in her gilded home,
That bees may once again delight
Her heart, the honey-comb.

Then I will laugh before her face,
While I, in mocking her decay,
Hang on some sainted lily's neck
And woo her soul away:

Though roses beckon me to come,
I will not heed their am'rous play;
But clasp my lily's silver throat
And kiss her life away.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

[For the Californian.]

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

WINDOW-CONSERVATORY.

A VERY handsome addition may be made to many dwellings by arranging some of the windows as a plant cabinet, or window eonservatory. Where there is a bay window, or one deeply recessed, it may be fitted up with glass doors, opening into the room, in whieh a eolleetion of plants may be kept in great perfection, and with but little eare and attention.

One of the greatest troubles experieneed in growing many kinds of plants in rooms is the dryness of the air and the diffieulty of ereating any humidity in the atmosphere. By this arrangement, mueh of the diffieulty experieneed by plant-growers is obviated, and almost certain sueeess guaranted; for they can be kept as moisty as if in a greenhouse, and sprinkled with water when neeessary, without any fear of injury to the room and furniture. The manner of fitting it up depends mueh on the taste and means of the possessor; if desired, the whole of the spaee enclosed by the glass may be filled with plants—a box, say, a foot in depth, of the shape and size of the enelosure may be made so as to hold water, or lined with zine, with an opening in the bottom, through whieh the waste water ean pass; in this box put a good layer of chareoal and sand, plunging the pots in it up to the rims, so that their tops will all be on a level, filling in the spaee between each pot with sand, and eovering it and the pots with sycopodium or stone erops, or bright green moss, as a surfaeing. On the sides of the window there may be some neat braekets, on whieh pots may be arranged, with vines and elimbers running up wires between them, and reaehing to the top of the window, from whieh may be suspended baskets with drooping plants.

In such a ease, a few orehids, or air plants, may be grown, and add mueh to the interest of the eolleetion. There is scareely a limit to the variety whieh may be eultivated, from the "wildlings of the wood" to the most delicate and tender exotie.

For a large bay window, next to the outer sash, there may be vines to run up the sash-bars and eover them, by having a eopper wire stretched from top to bottom; for the sides, two good shaped plants of eamellias, a double white and a double red, or even three plants, a red one for the eentre plant, and a white one for each side; between these may be arranged the daphne odora, myrtle orange, and under and in front of these some of the beautiful variegated leaf plants now so much eultivated at the East and on the eontinent, such as the marantas, with their magnifieent velvety-striped leaves and graeeful foliage; begonia rex and its varieties, the leaves looking like plates of silver set with diamonds; the bright scarlet foliage of the draeenea, or the bright green frouds of the graeeful ferns. It is in the winter and early spring that sueh a ease presents the most attraetion, when there are few or no flowers in bloom outside. Even the commonest plants grown under such treatment, display beauties rarely seen or thought of, when found in profusion in the garden.

At this season of the year what eould be more beautiful than a few striking evergreens, with a collection of bulbous plants in bloom, with violets, primroses, and mignonette under them? As the season advances the plants may be changed, roses, geraniums, fuchsias, heliotrope, sueceed. The bright searlet eaetus when in bloom is very showy, and the flower last long. The white lily and the new Japan lilies are very beautiful.

For the sides of the window, the Wax Plant or Noya Carrosa is one of the best, with its thiek waxen leaves and flowers filled with honey; varieties of the Passion Flower, with their eurious and beautifully formed flowers; even the Ivy, with its bright marbled leaves and many elustering asso-eiations; the Honeysuekle, with its sweet perfumed flowers, would be welcomed. The variety may be as great as the possessor desires, and one ean hardly go astray in the selection of flowers. The actual benefits of these plant cases are easily shown. Every one knows how soon trees and plants beeome eovered with dust, soon rendering them far from sightly objeets. In a room we expeet to eseape mueh of this, but, alas! the housemaid's brush is little less injurious, and the fine dust rapidly elings to and spoils the plant, so mueh of its beauty lying in the glossy leaves and in that look of bloom and freshness so soon destroyed. Gas is also very injurious, and so is a heated fire-dried atmosphere, whieh absorbs from the leaves far more moisture than the roots ean replace. From all of these diffieulties the glass enclosure is an effeetual shelter.

Most all plants like a warm, moist atmosphere, and it is really delightful to wateh how they thrive in it—they look so glossy, so luxuriantly green. A keen observer of Nature, in speaking of this subject, says: "No one who may devote a little time and eare to the planting and eulture of sueh a ease will ever regret it, and the exereise of but ordinary judgment will ensure sueeess. Then you will have a seene that will repay you for your attentions, and that will every day suggest something green and sunny to the mind, give to many a page of poetry a new and higher meaning than it ever presented to your mind. You will eertainly read 'The Daisy' of Burns, the 'Wild Flowers' of Campbell, the 'Wood-side Sketehes' of Bryant and Brainard with a new pleasure."

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

Feb. 11th. St. Theodora, Red Primrose, (Primula verna rubra.)
Feb. 12th. St. Eulalia, Noble Liverwort, (Anemone hepatica.)
Feb. 13th. St. Catherine de Ricci, Polyanthus, (Primula polyantha.)
Feb. 14th. St. Valentine, Yellow Crocus, (Crocus mæsiacus.)
Feb. 15th. St. Sigifride, Cloth of Gold Crocus, (Crocus sulphurea.)
Feb. 16th. St. Juliana, Lilac Primrose, (Primula acaulis plena.)
Feb. 17th. St. Flavian, Scotch Crocus, (Crocus susianus.)

IRIS.

IT is complained in New York that the reign of red among women has been inaugurated to an extent whieh causes one to blush at the passing refleetion: red hoods, red shoes, red stoekings, red eloaks, and even red hoops and corsets. One exehange says that at the theatre and opera you may even see red ehemisettes. So it seems that a woman's bosom may be read without any exposure of its intrieate seerets after all. Amid the rage for red we trust that red noses will not be permitted to rule. After all, however, the passion only exemplifies the natural law of reaetion. A few months sinee every one was wearing the green. How long are we to yield homage to the Woman in Scarlet?

THE dramatie eritie of the Alta has diseovered a resemblanee between the play last summer produeed here, Our Friend from Victoria, and De Walden's, lately brought out, ealled Sam. He says "it suggests an unpleasant point whieh, however, may be easily settled." Were the eritie as competent to his position as he might be, and as fair as he ought to be, he would have settled it by saying that Our Friend from Victoria was in print, and eireulated at the East, before Sam was ever thought of, instead of making what may be an aeeidental resemblanee the ground of an unwarranted inuendo against the author of the former.

PHILADELPHIA lawyers have long been eonsidered the most aeute of all human ereatures, but the elergymen of that city seem destined to bear away the palm for the future. These latter have diseovered that a Sunday payer is an infraetion of the divine law, and are doing battle with the editor of the Press on that issue. Is it possible there is any one who does not know that the Sunday paper goes to press the evening before. Like sermons they are eomposed during the week, and delivered on Sunday morning. As an oeeupation for the mind on the saered seventh day, reading is better than beer-drinking; as an amusement it is even less expensive than riding in the horse cars.

IT is said that the new Colleetor has notified a tinware-dealer of this eity that he is owing the Government four eents for back revenue duties, and that, unless payment is at once made, suit will be commenced for its colleetion. Verily, the mill of this Miller may grind slowly, but it seems determined to grind exceedingly fine!

THERE is a report that a rieh and respeetable bachelor of this eity has compromised a breach of promise suit with which he was threatened for fifteen thousand dollars. It seems that the Reese river of matrimony, like the course of true love, will not run smooth. Once more unto the breach, dear friends.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; eneb additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By JAMES C. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. B. S. BROOKS,
de23-3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN COUCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.

San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE,
fe10 5t Att'y for Administrator.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

KATE ROCKFORD, Plaintiff, vs. FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant.—Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to FRANCIS ROCKFORD, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this honorable Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and allowing Plaintiff to resume her maiden name of Kate Fossit, for costs of suit, and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 23d day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By H. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
J. D. STEVENSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. no11-3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.—IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT of the Second Township, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The People of the State of California, to S. B. THOMPSON, greeting:

You are hereby summoned to appear before me, at my office in the Second township of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 13th day of February, A. D 1866, at 12 o'clock M., to answer unto the complaint of CHARLES M. PECK, who claims to recover from you the sum of two hundred and fifty-three dollars, and interest on one hundred and seventy-five dollars of said sum at two per cent. per month from June 22d, 1865, and on seventy-eight dollars of said sum at the same rate from April 20th, 1865, due on two promissory notes made by you, dated February 17th, 1865, and June 22d, 1865, the same claimed to be recovered in United States gold and silver coin, as per copies of said notes on file in this office, when judgment will be taken against you, for the said amount and interest due, together with costs and damages, if you fail to appear and answer.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of the city and county of San Francisco greeting: Make legal service and due return hereof. Given under my hand this 6th day of November, A. D 1865.

Alias U. S. Revenue stamp, 50c., cancelled. H. J. WELLS, (SEAL.) Justice of the Peace Second Township, City and County of San Francisco. Office, No. 623 Merchant street.
no11 3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by
N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

RELIABLE
AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends delared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTABLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.
L. P. GAUTIER, Med. Examiner, San Francisco.

STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
jy20-tf SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
No. 141 Broadway, New York,
FOR INSURING AGAINST
Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by traveling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00
Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Traveling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days..... 2
Twelve Days..... 3
Twenty Days.....
Thirty Days..... 5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the
NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16-3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,
FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall, to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and steamer running to Guayquil, touching at Tumaco, the port of the new mines, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

FEB. 19th, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

FEB. 28th, - - - - - COLORADO,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
dc16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY AND Children's Clothing STORE,

Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to

Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,

OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27-1m

---

SILK HOSE AT COST.

IVINS' PATENT HAIR-CRIMPERS!
No Lady should be without one.

TRIMMINGS, FRINGES,
BUTTONS, THREADS,
COTTONS, NEEDLES,
TAPES, FANCY GOODS,
ETC.

HOOP SKIRTS, NEW STYLES,
Best ever Imported.

ALL TO BE FOUND AT THE
PIONEER TRIMMING EMPORIUM
OF
MRS. NORCROSS,
No. 5 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.
ja21-tf

IRISH LINENS.

FOR THE BEST MAKES OF IRISH LINEN GOODS!
GO TO
MOSGROVE & BLAKELY,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja:3 tf

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."

For sale in glass only, by
ja27 1m BARRY & PATTEN

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church,)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.

Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30-3m

---

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M ja25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

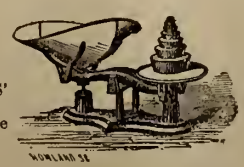
FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE
AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,
Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,
FOR THE BEST COFFEE AND SPICES.

THE PROPRIETOR having introduced Steam Power in his Manufactory, has now increased facilities to supply the trade and the public in general. All articles from his establishment are guaranteed to be sure and unadulterated The public are respectfully invited to call and convince themselves. Country orders promptly attended to.
oc14

SCALES!



MANUFACTURERS'
Branch House on the Pacific coast.

Fairbanks' Standard Hay, Cattle, Miners' Drug. gists' and Grocers' Scales, adjusted to English, Spanish and Chinese weight.

We also REPAIR (supplying parts when broken or worn out) and re-adjust our Scales to the original standard.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
☞ Send for Illustrated Catalogue. ja27 3m

ADAMS' BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,
AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,
SAN FRANCISCO
Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.
no18-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.
Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

---

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Boots, Shoes, etc.
Boots, Shoes, etc.
Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order.
Ready Made and to Order.
Ready Made and to Order.
Weed's Celebrated.
Weed's Celebrated.
Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1866. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTablishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
de30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,
oc29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

THE "LONDON TIMES."

APROPOS of newspapers, says a correspondent writing from London, the club world for the last few days has been occupied with stories of dissensions between the managers of the Times newspaper. In all such matters it is very difficult to arrive at the exact truth. Shrewd men of the world, like the conductors of the leading English journal, are not likely to let the world into the secret of their disputes until such time as their connection is finally severed. On this account, I am not disposed to place implicit reliance on the stories circulated in society as to the details of the rumored crisis in Printing House Square. I can only give them to you for what they are worth as the on dits of men about town. It is said, then, that for the last week or two the barometer at the Times office has stood at "stormy." You may, possibly, be acquainted with the fact that the chief ostensible proprietor of the Times is Mr. John Walter, late M. P. for the county of Berkshire. A great and not very intelligible mystery has always been maintained as to the exact proprietorship of the journal in question. On one occasion, when some remark was made on the subject in the House of Commons, Mr. Walter declared that he was by no means as influential in the paper as he was supposed to be. Whether this gentleman is the virtual holder of shares entered in the names of sleeping partners, or whether his profits as printer of the paper —a post secured to him by the terms of the partnership deed —exceed his profits as part proprietor, are points about which opiuions differ. As a matter of fact, there is no doubt that he reaps the lion's share of the income derived from the Times, and that he is the ultimate authority in all matters relating to the paper. In other words, there is no person employed in its management, whom Mr. Walter could not dismiss if he were so minded. His father and grandfather took a very active part in the management of the paper; and it is on record that in one instance, at the outset of the Puseyite movement, when some one of the young Oxford writers of the day wrote an article expressing sympathy with Dr. Newman's views, old Walter posted up to London the very moment he caught sight of the article, to stop what he considered rightly a most fatal error. The present inheritor of the Walter interest has of late years kept himself studiously aloof from any active interference in the conduct of the Times. A man of large property, a county member, and a local magnate in Berkshire, he has hitherto, according to an expressive, though vulgar expression, done his utmost "to drop the shop." In his place in Parliament he was a steadfast supporter of the Palmerston Administration, and markedly expressed views on more than one occasion not in accordance with those advocated in the journal of which he was the reputed owner. In his private capacity he was much more desirous of being known as a large landed proprietor than as Walter of the Times. Thus for many years the practical management of the paper has been delegated entirely to Mr. Delane and other members of the Times staff, who formed a sort of happy family party, united in more than one instance by ties of marriage.

At last, so report says, this mutually satisfactory arrangement has been disturbed. Mr. Walter, according to the current story, recently informed Mr. Delane that he was not satisfied with the manner in which the paper had been conducted of late. Upon this, according to the same gossip, Mr. Delane tendered his resignation, and several of the staff expressed their resolution to leave if his resignation was accepted. In fact, for a time it was thought there was likely to be a complete break-up in Printing House Square. Now, however, it is rumored that the quarrel is made up and that no important change will be made in the management. As I said before, I do not vouch for the accuracy of these statements. I simply mention them as current in quarters likely to be well informed on the subject. I almost disbelieve in their truth, if I may say so, from their intrinsic probability. It is so natural the proprietors of the Times should be dissatisfied with the position of the paper, that people are apt to assume the fact of their so being. I have very little doubt that the assertion commonly made by the persons connected with the paper is true, and that the actual net profit of the paper is larger now than it ever was before. I am told, too, on good authority, that the circulation increases steadily. This fact, however, I feel sceptical about. Any man who is in the habit of travelling about England must, I think, share my scepticism. The Times has lost its "chance" custom. In the railroads and omnibusses you hardly see anybody reading the Times now; the newsboys find it does not pay to sell it on the streets; the suburban news-venders never keep it on stock; they supply a very large number on order, but they no longer take in copies not ordered beforehand. The truth is, the penny papers have supplanted it as popular organs of opinion. It is still the newspaper of the governing classes, but it is no longer the chief English journal. For this fact the gentlemen who have managed the paper are very little to blame. When once it became clear that a penny newspaper could be made to pay, it became clear also that sooner or later the Times must either lower its price to a penny or be content to see other competitors surpass it in circulation and in the influence attaching to a vast constituency of readers. The only valid cause of complaint against the management is not that the Times cannot compete in popularity with a paper like the Daily Telegraph, but that it has forfeited its reputation for political sagacity. The utter failure of all its predictions with reference to the American war is beginning to tell against it. Then its reckless advocacy of Governor Eyre has proved to be a mistake in policy as well as in principle; and its bitter animosity towards the idea of reform is, to say the least, a hazardous experiment. Moreover, in a merely intellectual point of view, it has not of late exhibited its former supremacy of talent. Constantly other newspapers are beforehand with it in news. Leaders and reports in other papers get more talked about than those in the leading journal.

The Crimean year was the apogee of the Times's greatness and grandeur. Its one formidable rival, the Morning Chronicle, had been finally vanquished in the contest, and both proprietors and managers fancied that they had established their power on an immovable basis. With security there came carelessness, and the result has been the gradual decline of its influence. On the whole, I think this is a circumstance for which the public has cause to be grateful. Personally I have a great respect for the talent and good sense with which for many years the Times was conducted; and, with all its faults, I own it had also signal virtues. The heyday of its greatness will, I think, always remain one of the most brilliant periods of English journalism; and if the despotism of the Times were simply to be replaced by that of some younger and more energetic rival, I should see little ground for satisfaction. Happily, this is not likely to be the case. It is most improbable that the combination of circumstances which conferred on the Times its temporary dictatorship should ever occur again. We shall have, I hope, a number of influential and successful papers in coming years, but I trust we shall never have one again able to speak, as the Times at one time could do in the name of England. A monopoly of power is dangerous for any rulers, but above all for an anonymous and irresponsible body such as in the day of the Crimea held sway in Printing House Square.

To Prevent Cholera.—Much depends on each individual as to the mode of life adopted, as a preventative to cholera. In the first place, eat nothing but the most wholesome, digestible and nutritious food, avoiding everything likely to derange the bowels. Abstain from an excess of alcoholic drinks. It is a great popular error to suppose that drinking plenty of whisky or brandy is in any way a preventative against epidemics, but more particularly cholera. Avoid excessive study or labor; sleep in well ventilated rooms, and keep the house well ventilated and dry, and at a moderate temperature. Dress warmly, particularly about the abdomen. A very good plan is to wear flannel over the bowels. Abstain from excessive pleasure; keep regular hours, retiring at a seasonable time. Take moderate out-door exercise, but regularly every day. Pay attention to water-closets; see that they are clean. Chloride of lime should be thrown into them once a week, and if in a boarding-house or very large family, where there are many using them, it should be used twice a week. Cathartics should be avoided as much as possible, as when the bowels are once deranged it is difficult to get them right again, more particularly when there is an epidemic in the atmosphere. Water should be boiled and filtered, not through charcoal but through regular filtering paper, which can be obtained from any druggist. By all means, don't be induced to take the various patent medicines advertised as preventatives and cures for cholera.—N. Y. Lancet.

Hamlet's "Hawk" and "Hernshaw."—The passage in Hamlet, "I know a hawk from a handsaw," or, as corrected, "I know a hawk from a hernshaw," has greatly puzzled commentators. Is not this the true explanation? Among the ancient Egyptians the hawk signified the Etesian, or northerly wind (which, in the beginning of summer, drives the vapor towards the south, and which, covering Ethiopia with dense clouds, there resolves them to rains, causing the Nile to swell.) because that bird follows the direction of that wind (Job xxxix., 26.) The heron, or hern, or hernshaw, signified the southerly wind, because it takes its flight from Ethiopia into Higher Egypt, following the course of the Nile as it retires within its banks, and living on the small worms hatched in the mud of the river. Hence the heads of these two birds may be seen surmounting the canopi used by the ancient Egyptians to indicate the rising and falling of the Nile respectively. Now Hamlet, though feigning madness, yet claims sufficient sanity to distinguish a hawk from a hernshaw when the wind is southerly, that is, in the time of the migration of the latter to the north, and when the former is not t be seen. Shakspeare may have become acquainted with the habits of these migrating birds of Egypt through a translation of Plutarch, who gives a particular account of them, published in the middle of the sixteenth century, by Thomas Nash.—C. W. H., Athenæum.

The ladies are invited to try the enamel bloom for the preservation of their charms. It renders the complexion and skin soft, fair and blooming, imparting to the complexion the delicacy of perennial youth. Use Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists.

Marriage Extraordinary.—An extraordinary marriage took place at the Union Methodist Episcopal church, Philadelphia, a few days since. Mr. Rein, a German by birth, and a celebrated tamer of horses by profession, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Hannah J. Duke, the Iowa giantess. The bridegroom served with distinction in the Union army. He is rather below the middle stature of mankind in point of size and weight, he scarcely turning the beam at one hundred and forty pounds. The bride weighs five hundred and eighty-five pounds avoirdupois! She has been exhibited at Judge Ingalls' museum, on Market street near Ninth. Mr Rein, on visiting the establishment, fell violently in love with the fair giantess, proposed marriage, and "of course she said yes." The carriages drew up before the museum, and the twain, soon to be made one, entered therein, and proceeded to the church. The bridal party consisted of the Siamese twins—Chang and Eng—and other celebrities of the museum. Upon entering the church, the visitors were the most "observed of all observers." They were united in the matrimonial bond in accordance with the plain usage of the Methodist persuasion, after which they retired. The event was extraordinary because of the remarkable fact of the difference in the size of the parties. The bride did not falter or tremble upon being led to the altar.

A Magnificent Fete.—The Trustees of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, on Thursday evening last, gave a grand reception in the beautiful building they have recently constructed at the corner of Broadway and Liberty street. The entire house was admirably decorated with flowers and flags. At least a thousand persons were present, among whom were noticeable some of the most distinguished of our citizens. There was a fine collation for the guests, which was gotten up in Delmonico's most elegant style, and a band of music enlivened the scene. After supper, the guests were formally welcomed by the President of the Company, Mr. Winston, and Judge Bradford gave the following interesting information regarding the history of the company: "It began business in 1843, upon the mutual plan, without any capital. The first cash it received was $109 50, on the first of February, 1843. Its cash accumulations and investments are now $14,000,000. It issued in the first year 429 policies, insuring for $1,501,818. During the present year its issue will be upward of 7,000 policies, insuring over $25,000,000. The policies now in force are 23,000 in number, insuring for $75,000,000. It has paid in losses, $6,500,000. Nearly three-fourths of all the policies issued are for the benefit of ladies, and belong to them. At the outbreak of the war the trustees deemed it their duty to aid the Government in all prudent and practicable ways. It purchased upwards of six million dollars of Government stock, and was the first company to grant war permits to persons already holding policies who wished to enter the military or naval service. Similar policies were afterward issued to all persons who enlisted and applied for them."—N. Y. Home Journal, Jan. 3d.

At the Distribution of the Art-Union Paintings, at their Gallery, 312 Montgomery street, on Monday evening next at half-past seven o'clock, a peremptory sale of oil paintings by Sontag, Hill, Brooks, and others, and hundreds of choicest chromo-lithographs and engravings from Jones, Wooll & Sutherland—the finest ever imported to this coast—will take place. The whole will be on free exhibition until time of sale. Among the paintings to be sold are California landscapes by Hill and others, and that gem of the Art-Union Exhibition, "A View in the Shenandoah Valley," by Sontag, of New York; one of the best, if not the best landscape paintings on this coast.

Investing in Government Securities.—The first corporation in this State investing its capital in United States Bonds, is the National Insurance Company, lately organized in this city, which has so invested its entire capital—one million dollars; thus insuring a monthly income of over six thousand dollars from interest alone, besides guaranteeing policy holders a certain security against loss, even in the contingency arising of the entire city being burned, as was the case in the earlier days of its existence. This company was organized, its capital stock subscribed and paid in within a period of five weeks, and is now doing business in a temporary office, corner of Montgomery and California streets, while awaiting the completion of the improvements the old "Adams & Co.'s Express" building a few doors above is undergoing, for its occupancy as a permanent place of business.

If your blood is corrupt, disordered or vitiated, you are liable to be seized at any moment with a fit of sickness. It may appear in the form of pimples, blotches or sores, or it may suddenly prostrate you. One thing is certain: You cannot have health unless your blood is pure. To remove all impure matters from the blood, Adams' Blood Purifier is admitted to be the best preparation yet introduced to the public. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and will harm no one. Its effects are immediate and lasting. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, produces a healthy action of the liver and kidneys, and restores the patient to perfect health and strength.

Startling Disclosures!—Secret organizations for the destruction of our glorious Republic cannot be any more alarming to all true lovers of the government than a dangerous procrastination in using that most agreeable and certain curative for Coughs, Colds, and accompanying symptoms of Consumption—Newell's Pulmonary Syrup. It is an infallible remedy. Try it and be convinced.

For sale by all Druggists: Redington & Co., Sole Agents, 416 and 418 Front street, San Francisco.

Young Men who wish to prepare themselves for active business life by receiving a thorough commercial education, are referred to the circular of the Pacific Business College, published in our advertising columns. This Institution, under the able management of its President, M. K. Landenslager, has been for many months in successful operation, and merits the fullest recognition from our business community.

On the "Qui Vive."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

Dainty Work.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

Wanted—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. Shear, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veeder,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.
JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Babbittonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.

The following card will explain itself without comment:

San Francisco, Jan. 19, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been for seven years afflicted with rheumatism, and during that time I suffered more than generally falls to the lot of any human being in a life time. My ankles at times would measure six inches in diameter; my fingers were drawn into the palms of my hands; pains the most excruciating in my extremities, my hips and back, until I almost wished for death to relieve me of my sufferings. I tried every known remedy, and spent many hundred dollars without obtaining any relief. I have been swindled so many times by miserable Quacks, that I was afraid to try your remedy. Fortunately while reading one of your bills, a friend of mine told me that he had been cured by you. I concluded to try once more, though I had little confidence in it, because my case was of so many years standing; but judge of my surprise, when, after using it two days all my pain left me, and the swelling in my ankles decreased, and I am now, after using your remedy ten days, well and able to leave for my home. God bless you, Doctor. You will be considered a benefactor. Gratefully yours, fe3 Asa Willet, Drytown, Amador county.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

Astrology.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Starke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

C. Beach, 34 Montgomery street.
S. Friedman, 1108 Stockton street.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Adolph Levy, 19 Second street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.

Marcus Pezold, 46 Second street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner Bush.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. S. W. Dennis, removed to 14 Geary.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.

Wm. Brown & Co, 16 Third street.

FURNITURE.

N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pearce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.

Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Hemburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
W. H. Pilliner & Hunter, Gallery 14 Second street.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

SALOONS.

Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Ketchum, Third and Mission.
Donahue & Phelan, 31 Second street.
Ohio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kobler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!
A GOOD TEAM,
AND
Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE
TO THE
CLIFF HOUSE
TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-t

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.
IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

fc10 3m

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - - MARCH 1, 1866,

AT ELEVEN O'CLOCK, A. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

ja23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDly taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

For further Particulars see small circulars.

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street, fa29-3m San Francisco

---

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

---

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - MARCH 15TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets, Up stairs, San Francisco.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., de16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.

J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.

B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

jy2 SAN FRANCISCO.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,

fe6-3m Proprietor.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

my27tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

an19-3m

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175

Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30-3m

---

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

de23-3m

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

NEW

PIANOS

TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

jn20-1m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;

JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;

STEAMBOAT GIN;

OLD TOM GIN;

IRISH WHISKY,

from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Leidedorff street, San Francisco.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

GREAT AMERICAN
PRIZE CONCERT!
AT
CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,
Chicago, Illinois, - - February 22d, 1866.

20,000 VALUABLE GIFTS WORTH $96,800
PRESENTED TO THE TICKET HOLDERS.

100,000 TICKETS ONLY WILL BE SOLD.

1 Gift of $10,000 cash	$10,000
1 Gift of $5,000 cash	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 English Patent Lever Gold Watches, valued at $400 each	20,000
100 Gifts, 100 Amer. Silver Lever Watches valued at $100 each	10,000
48 Gifts 48 Silver Lever Watches valued at $50 each	2,400
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Turkey Morocco, gold clasp Albums, valued at $5 each	25,000
4,800 Gifts, 4,800 gold clasp Albums, valued at $3 each	14,400
10,000 Gifts, 10,000 cash at $1 each	10,000

All the above Goods are genuine, as represented, and are listed at a fair valuation.

Each ticket is registered before being sent out.

Parties will be notified by mail of the result of the drawing.

40,000 Tickets already sold. Send in your orders if you wish to secure them.

Tickets ONE DOLLAR each in Greenbacks, or 11 for $10, sent by mail to any address upon receipt of price and Postoffice stamp.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.,
no11-3m 141 Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fc5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!
A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics
Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book	$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book	8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book	6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!
Secret of Beauty!
USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!
The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
Wine of Pepsine,
OR,
RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.

For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
GLUCOLEIN,
A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF
COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.

Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.

Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.

Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Pinno Rooms No 26 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA;

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY;

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. INGRAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY
Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.
IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or lenthor,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY, SATURDAY, FEB. 17,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE:

Sophie Edwin as Ellen O'Brien

IN

THE IRISH MOTHER!

THIS EVENING, FEBRUARY 17,
LAST NIGHT OF
DR. HAYNE'S AND J. F. SEARS'
ADAPTATION FROM "LA VOLEUSE D'ENFANTS," ENTITLED,

THE IRISH MOTHER,

OR

THE WILD BRIAR PATH.

WITH

MRS. SOPHIE EDWIN

IN THE PRINCIPAL CHARACTER,
SUPPORTED BY THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

MONDAY EVENING:
First Night of

Mr. Harry Courtaine,

In the New Play entitled
MARCILLAC, THE HONEST MAN!

The celebrated Vocal Comedienne,
MISS EMILY THORNE,
will shortly commence an engagement at this Theater.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NATIONAL
Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE,
Brannan's Express Building,
402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)
PERMANENT OFFICE,
(After March 1st,)
408 Montgomery street,
Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,
Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President.
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy
IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only, by
SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fe17-3m San Francisco, Cal.

REAL ESTATE OFFICE.

Removal! Removal!

G. W. DAM has removed to 320, EAST SIDE OF MONTGOMERY STREET,
between California and Pine,
where he offers for sale a large amount of Business Property, Residence Property, and Property for Investment, Building Lots, Fifty-Vara Lots, and Full Blocks.

GEORGE W. DAM,
fe17 1t SALESROOM 320 MONTGOMERY STREET.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,
Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETS

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half-Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, FEB. 17,
The Grand Spectacular Play entitled,

The Bronze Horse,

And THE BUISLAY FAMILY, in their Wonderful Acts.

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, FEBRUARY 17th, will be presented the Operatic Dramatic Spectacle, entitled,

THE BRONZE HORSE!

In which the

Celebrated Buislay Family

And the FULL DRAMATIC COMPANY will appear.

Zamna, Prince of China.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Margela, Princess of Mogul.....Miss Hinckley
Peki, Daughter of Tchin-Kho....Miss C. Chapman
Kan-Jan, fourth wife of Ping-Sing.....Mrs. Judah
Lo-Maugh, a Spirit.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Tajana.....Miss Julia Gould
Cloud King.....Mr. L. F. Beatty
Ping Sing, a Mandarin.....S. W. Leach
Tchin-Kao, a Farmer.....Geo. Roundy
Koijan, a young soldier.....W. H. Hamilton
The Statue.....G. Archer
Tahan, attendant of Prince of China....Mr. English
Mandarins, Soldiers, Peasants, Spirits, Bridesmaids.

MONDAY NIGHT:
GRAND COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT
TENDERED TO THE MANAGER,
MR. CHARLES TIBBETTS,
By the Company, the Buislay Family, and all the attaches of the Theater.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

HOW IS THAT?

Men, Women and Children

GO ON FROM DAY TO DAY, FAILING IN VITALITY, PAINED, CRIPPLED BOTH IN MIND AND BODY, SOLELY FROM DELAY IN RAISING UP THE BLOOD AND CONSTITUTION ABOVE THE EFFECTS OR POWER OF DISEASE.

TAKE THAT GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER,

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
ja19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle-aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President
fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

AT A MEETING OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY, held at their office, 406 Montgomery street, on Monday, February 12th, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS—The Legislature of the State is entertaining the question of repealing the Specific Contract Law.

Resolved, That we pledge the California Building and Loan Society to the repayment in United States Gold Coin of all Deposits hitherto received by us, and we shall insist, in accordance with the power vested in us by law, that all loans made by us under said Act shall be repaid to us in United States Gold coin.

Thomas Mooney, Pres't; L. B. Townsend, Sec'y;
W. G. Weir, W. A. Janke,
John W. McCormick, Robert Lewellyn, Samuel Grim, John Dunn.
fe17-1t

COBB & SINTON,
Auctioneers.

OFFICE AND SALESROOM, NO. 406 MONTGOMERY-ST,
Between Sacramento and California.

Peremptory Sale

OF

OIL PAINTINGS,

Chromo-Lithographs,

AND ENGRAVINGS

AT AUCTION,

BY CATALOGUE.

MONDAY, - - FEB. 19, 1866
At 7½ o'clock P. M., at the Rooms of the Art-Union,

312 MONTGOMERY STREET.

PEREMPTORY SALE

OF

A LARGE COLLECTION OF FINE AND DESIRABLE

Engravings, Lithographs, and OIL PAINTINGS.

About 400 FINE, CHOICE FRAMED ENGRAVINGS and CHROMO-LITHOGRAPHS, and a Number of DESIRABLE OIL PAINTINGS.

N. B.—The above comprise an assortment of the most select and Choice Engravings, etc. The sale is made to close Copartnership, thus strictly peremptory and offering to amateurs a chance rarely met with.

Paintings and Engravings are now on exhibition. Ladies are requested to call and examine this fine collection.

COBB & SINTON,
fe17-1t AUCTIONEERS.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

CHOICE NEW BOOKS.

A. ROMAN & CO.

Have recently received over
ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CASES
OF
Standard Books,
ON EVERY BRANCH OF LITERATURE.

Our Stock is now very large and complete, embracing all the recent Publications of the day, together with all the Standard Authors on Miscellaneous Literature, History, Biography, Travels, Fiction, Poetry, etc., etc.

Also, a LARGE ASSORTMENT of
ELEGANTLY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS!
CHOICE EDITIONS OF FAVORITE AUTHORS, IN FINE BINDINGS,
SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

We have also a splendid assortment of
NEW AND BEAUTIFUL JUVENILES, CHILDREN'S BOOKS, TOY BOOKS, AND GAMES.

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
In great variety. ELEGANT BIBLES, PRAYER BOOKS, etc. All of which we offer at the lowest prices.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
de2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
a27-tf between California and Pine.

THE MUTUAL
Life Insurance Company
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED 1842.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

AN EXAMPLE OF THE DIVIDENDS OF 1866.

POLICY NO. 33,321,
FOR
TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!
Issued in San Francisco, August 22, 1864.

The amount Premium paid thereon in one year was $304 40.

The Amount of Dividend for one year to August 22, 1865, was $539 62,

Being $235 22 More than am't Premium paid,
Making the amount of Policy on August 22, 1865,

$10,539 62!

If the Dividend is used in payment of Premium, instead of being added to the Policy, the next payment required will be

Only $88 22,

instead of $304 40.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF
Policies Issued in 1864.

Amount Policy.	Premiums paid One Year.	Dividends One Year.
$10,000	$220 80	$394 77
5,000	120 72	237 27
2,500	87 40	141 80
1,000	21 70	39 48

ALL THE PROFITS OF THE COMPANY ARE DIVIDED ANNUALLY,
AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS,
AND
CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS, OR ADDED TO THE POLICY, AT THE OPTION OF THE ASSURED.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

LIFE POLICIES ISSUED,
PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.
AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES issued, paid up in Ten Years or otherwise.
CHILDREN'S ENDOWMENT POLICIES, Etc.

H. S. HOMANS,
General Agent for California, Oregon, and Nevada.
No. 609 Clay street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—Holders of Policies issued through this Agency in 1864 can ascertain the amount of their Dividends upon application to the General Agent, and the Amount of Dividends on Policies issued in 1865 as soon as received.
fe17-1m

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 13.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 24, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- Cultivation of Flowers.—By "Iris."
- For the Ladies.—By Clara Morton.
- Why Women Dress.—By "Hagar."
- The President's Position.
- A Step in the Right Direction.
- Encores.
- Notices of New Books.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

POETRY:
- Sunset.—By Ina D. Coolbrith.

SELECTED:
- How Hereward won Mare "Swallow."
- Dr. Angelo Annibale.
- American Reputations Abroad.
- Charles Dickens.
- Stapleford Grange—A Story.
- Last Trial of Fidelity.
- Magic Lanterns.

POETRY:
- Bells of Lynn, Heard at Nahant.
- Village Voices.

CONTENTS:

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, February 24th, 1866.

"PUT none but Americans on guard to-night!"

What a foe to human progress the man was who made that memorable order. Instead of Americans why did he not say Africans?

For he would then have been in tune with the spirit of the age. But I think the American makes quite as good a soldier as the African, though perhaps one would select the latter for a Scenturion.

The battle is not always to the Strong.

It is always possible to have too much of a good thing, and it sometimes occurs to me that perhaps at present we have quite enough of a certain element in national politics. It became necessary in the course of events to carry the war into Africa, but the contraband was caviare to some of our best generals. Now that this cruel war is over it would be pleasant occasionally to hear something else talked of, dismissing the inevitable African from the woodpile.

That the negro is as good as the white man I will not dispute, but that he is any better I deny.

That he out-ranks us at times makes no essential difference in my general proposition, for it is a Phalon that does not lean to virtue's side.

The doctrine of equality is all well enough in the abstract, but I notice that very few see it when it is ciphered down to what may be called the concrete. In any event, all things being equal, the most confirmed advocate of equality would rather have his sister marry a white man than a black one, and, if I kept a boarding-house, it is very certain I'd prefer white people for permanent boarders. Not, understand, that I have any prejudice against either race, but, with all my sympathy and liking for the African, I would not care to have him introduced every day at table. As it is, he is rung in a little too often, and his wool is being pulled over the national eyes to an incalculable extent.

Charity begins at home, and the reconstruction of our country, broken and disintegrated by war, is quite as important as the building of a Freedmen's Bureau. I have not corresponded with President Johnson on this subject, but I am very glad to learn by telegraph that his views agree with mine, and that in deference to them he is willing to own the very soft impeachment which those of a different way of thinking purpose to bring against him.

It is a great pity that the oppressed race cannot be removed to their own country, so putting the vexed question at rest. What a ferry our vessels of war and transports would make for that glorious purpose. It would then be an even thing between the races, for both would be transported—the one that was carried over to Congo and the one that remained behind.

We had no right in the first place to bring negroes across the great gulf of waters which nature rolled between them and the white man. I only wish that instead of quarrelling over the wrong that has been done them, and the merit, not to say beauty of their complexions, it were possible to pick them up and put them back where they came from.

If the duty of elevating and educating the whole human race be so imperative, why not import a million or two of Hottentots, Hindoos, or Patagonians, and make the good work a universal one? Why not do something for the Chinese who are seething and stewing in the sinks and slums of this same San Francisco?

Fellow citizens, ladies, and gentlemen, I am very much afraid that our troubles are not ended yet, and that they never will be until the waters of the Atlantic are cleft as the Red Sea was of old, and our former bondmen are permitted to go out from among us into a country which they can call their own. Despite all our pæans of peace and prosperity, bad begins the year, and worse, I fear, remains behind. The terminal figures of the present year and the following one are suggestive that things are destined to be at sixes and sevens for a good while to come. But, for all that, let us lift up our voices and sing pæans—if not peons.

—I am very sorry to hear that my friend Mike Reese has got into trouble.

He was always suspected of cupidity, but never before did I hear it hinted that he had any dealings with Cupid.

How Mike could consent to lend his heart without the most tangible security is more than I can understand, and how he could entertain even esteem for a lady who lent her ear to love, without interest—I am afraid it would indeed be without interest if she lent it long to Michael—is more than I can see.

Was she after a widow's thirds?

Really, the loves of the oyster will possess an almost human interest for the future. What a theme for the bard! Nothing more touching could be found in the whole realm of rhyme, if we except the Death and Burial of Cock Robin. And something after the same style might the Life and Marriage of Michael Reese be sung:

Who'll be the bride?
I, said Miss Clark,
If it's only in the dark—
And I'll be the bride.

Who'll make the ring?
I, said Mister Lynn,
And I'll make it out of tin,
And I'll make the ring.

Who'll read the service?
I, said Bishop Kip,
And I'll only charge a bit,
And I'll read the service.

But I have neither time nor space to complete the epithalamium. I think Miss Clark should consider herself more honored in the breach of Michael's promise than she could have been in its observance. When he professed an interest in her, she should have remembered that he has a trick of compounding at the end of the month, and that the time is sure to come when he is wanting principle—with her present experience of his habits, she ought to cry to the world: Keep away from Mike Reese!

Probably, in casting around for a husband she confounded an usurious with an uxorious one.

Bowles has been writing a book about us—Across the Continent. It contains some facts and more Colfax. But on the whole he seems pretty well pleased with us. I am sorry, however, that he went away with a rather queer impression about our women. He complains that they dress fast as well as talk fast, and hints his suspicion that they are fast—

I am afraid that, notwithstanding the title of his book, he did not come across the coutineut—

He seems rather pleased with the Chinese, and speaks handsomely of the entertainment which the heads of the companies... might I not as well say the tails?... gave to his party. I hope he made an equally favorable impression upon the Chinamen. But, on general principles, they are very much opposed to wash-bowls... how it may be with Sam. Bowles I do not know.

—This is my blue week. A steamship sailed... or should I say steamed... for Panama on Monday, and I want to be going.

It was the Golden City, commanded by Capt. F. R. Baby. I never before knew what the announcement by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at the foot of their advertisement, "cabin passengers will be berthed through," meant.

I suppose it means that they will all have a Baby... for captain. Of course, too, it is a Pacific Mail Baby.

Oh, but I should like to be travelling myself. "I'd choose to be a Baby," and be rocked in the cradle of the ocean, if he went beyond Panama. Think of Paris, and then Baden, dear, delightful Baden.

Going from Paris to that Spa, in the opinion of very many virtuous people, is simply going from Bad to Baden.

But for all that, perhaps I wouldn't like to be there at this present writing. Oh, no, certainly not.

California has charms to soothe the savage beast, perhaps, but I do think I could worry through a few miserable years in New York, London, Vienna, or Paris—

I am not much stuck after plaster, but I'd be willing to take a little Plaster of Paris just now—

For it is a fact that there are a few cities in the world quite as pretty and pleasant as San Francisco. And as with cities, so with rivers.

The Sacramento is, perhaps, a nice river, but Campbell makes mention of an Iser.

Some day I shall pick up my bed like the Bedouin... and perhaps go to Bedlam.

—How apt we are to judge everything by comparison.

The other evening I was much amused at the theatre, by noticing that, when you reverse your opera glass, the actors on the stage seem so far off that it is impossible to believe that it is their voices which you hear speaking and singing. Try it some time, and see how curiously the evidence of ears and eyes conflict, and how involuntarily you give credence to the latter.

The moral of all this is that it makes a great deal of difference in our view of things whether we look through the small or the large end of the lorgnette, and that it is never well to be too positive about anything.

—My friend McCarthy (D. O., of the Flag,) has just taken a nice little trip to Sacramento. I think his journey will end in Stockton.

I am really glad that the Legislature has at last taken his case in hand. For it has long been my opinion that something ought to be done for him. He has not thrived among us. Very thin when he came here, he has now become reduced down to a state that is appalling. People didn't "see him" much when he first arrived, and now they can't see him at all. As a Chinese lantern he'd be of some account... he is so well adapted for hanging.

—The Ajax has just come in. Like her great prototype, she defied thunder and lightning on her way out, and now she has come in and is lightening herself at the wharf.

No serious casualties have occurred on board her, I am happy to say. Asa Nudd's knees have become calloused by the constant praying which the passengers had to do when first the heavy weather came on, and Frank Wood's pleasant smile is now only audible at a mile or two distant, owing to hoarseness contracted in the storm, but that is all.

I am much gratified to learn that Lew. Leland distinguished himself during the trying ordeal to which all were subjected. Commenting upon the accommodations, he remarked that, gorgeous as they were, they were nothing to what would be afforded when the addition to the ship was completed... he thought that would be some time in March. He was willing to drink the health of the American Eagle, and had very little respect for any one who refused the toast... in fact, thought he could whip him. He hoped the guests would observe the rules of the ship, turn off the gas on retiring, deposit all valuables at the office, and report any inattention or negligence on the part of servants. And the roughest mornings he would walk among the passengers, remarking with a bland smile: "A pleasant morning, gentlemen—a pleasant morning," and, if they failed to see it in that light, walked mournfully away, remarking upon the inconsistency of man and the high price of provisions, which made it impossible for him to reduce the price of board or postpone the collection of board bills, much as he wished to.

INIGO.

THE BELLS OF LYNN, HEARD AT NAHANT.

" O curfew of the setting sun! O Bells of Lynn!
O requiem of the dying day! O Bells of Lynn!

" From the dark belfries of yon cloud-cathedral wafted,
Your sounds aërial seem to float, O Bells of Lynn!

" Borne on the evening wind across the crimson twilight,
O'er land and sea they rise and fall, O Bells of Lynn!

" The fisherman in his boat, far out beyond the headland,
Listens, and leisurely rows ashore, O Bells of Lynn!

" Over the shining sands the wandering cattle homeward
Follow each other at your call, O Bells of Lynn!

" The distant lighthouse hears, and with his flaming signal
Answers you, passing the watchword on, O Bells of Lynn!

" And down the darkening coast run the tumultuous surges,
And clap their hands, and shout to you, O Bells of Lynn!

" Till from the shuddering sea, with your wild incantations,
Ye summon up the spectral moon, O Bells of Lynn!

" And startled at the sight, like the weird woman of Endor, Ye cry aloud, and then are still, O Bells of Lynn!"

[Longfellow.

STAPLEFORD GRANGE.

I HEARD the following narrative at a dinner-party in a country house about five miles from the place where the events referred to occurred, and it was related to me by the chief actress in it—a pretty, lady-like girl of twenty, the daughter of the rector of the parish in which Stapleford Grange is situated. I had sprained my ankle in the morning, and, instead of going in to dinner with the rest of the party, was made to lie on a sofa in the drawing-room; and it was after the ladies came in from the dining-room that pretty Cissy Miles, at her hostess's urgent request, related it to me.

It was the Saturday afternoon before Christmas day, nearly two years ago, when my six brothers, all younger than myself, and I were skating on our squire's fish-pond. We had been skating since dinner, and it was not till the wintry daylight was beginning to wane that the recollection rushed across me that I had entirely forgotten to do a commission my mother had given to me in the morning. This commission was to walk to the Grange, a big farm-house, and bespeak some geese for dinner on New Year's day. My mother had said decidedly, "Those geese must be ordered to-day, Cissy," so I knew that I should have to go: although the Grange was a mile off, although it was very cold, and darkness was coming on, and although I was terribly afraid of a big black dog which was chained up just in front of the Grange back door.

"Who'll go with me to the Grange?" I called out quickly, as this remembrance occurred to me, sitting down and beginning to unstrap my skates. "I've forgotten all about the geese, and mamma said I was to order them to-day."

No one answered. The next day was Sunday, and it might thaw before Monday. Every boy, big or little, seemed laudably desirous of making the most of present opportunities.

"I daren't go by myself," I called out in a pathetic tone; "it would be quite dark before I got home again."

"Tell me the truth, Cis," called out Charlie, a quick, good-natured boy of fifteen, "and say you're afraid of 'Jip.' Never mind, I'll come with you, if you must go." And he joined me on the bank, and proceeded to take off his skates.

"What'll you bet, Jim," he called out, during this operation, "that we ain't at home by a quarter to five? It's exactly four now."

"A bob," was the answer, as Jim whirled by.

"Done; and remember you pay up. Now, Cis, come along, and I can tell you you'll have to run."

Thanks to all my brothers, I was a pretty good runner, and we sped across the squire's fields, and through the narrow lane towards the Grange, as fast as possible. When we got to the last field, which joined the farm-yard, we slackened pace a little, and when we got into the big court-yard itself, we were walking almost slowly.

"How dreadfully lonely it looks, Charlie," I said, almost with a shiver at the desolate aspect of the place, which had been a grand gentleman's house forty years ago, but had been suffered to fall almost to ruins. "I am glad I'm not Mrs. Johnson, particularly as she has no children, nor anybody to keep her company when Mr. Johnson is away."

"Well, don't you stop and prose to her for ever such a time, Cis, do you hear?" returned Charlie, good-humoredly. "I want that bob of Jim's, and we've only five-and twenty minutes to do the jaw, and get home in—"

"All right," I said, and we went up to the back door.

I must try and describe a little of the geography of the Grange now.

The court-yard was a big square place, much bigger than farm-yards usually are, and it must have been an imposing entrance in the old gone-by days. There were two entrances to it, the one we had come in by, leading to our village, the other exactly opposite on the other side of the court-yard, leading over a quarter of a mile of fields into the road to our market town of D. To the left hand of the court-yard was a long straight line of what had once been stables, but were now farm buildings; and to the right, the north side—a long straight line also—of the house itself.

The front door, which was exactly in the middle of the straight line, and which was flanked on either side by several windows, was now never opened; but the back door, which was the entry to a little bit of building standing back from the line of house, and which looked almost as if it had been stuck on to the big square mansion as an afterthought, was on this Saturday afternoon standing a little ajar.

Jip did not greet us with his usual noisy welcome, and there was no sound of any sort about the place except the gabbling of some turkeys in the rear of the farm-buildings. I don't know that I felt any particular fear, but as we followed the path under the shadow of the old elm-trees to the half-open door, a sort of oppressed feeling came over me, induced, I suppose, by the utter silence of the place, and I felt almost as if Jip's bark would have been a welcome sound. We went up and knocked at the door, and when I turned round, I observed that Jip's kennel, which stood exactly opposite, in a line with the front of the house, was empty.

"Where can Jip be?" I said; "I thought they never let him loose;" and I walked forward a few steps, and became aware that the dog's chain and collar were lying beside the kennel. I stood for a moment or two wondering, whilst Charlie, getting impatient at Mrs. Johnson's non-appearance, knocked again at the door. Suddenly, some marks on the flagged pathway in front of the kennel arrested my attention, and, upon stooping down to look more closely, I saw that they were—drops and smears of blood.

I raised myself in sudden terror, and called Charlie; and when he came to my side and examined the pathway, we found that there was a bloody trail up to the door.

"What can it be, Charlie?" I said, in a whisper.

"I don't know," Charlie returned, thoughtfully; "poor Jip come to grief, perhaps. It's odd Mrs. Johnson doesn't come; I think I'll go on a voyage of discovery; stay here till I come back;" and he pushed the door further open.

"No, let me go too," I said, hastily, half frightened. I am a coward at the sight of blood.

"Well! don't make a row then;" and we entered the little passage together.

On the left hand was the kitchen door, which was shut; and I observed that Charlie hesitated for a moment before he put out his hand to open it. Only for a moment though; then he unlatched the door, and the bright farm kitchen was before us.

There was a big blazing fire in the grate, which showed that on the table the tea-things were set for tea; the kettle was hissing away merrily, and some tea-cakes stood to keep warm on a low stand before the fire. Everything looked snug and cosey. Evidently Mrs. Johnson had prepared everything ready for tea when the farmer should return from D. market; and was now gone up stairs to "clean" herself.

I had time to make all these observations over Charlie's shoulder, before he gave a sudden start, and strode with a low exclamation to a bundle of clothes which lay at the farther and darker side of the kitchen, on the smooth stone floor. A bundle of clothes it looked like, with Jip lying asleep beside it in a very strange attitude.

I shall never forget the horror of the next moment. Huddled up, evidently in the attitude in which she had fallen, lay Mrs. Johnson, with a gaping wound across her throat, from which the blood was still trickling, and Jip, with a large pool of blood near his head, lay dead beside her.

I stood for a moment, too, paralyzed with horror—such intense, thrilling horror, that only any one who has experienced such a feeling can understand it—and then, with a low scream, I sank on the floor, and put up my hand to try and hide the horrible sight.

"Hush!" whispered Charlie, sternly, taking hold of my my hands and forcibly dragging me on to my feet again; "you mustn't make a sound. Whoever has done this can't be far off: you must run home, Cissy, as hard as ever you can. Come!"

He dragged me to the door, and then I turned sick all over, and tumbled down again. I felt as if I could not stir another step.

"It's no use, Charlie, I can't stir," I said. "Leave me and go without me."

"Nonsense! Try again."

I tried again, but it was no use; my legs positively would not move, and precious time was being wasted.

"You fool!" Charlie said, bitterly and passionately. How was a boy of fifteen to understand a woman's weakness? "Then I must leave you. It's Johnson's money they no doubt want. They wouldn't murder if they could help it; and Johnson will be back directly."

"Yes, yes. Go," I said, understanding that he wanted to fetch help before the farmer came. "I will hide somewhere."

"In the kennel there," he said, looking around quickly; "and don't stir."

He pushed me into poor murdered Jip's kennel, and then he disappeared, and I was left alone in the gathering darkness with those two prostrate forms on the kitchen floor as my company, and perhaps the murderers close at hand.

I combated the faint feeling which Charlie could not understand by pinching my arms and sticking pins into them, and after a little judicious torture of this sort the sick feeling went off, and I could think again. "I will take off my boots," I thought, after a moment. "They make such a noise, and I may have to move," for already a glimmering plan had rushed across my brain of how I might warn Johnson. So I rose a little from my crouching position, unlaced them, and slipped them off. I had barely done this, when I heard the sound of voices, and the sick trembling feeling came on so strongly, that the pin torture had to be again applied. In another minute three men came out of the backdoor, and I could distinctly hear every word of their conversation.

"He's late, I think," said one. "If he doesn't come soon, we must go; that girl 'll be home soon. I heard the old woman tell her not to stop."

"What 's it signify?" said another. "We can soon stop her mouth."

"It isn't worth so much blood, Dick," said the third. "We 've only got fifty pound by this, and the farmer 'll not have more."

"He ought to be coming by now," said the first, anxiously, coming a step or two nearer the kennel. "Hallo! What's that?"

The tone made me turn sick again. Had Charlie found help already? No. The three men were standing close to the kennel, and during the moment's silence that followed the man's exclamation, I remembered that I had dropped my muff. I tried to stop the hard quick thumping of my heart, which I felt certain they must hear, and then, as if fascinated, I raised my head from my knee—for till that moment I had been crouching at the farthest end of the kennel—and saw a hairy, fierce-looking face glaring in at the entrance of my hiding-place. I tried hard not to scream, and I succeeded; but in another moment I should have fainted if the face had not been taken away. To my utter amazement, as the face disappeared, its owner said:

"I thought some one might be hiding. That's a lady's trumpery. What can it mean?"

Evidently I had not been seen, thanks to my dark dress and the gathering twilight. I breathed freely now: unless something very unforeseen occurred, I was safe.

"Some one has been, and has dropped it," a voice said quickly. "That's all on account of your cursed foolery, Dick," it went on angrily. "Why couldn't you stop at the door, as I told you?"

"Well, let's do something now," the third said, anxiously, "or we shall be having some one here."

The three men then went back into the house again, and I could hear them speaking in low tones; presently the voices grew louder, and they were evidently quarrelling. In another minute they came out again, and from what I could hear, they began to search in the farm-buildings and outhouses for the owner of the muff.

"There's no one here," at last one called out. "They must have gone away again. Go to the gate, Bill, and see if anybody is coming that way."

After a moment, Bill returned to the other two, who were now standing talking in low whispers at the back of the kennel, and said: "No, there's no one coming." And my heart sank as I thought how long it would be before succor could arrive.

"The fellow's late," one of the others said, after a minute or two; "but we had better be on the watch now. Mind, both of you, that he's down from his gig before he sees us."

They walked away along the line of house towards the other entrance by which Mr. Johnson would come; and I, thinking they had gone to take up their hiding-places, put my head cautiously out of the mouth of the kennel, and looked around.

Surely I could reach the house without being seen, I thought, and if I could but reach the big ruinous drawing-room, which commanded a view of the fields the farmer would cross, I might be able to warn him back from the fate which awaited him. I must warn him if I could; it was too horrible that another murder should be done.

I was out of the kennel and in the kitchen before I recollected that I should have to pass close to the murdered woman before I could gain the door leading into the hall, which I must cross to gain the drawing-room. I shuddered as I passed the table and drew near to the horrible scene; but, to my utter surprise and no little terror, Mrs. Johnson had vanished! the dark gleaming pool of blood and the dead dog were still there, but the huddled-up bundle of clothes was gone.

What had they done with it? In spite of the urgent necessity there was for immediate action, I stood motionless for a minute, hesitating to cross the dimly-lighted hall. Suppose it should be there. I had never seen death before, and the thought of again seeing the dead woman looking so ghastly and horrible with that great gaping wound across her throat. was at that moment more terrible to me than the thought of her murderers' return.

Whilst I stood hesitating, a shadow passed across the first window, and, looking up quickly, to my horror I saw the three men in another moment pass the second window.

I had no time for thought. In another minute they would be in the kitchen. I turned and fled down the passage and across the hall, rushing into the first open door, which happened to be the drawing-room door, and instinctively half closed it behind me as I had found it. Then I glanced wildly round the bare empty room in search of shelter.

There was not a particle of furniture in the room, and it was quite empty except for some apples on the floor, and a few empty hampers and sacks at the farther end. How could I hide?

I heard the footsteps crossing the hall, and then as they came nearer, with the feeling of desperation I sped noiselessly across the room, laid down flat behind the hampers, and, as the door opened, threw an empty sack over me. I felt I must be discovered, for my head was totally uncovered; and I watched them, fascinated, breathless from intense terror. They walked to the window, saying, "We shall see better here," and looked out, presently all exclaiming together, "He's coming now; that black spot over there;" and, without glancing in my direction, they left the room again. I was safe, but what could I do to save the farmer? Surely Charlie must be coming with help now, but would he be in time? I must try and save him, was the conviction that impressed itself upon me in a lightning thought, and as it crossed my brain I sprang to the window. All thought of self vanished then with the urgency of what I had to do. I was only eager—nervously, frantically eager—to save the farmer's life.

They say that mad people can do things which seem impossible to sane ones, and I must have been quite mad with terror and fright for the next few minutes.

Seven feet below me, stretching down the slope of the hill, was the garden, now lying in long ploughed ridges, with the frozen snow on the top of each of them, and at the bottom of the garden was a stone wall four feet high. Beyond this, as far as the eye could reach, extended the snow-covered fields, and coming along the cart-road to the left was Mr. Johnson in his gig.

I threw open the window, making noise enough to alarm the men if they heard it, and sprang on to the window-ledge, and then, tearing off my jacket, threw it on the ground, and shutting my eyes, jumped down. The high jump hurt my wrists and uncovered feet dreadfully, but I dare not stop a moment. I rushed down the garden, tumbling two or three times in my progress, and when I came to the wall scrambled over it head-foremost. The farmer was just opening the gate of the field I was in, and I made straight towards him, trying to call out. But I could not utter a word: so I flew across the snow, dashed through the brook, careless that the bridge was a few feet farther down, and when I rushed up to Mr. Johnson's side, I could only throw up my arms and shriek out "Murder!" just as a loud report rang out through the frosty air, and I fell forward on my face.

"And were you hurt?" I asked, as she paused.

"Yes, a little. Look, here is the scar; and she raised the flowing fold of tarletane from her soft white arm, and pointed to a white oval-shaped scar. "I was ill for several weeks afterwards, but Dr. B. said it was from fright, not from the shot. They told me subsequently, that just as I must have reached the farmer, the men Charlie had fetched entered the farm-yard at the other side, and took the murderers unawares; but one of them who was behind a tree near the other gate, had just caught sight of me, and had fired in revenge, and they said that if I had not thrown my arms forward, I should perhaps have been killed."

"And Mrs. Johnson?" I asked.

The girl's face became very grave.

"She was quite dead. The men had put her under the dresser, which explains why I did not see her as I passed through the kitchen; and the poor husband went away directly afterwards. The whole house is uninhabited now. Nobody will live there, and of course the house is said to be haunted. I have never been there since that day, and I think I shall never dare to go there again."

The girl stopped, for the gentlemen had just come in from the dining-room, and one, tall and black bearded, who had been pointed out to me by my hostess as the Squire of Stapleford, and Cicely Miles's betrothed, now came up to her, and laying his hand on her white shoulder with an air of possession, said tenderly, "What makes you look so flushed, Cissy? Have you been transgressing again?"

"Yes, Robert. Mrs. Saunders asked me to tell Mr. Dacre," she answered.

"And you will be ill for a week in consequence. I shall ask Mr. Dacre to write the story, to save another repetition of it. You know we wish you to forget all about it, dearest."

"It was too horrible for that," she said simply. And then the squire turned to me and made the request, of which this tale is the fulfilment.—All the Year Round.

AMERICAN REPUTATIONS ABROAD.

TO an American coming to England perhaps nothing gives a greater spiritual jar, nothing more startles him into realizing that he is actually abroad, than the discovery, constantly breaking upon him during the first weeks of his residence here, that, when he sailed away from America, he did indeed sail away from a whole hemisphere of personal authorities and reputations—from the principalities and powers of the literary, political, religious and social world before which he had loyally bowed from his youth up. I think that, to any man, it would give at least a momentary shock to find, for the first time in his life, his references to illustrious names not understood, to august authorities not regarded, to titular dignitaries of his native chess-board not responded to with deference or even with recognition.

As a matter of testimony upon this subject, perhaps I may be allowed to refer to some of my own experiences during a residence in England now extending over nearly three years. I well remember the first decided shock of this kind which I received. It was my second Sunday in England, and I was spending a part of the day at the house of a literary man whose name (if I should mention it, which I shall not) would be recognized as a household word wherever the English language is spoken. I was showing to him and to a little circle of his friends my photographic album of American celebrities, and when we came to a certain face, they said, "Who is that?" I replied, "Oliver Wendell Holmes." "Who is he?" "Why, Dr. Holmes—did you never hear of him?" "Never!" I confess that then, for the first time, I felt a little homesick. That word gave me, indeed, a sense of being "abroad." Before me, then, yawned the dreary distance from that dear spot which "there is no place like" with a vividness more painful than I had derived from all the three thousand farewells of the Atlantic, with all the taunts and jeers flung at us by "the countless laughter of its salt sea waves." Since then that particular reputation has grown very rapidly in England; and, of course, even then there were here multitudes of the readers and admirers of the autocratic-poet; but it was simply staggering to find men and women, eminent in English literature, too, who did not remember to have heard the name of Oliver Wendell Holmes!

M D. Conway told me that he talked with a poor man in Venice who, he ascertained, had no knowledge of Daniel Webster, but was acquainted with the name and deeds of old John Brown. So I have found in England that, among the mass of the people—among those, for example, who make up a lecturer's audience at the literary and mechanics' institutes of the country—any reference to our great statesmen, jurists, and scholars of the time just gone, to Andrew Jackson, Webster, Clay, Story, Choate, Felton, requires explanation, while the mention of the names of philanthropists and reformers, especially of Garrison and Phillips, is generally caught up with with instant appreciation and responded to with enthusiasm.

I appeal to any American who has grown up under the omnipresence and majesty of Daniel Webster's renown, if he would not have been punctured by a new sensation had he gone through the following bit of experience. Just before Christmas a year ago, I arrived, at the close of the day, in that noble old town on the south coast of England, where our Pilgrim Fathers bade their last adieus to the cruel yet still beloved mother who cast them forth, I went to a quiet inn, was ushered into the coffee-room, and, while waiting for dinner, in the twilight, I thought I saw hanging upon the opposite wall a portrait, of life-size and done in oil, of Daniel Webster. It gave me a strange feeling full of pleasure, like hearing some familiar air of home, like seeing some well-known living face. I thought I must be mistaken, but, on rushing across the room, I found it was, indeed, a fine portrait of the great Daniel himself. Wondering how such a thing could have found its way into this quiet nook in one corner of England, when the waiter came in—a portly gentleman, dignified as a chief-justice or one of the apostolic fathers—I asked him of whom that was the portrait. After some hesitation he said, "Ah, sir, I think I have heard master say it was some American gentleman or other. I will ask master, sir, if you wish." When he next entered he said: "I have asked master, sir; he doesn't exactly remember the gentleman's name; he bought the picture at a sale; he thinks it is some American gentleman or other." And that is Fame—an old lady who shudders at the Atlantic voyage. In the young Plymouth what an august personage would have been evoked before every eye by that portrait! Just across the water, at the old Plymouth, it is merely the head of "some American gentleman or other."

We all find here a perpetual source of amusement in the very mixed apprehensions people have of the two most celebrated members of the Beecher family, Everybody knows Mrs. Stowe, and calls her Mrs. Beecher-Stowe. Everybody knows Henry Ward Beecher, and nearly everybody calls him Mr. Beecher-Stowe. It is generally stated that she is his wife, and sometimes his daughter, occasionally his mother, seldom—what she is. I do not exaggerate in saying that, in nine cases out of ten, Henry Ward Beecher's name is by Englishmen enriched with the pleasing suffix of Stowe. Yet, a few weeks ago the Times, in whose eyes he is of course a peculiarly endeared person, took quite the opposite tack and got the cart completely before the horse by speaking of him as Mr. Beecher Ward!

Excluding, in these remarks, the small minority of English people who are really acquainted with our history and literature, in travelling up and down England I seldom meet with any one who has heard of George W. Curtis, Dr. Holland, John G. Saxe, Col. Higginson, Gail Hamilton, Bayard Taylor, Tuckerman, and Thomas B. Aldrich, whom we know so well, but whose names pronounced before a general English audience would be no more recognized than the names of so many under-secretaries of the Tycoon. It is true that the books of some of them have had a considerable sale in England; but, in the first place, there is a large population of resident Americans here, who try to keep up an acquaintance with their country's authors; and, in the next place, there are a certain few English men and women who get and study all our best books as they appear. Upon the vast bulk of the population such names as these have yet made no impression. Here and there their books are to be found; but such casual and sporadic circulation does not make fame or even reputation. The supreme American literary reputation in England is that of Longfellow. His renown has diffused itself into every household; his poems are in every drawing-room; he has more readers than any living English poet. He is the one only American literary name that may be mentioned in all companies with as much certainty of recognition as the name of Shakspeare, though even with Shakspeare's name it would not be safe to go below a certain tide-mark of society. During the Shakspeareau festivals, last year, a London omnibus driver, by whose side I was sitting, whose daily journeys took him under the very walls of Apsley House and Buckingham Palace, gravely asked me, "Who is this fellow Shakspeare they're making such a damned row about?" My impression is, that next to Longfellow on British soil is Washington Irving, although an English lady of wealth and literary proclivities once enquired of me whether that was "the Irving who attracted so much notice as an eccentric preacher in London thirty years ago!" Next in renown to Longfellow and Irving, and in about the order given, are the names of Hawthorne, Emerson, Prescott, Lowell, Dr. Channing, Bryant, and Theodore Parker. I am surprised to find how many there are who do not know Whittier. It would be wrong to omit Elihu Burritt, who is everywhere known in England, and for whom there is an affectionate regard among multitudes of the purest and best. He has passed many years here; he has lectured in nearly every town and village; he has gone on foot through the whole length of the island; and by the simplicity, beauty and amiability of his nature, by his learning, by his calm thinking, by his modest yet glowing speech, has not only made fame for himself, but has done much to change English estimates of the American character.

A HORRIBLE SPECTACLE.—I had but a few leagues farther to travel to reach Guaymas, the only port of any note in the province, when I came to a place where the road crossed a little wood, forming an almost impervious thicket on either side of the path. On the left, several vultures were wheeling in the air, above the tops of the cork-trees and sumachs, and with loud cries of alarm and gluttony, appeared to be preparing to dart on some prey beneath. I turned my horse in that direction, apparently much against his inclination, as he manifested a strong dislike to leave the beaten route. After penetrating for a short distance into the wood, a hideous scene met my eye: the dead bodies of seven Indians were hanging from as many trees, some by the neck, and others by the leg or arm. All were frightfully mutilated, and presented but few traces of the human form. The murderers had exhibited an inexplicable ferocity toward the corpses. The axe and knife had each performed its sanguinary service, The executioners had broken the joints, dislocated and twisted the limbs in the most horrible manner, and, in derision, attached to the hands of their victims their macana (head-breaker or mace,) made of iron-wood, and untwisted the plaits of their long hair, which swept the ground. The vertical rays of the sun, however, had cauterized all the wounds, and hardened and dried the skin of the savages; and thus, as it were, setting putrefaction at defiance, the bodies had assumed the appearance of mummies, and the human form, mutilated as it was, still terrified the swarm of vultures circling above them. The sight of arms left upon the ground, some whole, others shattered to pieces, proved that the struggle had been long and fierce; and the numerous traces of cattle mingled with the footmarks of men, showed that the Indians had been surprised laden with booty. The sight before me was a fearful example of bloody reprisals on the part of the whites, as I subsequently learned after my arrival at Guaymas.—From the Note-book of a Traveller in Mexico.

WHEREFORE is an accomplished acrobat like a great traveller? Because he's acquainted with every climb.

A DYSPEPTIC man thinks more of himself in a week than a well person does in a year.

DR. ANGELO ANNIBALE.

THE doctor was a tall, burly man, dressed like a slovenly and rather disreputable clergyman, in a black frock-coat and a soiled white neckcloth. He had heavy features, a pale-brown complexion, white stiff hair, and black-beetle eyebrows, shaggy and overhanging. He did not fix his eyes on me, but, looking keenly at a mirror on the wall facing us, asked me, in a monotonous voice and preoccupied manner, the nature of my illness. When I said "Nervous disorder," he started, looked round almost fiercely into my eyes, squeezed my pulse very hard, and said: "Indeed! so I thought." He then catechized me about my symptoms.

Had I fixed pains in the head? Had I slight fever or irritation of the fingers? Did I speak slower than I used to do? Was my memory weakened? Did loud noises distress me? Was I at all deaf? Was my perception dimmer or my imagination enfeebled?

The doctor put these questions in a severe, authoritative voice. To some of them I replied yes, with certain reservations; to others, no.

The doctor bent his head, and asking me to take a seat, left me for a moment or two. When he returned, he walked up to the mirror, and then to the window, lastly, he came and sat down by my side, and took my hand.

"My young friend," said he, "it is often my painful duty to tell my patients alarming truths; that duty devolves upon me now. I am a pupil of Georget, and have devoted my whole life to the study of cerebral disease. Your symptoms leave no doubt in my mind that you are suffering from an early stage of ramollissement cérébral. I am bound to tell you that I may or may not cure you, that is as God wills; what will be, will be. I shall administer to you the most powerful remedies my experience enables me to give. Your age is in your favor; the vital principle sometimes rouses itself, and works miracles. You must not therefore despond; but still remember, ramollissement, though it may be stopped, has undoubtedly begun. Avoid late hours and anxieties, keep calm, be cheerful, and come and see me every third day. Good morning."

I all but fell from my chair on hearing my death warrant thus read. I felt my heart turn as if to ice. I trembled; my arms dropped by my side; I could just keep the tears back by an effort. I gave him his fee, and staggered to the door.

"Stop, Signor Inglese," cried the doctor, touching me on the shoulders; "I have to write you a prescription. You must take a great deal of belladonna; it is of much use in these cases of over-worked brain. God bless you! But stop! you had better let my servant send for a coach; you are too nervous to venture down the Corso alone. Remember, keep your mind calm. Addio." And the doctor rang his bell and bowed me out.

What with the alarm of the disease I was threatened with and the violence of the medicine, I became worse. The doctor said I required great care. Tom Raffle, good fellow, was like a nurse to me. He rattled on, he tried to cheer me, he performed grotesque dances, he brought with him chatty yet quiet men. He derided the doctor.

"Egad, sir," he used to say, "I wouldn't believe a man like that on his oath, nor one of these Italian duffers. How can ramoleasymong, or whatever he calls it, set in without throwing out symptoms long ago? Now, six weeks ago, before you began that Cenci picture, you were as right as ninepence—full of color, hearty, strong. Why, when you boxed with Strutt, didn't you go home between his eyes as if you were trying to fell a bullock; and didn't he cut up rough about it, and all at once threw down the gloves, and say he had to meet Haag at the Pincian! I tell you these men think themselves bound to see further into a milestone than any one else. If they don't see a disease, they pretend to. You tell these dogs some symptoms, perhaps half-imaginary or indigestion, and they instantly pretend to discover those symptoms. Pack of humbugs these Italian doctors! so I tell you. You shake this Hannibal off, and go and take a cruise in the Mediterranean. Salt water and a little sun would soon wash the cobwebs out of your brains; yes, sir; stap me if it wouldn't!"

I had no spirits to answer my mercurial friend; I only sighed, said I wished he was right, but I feared Dr. Annibale was only too correct.

At my third visit, the doctor thought my symptoms better, and this reviving me a little, we fell into conversation. I found he was a passionate student of chemistry, and as I knew a little of the science, and wished to know more, this was a point of sympathy between us. At my next visit, after a long talk about crystallization, the doctor suddenly taking me by the arm, leading me into the full light of the window, and peering into my face in his intent, and yet abstracted sort of way, smiled as much as to say, as I then thought, "he improves."

"Signor Inglese," said he, after some moments' pause, all at once raising his eyes from the parqueterie floor, on which they had been fixed, "will you come this evening and spend an hour or so here? We can then talk over our favorite pursuit more at our leisure."

I bowed, and expressed the pleasure I should feel in such a visit, but that I feared a man stricken with a moral disease was not likely to be the most desirable or talkative of companions.

"Stuff!" said he. "No, no; it will do you good, draw you from yourself. You must come—I will take no refusal. Mind, at eight o'clock I expect you. We will have a cold fowl, and some salad. Mind, I shall be very angry if you miss."

As he spoke, he fixed his eyes on me with a mesmeric intensity I could not help thinking over afterwards.

It was a great exertion to me to return, but still I could not refuse, and punctually at eight I passed the tomb of Bibulus on my way to No. 10.

I found the doctor keenly expectant, abstracted in his manner, but still kind, cordial, and hospitable. We had supper; the fowl was tender, the salad crisp and fresh as if grown in incessant April showers (it was only March yet, by the by,) the Lachrymæ Christi delicious as the juice of those grapes ripened by Neapolitan suns and Vesuvian sub-heat always is. I drank freely; the doctor drank deep long draughts with the thirst of a tired reaper, but he talked little till supper was over, pressing the wine, however, upon me with a hospitality hard to resist, and unusual in our present sober days.

After supper, the doctor, snatching up the bronze candelabra of six lights, proposed, with an eagerness he did not care to conceal, cigars and an adjournment to the laboratory.

Somewhat to my surprise, I found everything in that room prepared for our reception. The last of a long suite of rooms, the doctor's study had, like most Italian rooms of this kind, two doors, one opening on a corridor, the other leading into the dining and other apartments.

The laboratory was not large, but still big enough to hold a book-case, several shelves of anatomical preparations, a cabinet for drugs and minerals, and a small furnace, which was now alight. On a table near the window stood an array of measuring glasses, electric batteries, microscopes, magnets, and bottles containing poisons and acids. On the floor and on the doctor's arm-chair lay several old Latin folios, open and annotated with marginal notes in red ink.

On a small chess-table, drawn in front of the furnace-fire, the little door of which was open, stood a percolator full of coffee, some cups, and a box of cigars. Two chairs had been placed ready for us by the same officious hand. It is cold in Rome in March, and the fire was not only cheerful but grateful, especially to an invalid like me.

The doctor courteously invited me to be seated, and rubbed his hands together in a chirping and chuckling way. He was evidently determined to be comfortable.

We lit our cigars, and smoked for some time in silence. Then we began a conversation on the discoveries of modern science—photography, spectral illusions, the combustibility of the diamond, agricultural chemistry, etc.

"Since my only sister died," said he, "I feel lonely; so, in self-defence, have fallen back into my old-bachelor habits, and I find a sort of pleasure in them. I study more now. I go now less into society. Here, you see me, Signor Inglese, in the centre of my little kingdom. The drugs and gases prisoned in these vessels are the spells with which I raise spirits to work my pleasure. Fire, air, earth, and water obey my bidding. That large microscope, under that picture, was given me by Professor Webster of Philadelphia," (Boston.)

"What! the murderer?" I said with an irrestrainable shudder.

"The homicide, you mean; yes, the man who unwisely took the life of a wretch who was killing him by mental torture, and who foolishly, by precipitancy and illogical mode of concealment, betrayed his dangerous secret. I knew Webster well; a finer-hearted and larger-minded man I never knew."

"I cannot, Dr. Annibale," I said in a tone of some reproach, "attempt to decide on the degree of the unhappy man's guilt; but, pardon me, if I must call it a cruel crime, resulting in the basest moral cowardice, a wilful turning from conscience, and a want of religious principle."

"He was a fool, that Webster," said the doctor angrily. "Why did he not plunge the wretch he removed from earth into a tank of corrosive acid? That would have drunk him up—flesh, hair and bone—in twelve hours, and left no trace; or, why not have annihilated him in this way?" (And the doctor, with a ghastly smile as he spoke, tapped the iron door of the furnace playfully with a paper-cutter he held in his hand.) "No false tooth or gold-stuffing could have resisted that fire for half an hour. The proof gone—the danger gone. Say no more about it. Webster was a fool, and he paid the penalty."

"For Heaven's sake, doctor, restrain your ghastly professional fun. I cannot joke on death like you doctors."

"As you like," replied the doctor. "Of course, I spoke only theoretically. But even homicides may be fools. I asked you here to-night to talk over a discovery that I have just perfected after twenty years of study. Do you lament the continuance of war in the world?"

I said I did indeed. I thought it proved nothing, and led to no permanent results.

"Veramente! veramente!" burst forth the doctor, who had been holding a bottle of red liquid to the light. "St. Augustine could not have spoken more exactly what I think. Well, yet you have foolish people in France, and England, and America, and Germany, who think that war is to be put down and superseded by congresses and arbitration synods. Stuff! strong men in the wrong will never submit to such assemblies: the only way to put an end to war is to so improve the means of destruction that all nations will be equal; and the death of both combatants being made the certain result of war, war will then become useless and effete. The discovery of gunpowder began the good work; fewer men are now killed than in the old butchering hand-to-hand battles, such as Cannæ and Chalons. Heaven has granted me—I tell you, me, Dr. Angelo Annibale—the honor and glory of the second great discovery, that is to sponge the word war out of the European dictionary. I have discovered a means of spreading death, so terrible, so sudden, and so irresistible, that it enables those that employ it to destroy ten thousand men in half an hour."

I felt inclined to laugh, but I restrained myself; the doctor looked so excited. He was evidently one of those visionary inventors who are perpetually hoping to revolutionize the sciences, and who despise the slow growth of all great truths. Besides, here was a philosophical man so absorbed in a supposed discovery, that he talked of the death of ten thousand men with as much complacency as Dr. Guillotine ever did of the pleasure of dying by the machine he helped to perfect.

"Balloons, I suppose, doctor?" I said, in a bantering way, after a painful silence, "from which you drop Greek-fire enclosed in glass balls; or steam-cannon, fed by a hopper, and discharging a hundred—"

"Nothing of the kind," said the doctor, quite passionately, and stirring the furnace, as if to wreak his wrath upon something. "My— But first swear to me that you will not reveal this."

I promised.

"My invention is that of an acid, so burning, so deadly, and so virulently corrosive, that one drop touching the human skin anywhere is certain death within seven minutes. No clothes stop its action, no water will remove or allay it; it is the old Greek-fire reduced to a liquid, burning not as a flame, but as a caustic; neither earth nor vinegar will stay its virus; it kills sooner than the Wourali poison; and, indeed, contains several of its ingredients. It took me twenty years to perfect it. I have now discovered a way to make it by the hogshead, cheap and good, in any country, and in any climate."

"But, doctor," said I, "given the liquid fire, how is it to be scattered quickly and effectually upon armed men? Remember the almost supernatural power of our modern artillery. Rifled guns now carry five or six miles, and are loaden at the breach so rapidly that the shots succeed each other with scarcely an intermission."

"All objections," said the doctor, "I have anticipated. I place the men who carry my portable pumps filled with the Wouralian acid in huge omnibuses, urged on by steam, and plated with shot-proof steel. To the pump-hose is attached a fan-sprinkler. On reaching within thirty feet of the enemy, they turn on the pipes, and mow down rank after rank. On the enemy beginning to retreat, the steam-engine fires are put out, the steam-engines are unhooked, and horses attached, with which the pursuit is continued until the last man perishes, and so in one day the campaign ends with an annihilating victory."

Depressed as I was, and low as my spirits then were, I could stand this no longer; I burst into a hurricane of laughter, which, in spite of the pain such a rudeness cost me, kept renewing itself in irrestrainable gusts, that made my eyes run with water, and made me rock to and fro in the chair. There was something so intensely ludicrous in the quiet confidence with which this scientific theorist explained his Bobadillian intentions.

When I recovered myself, I begged a thousand pardons, pleading the excitability of my nerves and the odd recollections his theory had suggested.

But the doctor was not so easy to appease. His brow wrinkled and his hand shook as he strode to the table and took from it a large-mouthed glass vessel, holding about a pint of red liquid, and held it up to the light.

"Here," said he, and his eyes rolled and dilated as he spoke, "Mocker! in this glass I hold what would kill a hundred men—one hundred, ay, a whole barrackful." (A smile from me made him burst into fresh fury.) "English madman!" he shouted, "know that I had intended, since your days are numbered, to make you the victim of an experiment which might save the lives of millions yet unborn. An hour ago, a thought of pity for you had entered my heart, but now it is all stone again. Prepare to die! One dash of this in your face, you fall dead before you can cry out, and all trace of you that furnace will soon remove."

Had I been in sound health, I should have instantly rushed on the wretch, and struck him to the ground; but now, with shattered nerves, astonished at the language of the man, and the suddenness and novelty of the threat, I stood for a moment as if paralyzed. I saw his hand raised to throw the liquid.

I scarcely know what I did; all I remember is that I turned, dashed down some glasses, leaped on a table near the window, half opened it, half burst through, and jumped into the street. As I dropped, I felt a splash of liquid on my neck and back, and heard a loud shrill laugh from the window through which I had leaped.

I ran down the street as if a dozen swordsmen were chasing me, mad with terror, with one shoe off, and without my hat. At the corner of the Via Babuina, just under a lamp, I ran against a man, who swore at me in English; who should it be but Tom Raffle! When he saw me, he was petrified with stonishment; still more so when I told him my singulur story.

"Take my word for it, the old scoundrel's mad," said Raffle. "There's nothing on your neck but some stuff like red ink. Your coat isn't burued. Do you feel any pain in your neck?"

"Not the least," said I. "No burning at all."

"Let me wipe it off."

Raffle wiped off the liquid, and we waited with intense interest under a lamp to see what happened to the handkerchief dipped in this blood of Nessus, but nothing happened—it neither burned into holes nor flamed.

"I propose we go back and lick the old bloke," said Raffle; "he's been making a fool of you to try if you're cranky."

"Perhaps so," said I, after a moment's thought. "Now, as I don't like that kind of mental experiment, you will go with me, Tom, to-morrow morning, and demand of him an explanation?"

"Here's my hand," said Tom; "and now, come to my place and dip your neck in some bitter beer—it'll screw you up."

"No, it's too late; but do come to my door with me, there's a good fellow, for I ain't so strong as I was, and this extraordinary event has made me nervous."

The next morning early, I and doughty Tom Raffle were on our way to the doctor's house. We had both of us agreed, after mature consultation, that the doctor's wild behavior and wilder story was a deliberate plan to test my sanity.

Whether the fright or my anger at the cause had served as a tonic, I do not know; certain it is that I really felt better, and began to laugh at my own morbid terrors.

"Bravo!" cried Tom. "Now, old fellow, I begin to seem to know you again."

We had just reached the corner of the doctor's street, when we saw in the distance at his house a black coach standing with the door open. We stood still, Tom and myself, to see what it could mean. Presently the doctor, bowing and talking, came out, half led, half forced forwards by four rough-looking men. His hat fell off, but no one stopped to pick it up. He made gestures, but no one paid any attention. Presently they all got into the carriage, the steps were folded up, the door slammed, and the coach drove off—the two strong black Roman horses dashed down the opposite end of the street, turned the corner, and we lost sight of them. The last thing I saw was the doctor's head aud arm thrust out of the carriage.

We were both in astonishment; but, at that moment, I saw my friend Brewster, the sculptor, in his usual white coat, standing at the door of his studio, nearly opposite the doctor's, chisel in hand.

"Here's a pretty go!" said he. "Dr. Annibale went stark-staring mad last night, and they have just taken him off to the mad-ward of the Benfratelli Hospital. He must have been playing nice havoc with his patients the last week or so."

I saw it all. The doctor himself, with a shattered miud, had perhaps exaggerated my nervous symptoms into his own disease. This thought gave me courage. I took Tom's advice; did less work; went to Frascati for a ten day's relaxation; returned better; spent my evenings sociably at Lepri's; finished my pictures successfully; came back to England; was well noticed at the Academy; married, and, as story books say, "lived happy ever afterwards."

An Immense Business.—During the last year (1865,) the piano trade of the United States amounted to fifty-nine millions, two hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred and seventy-three dollars ($59,284,673.) The number of pianos made was one hundred and eighteen thousand two hundred and eighty, or a little over three hundred and eighty-one for each working day. Some of the manufacturers make only one piano a month, and some make ten a day. Some of them have amassed immense fortunes, and won world-wide reputations. Bradbury's, Steinway's, and Chickering's names have become household words throughout the length and breadth of the land. The tide of importation has been stemmed by our enterprising manufacturers, and turned into one of exportation. American pianos are now at a premium in the markets of the old world. The number of piano manufacturers in New York city alone is nearly two hundred; and the whole number of instruments annually made here is a trifle over twelve thousand, which is more than one-tenth of the entire number made in the United States.

We copy the above from a cotemporary, for the sake of remarking in connection with it, that we bought one of Bradbury's instruments last spring, and after using it for several months, and hearing the opinions of some of the best judges in this city—persons who have tried it, we are confident that no better piano could be made. We do not wonder, therefore, that "American pianos are now at a premium in the markets of the old world."—N. Y. Ledger.

FOR THE LADIES.

THE weather has been so bright and beautiful during the week, that I have done little else but promenade the streets and gaze in at shop windows—the weather was actually too pleasant to go iuside. I had almost forgotten my engagement with The Californian when it suddenly crossed my mind that these articles being made "a feature of the paper"—so they tell me, and I am puzzled to know what feature they represent, eyes, nose, mouth, or what—must be kept up, or it could not with a good face appear before the world. So I seated myself, and my fingers are already stained with ink. Egyptian ladies dye their nails with henna, and I don't know but that ink answers the purpose quite as well.

But rather than be told how to darken their skins, probably my readers would like to kuow how to whiten and tint them. Listen:

By way of personal adornment, few practices are of more ancient origin than that of painting the face. Toilet Rouges are prepared of different shades by mixing fine carmine with talc powder, in different proportions. Various shades are made to suit the complexions of the blonde and brunette; say, one drachm of carmine to two ounces of talc, or one of carmine to three of talc, and so on. In preparing this, the best of carmiue is esseutial to its superiority—that known as number forty being the kind.

It is a practice, universal among the women in Egypt, to blacken the edge of the eyelids, both above and below the eye, with a black powder which they term koahl. In Greece, for coloring the lashes and sockets of the eye, they throw incense on some coals of fire, intercept the smoke which ascends with a plate, and collect the soot for applying this; theu close oue of the eyes, take the two lashes between the forefinger and thumb of the left hand, pull them forward, and then thrust in at the external corner a bodkin or probe which has been immersed in the soot, and withdrawing it, the particles previously adhering to the probe remain within the eyelashes. This is thought to give a very soft expression to the eyes.

With respect to the beauty of the eye, we may remark that a large pupil is now, and always has been, cousidered a beauty. Byron, in a well-known passage, says:

"Her eye's dark charm 'twere vain to tell;
But gaze on that of the gazelle—
It will assist the fancy well;
As large, as languishingly dark.
But soul beam'd forth in every spark
That darted from beneath the lid—
Bright as the jewel of Giamschid.
Yea, soul; and should our prophet say.
That form was nought but breathing clay,
By Allah! I would answer Nay,
Though on Alsirat's arch I stood,
Which totters o'er the fiery flood!"

For dilating the pupil, one grain of sulphate of atropine is dissolved in six fluid drachms of distilled water, and a drop or two applied to the inner surface of the lid. In a short time the pupil becomes large and full, and continues so from three to four hours. This practice, however, should not be frequently indulged in, as it tends to weaken the eyes. We merely mention the modus operandi to show that it is frequently done to beautify the general appearance.

If the eyes are inclined to be inflamed after keeping late hours, the following unguent rubbed on both lids, when retiring to rest, will generally almost magically relieve them: Take of litrine ointment, one drachm. Fresh lard, three drachms. Mix.

LOVE ON THE CARPET.

Once fall into rhymes, and it is very hard to fall out. I don't know what has set these lines of Willis (I don't put N. P. before his name, for the initials might be thought to mean No Poet) running in my head. But they've been humming there the whole afternoon:

They may talk of love in a cottage,
And bowers of trellised vine—
Of nature bewitchingly simple,
And milkmaids half divine.
They may talk of the pleasure of sleeping
In the shade of a spreading tree,
And a walk in the fields at morning,
By the side of a footstep free!

But give me a sly flirtation
By the light of a chaudelier—
With music to play in the pauses,
And nobody very near;
Or a seat on a silken sofa,
With a glass of good old wine,
And mamma too blind to discover
The small white hand in mine.

Your love in a cottage is hungry,
Your vine is a net for flies—
Your milkmaids shock the Graces,
And simplicity talks of pies!
You lie down to your shady slumber
And wake with a bug in your ear,
And your damsel that walks in the morning
Is shod like a mountaineer.

True love is at home on a carpet,
And mightily likes his ease—
And true love has an eye for a dinner,
And starves beneath shady trees.
His wing is the fan of a lady,
His foot's an invisible thing,
And his arrow is tipp'd with a jewel,
And shot from a silver string.

HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.

A late English magazine makes some very excellent remarks concerning one of the lost arts. It urges wives to remember that the kitchen is the heart of the kingdom, the true seat of government in domestic economies; who rules there, rules supreme. A visit of ceremony for a few moments at a stated hour in the morning can confer no authority whatever. Neither, on the other hand, is it necessary to be meddling and muddling there perpetually, or to do anything contrary to the instincts of a lady in the way of espiouage. It is simply this, that by being actually busied in the kitchen a short time daily, by taking into her own hands the management and execution of those arrangements which require the skill and involve the entire control of the housekeeping expenditure, a mistress effectually breaks the rod of power in her cook's hands, and can sweep away at once the "perquisite" system, the waste, and the dishonest understandings with the tradesmen; because she is in a position to know within a little what is really and honestly needed and consumed, and to give her own orders. Economy, however, is not the sole benefit to follow. There is an old, but not yet superannuated maxim—if you want a thing well done, do it yourself. The tangible results upon the dinner table would be no less satisfactory than the reduced cost of their production. Nor is this a matter of slight importance. The best nourished body is, other things being equal, the most capable of sustaining meutal work and resisting disease. Bad cookery is slow poison to those who work hard. To set before a man who returns exhausted in mind and body from his day's work a messy, unappetizing dinner, is, if it occur exceptionally, to spoil his temper, or, if that be unspoilable, his comfort for the evening. But, if it occur habitually, it is to knock ten or a dozen years off his life. Then, too, it is no small satisfaction to be able, if hospitably inclined, to insure your friends a dinner which, if modest in its pretensions, is thoroughly excellent—not a specious display, such as a second or third-rate "professed" cook, or the neighboring confectioner, would set before them—every thing looking like what it isn't, and tasting of nothing in particular; not to mention that there is a double zest in witnessing the comfort and enjoyment of your guests, with the consciousness that some time and pains on your part have contributed to the result.

ABSURDITIES.

How many absurdities people—men especially—are guilty of. In a leisure momeut the other day I endeavored to compile a small list of them. Here it is:

To attempt to borrow money on the plea of extreme poverty To lose money at play, and then fly into a passion about it. To ask the publisher of a new periodical how many copies he sells per week. To ask a wine merchant how old his wine is. To make yourself generally disagreeable, and wonder that nobody will visit you, unless they gain some palpable advantage by it. To get drunk, and complain the next morning of a headache. To spend your earnings on liquor, and wouder that you are ragged. To sit shivering because it isn't cold enough to have a fire. To suppose that reviewers generally read more than the title-page of the works they praise or condemn. To judge of people's piety by their attendance at church. To keep your clerks on miserable salaries, and wonder at their robbing you. Not to go to bed when you are tired and sleepy, because "it is not bed-time." To make your servants tell lies for you, and afterwards be angry because they tell lies for themselves. To tell your own secrets, and believe other people will keep them. To render a man a service voluntarily, and expect him to be grateful for it. To expect to make people honest by hardening them in a jail, and afterwards sending them adrift without the means of getting work. To fancy a thing is cheap because a low price is asked for it. To say that a man is charitable because he subscribes to an hospital. To keep a dog or a cat on short allowance, and complain of its being a thief. To degrade human nature in the hope of improving it. To praise the beauty of a woman's hair before you know whether it did not once belong to somebody else. To expect that your tradespeople will give you long credit if they generally see you in shabby clothes. To arrive at the age of fifty, and be surprised at any vice, folly, or absurdity, your fellow-creatures may be guilty of.

HOW TO GROW PLUMP.

It isn't everybody that wants to grow lean like Banting. I know many ladies who would give a pound of gold for every pound of flesh that they could add to their scraggy shoulders and bust. For my part I am of a delightful and proper plumpness, which sometimes consoles me for not being quite as good looking as some of my friends. For the benefit of those less fortunate than myself, let me state that a lady correspondent of The Boudoir declares that she has added greatly to her weight and plumpness, by taking every morning for a few weeks the following pleasing preliminary to breakfast: Beat up well in a tumbler two raw eggs, add a good teaspoonful of sugar, fill the tumbler with boiling water, sprinkle on top a little grated nutmeg or ginger. She further alleges that the administration of this to her lean lady friends has invariably resulted in a speedy addition to their weight.

—And now I think I've filled the columns the editor gave me this week quite nicely. If I've stolen without giving the proper credit and quotation marks, I've only done by others as they very often do by me. Clara Morton.

VILLAGE VOICES.

JANUARY WIND.

I.

THE wind, wife, the wind; how it blows, how it blows;
It grips the latch, it shakes the house, it whistles, it screams, it crows,
It dashes on the window-pane, then rushes off with a cry,
Ye scarce can hear your own loud voice, it clatters so loud and high;
And far away upon the sea it floats with thunder-call,
The wind, wife, the wind, wife; the wiud that did it all!

II.

The wind, wife, the wind; how it blew, how it blew;
The very night our boy was born, it whistled, it scream'd, it crew
And while you moan'd upon your bed, and your heart was dark with fright,
I swear it mingled with the soul of the boy you bore that night;
It scarcely seems a winter since, and the wind is with us still—
The wind, wife; the wind, wife; the wind that blew us ill!

III.

The wind, wife, the wind; how it blows, how it blows!
It changes, shifts, without a cause, it ceases, it comes and goes;
And David ever was the same, wayward, and wild, and bold—
For wilful lad will have his way, and the wind no hand can hold;
But ah! the wind, the changefnl wind, was more in the blame than he;
The wind, wife; the wind, wife, that blew him out to sea!

IV.

The wind, wife, the wind; now 'tis still, now 'tis still;
And as we sit I seem to feel the silence shiver and thrill,
'Twas thus the night he went away, and we sat in silence here,
We listen'd to our beating hearts, and all was weary and drear;
We long'd to hear the wind again, and to hold our David's hand—
The wind, wife; the wiud, wife, that blew him out from laud!

V.

The wind, wife, the wind; up again, up again!
It blew our David round the world, yet shrick'd at our window pane;
And ever since that time, old wife, in rain, and in snu, and in snow,
Whether I work or weary here, I hear it whistle and blow;
It moans around, it groans around, it wanders with scream and cry—
The wind, wife; the wind, wife; may it blow him home to die!

[Robert Buchanan.

HOW HEREWARD WON MARE "SWALLOW."

ON a bench at the door of his high-roofed wooden house sat Dirk Hammerhand, the richest man in Walcheren. From within the house sounded the pleasant noise of slave-women, grinding and chatting at the handquern; from without, the pleasant noise of geese and fowls without number. And as he sat aud drank his ale, and watched the herd of horses in the fen, he thought himself a happy man, and thanked his Odin and Thor that owing to his princely supplies of horses to Countess Gertrude, Robert the Frison and his Christian Franks had not harried him to the bare walls, as they would probably do ere all was over.

As he looked at the horses, some half-mile off, he saw a strange stir among them. They begau whinnyiug and pawing round a four-footed thing in the midst, which might be a badger, or a wolf—though both were very uncommon in that pleasant isle of Walcheren; but which plainly had no business there. Whereon he took up a mighty staff, aud strode over the fen to see.

He found neither wolf nor badger; but to his exceeding surprise, a long lean man, clothed in ragged horse-skins, whinnying and neighing exactly like a horse, and then stoopiug to eat grass like one. He advanced to do the first thing which came into his head, namely to break the man's back with his staff, and ask him afterwards who he might be. But ere he could strike, the man or horse kicked up with his hind legs in his face, and then springing on to the said hind legs ran away with extraordinary swiftness some fifty yards; and theu went down ou all-fours aud began grazing again.

"Beest thou man or devil?" cried Dirk, somewhat frightened.

The thing looked up. The face at least was human.

"Art thou a Christian man?" asked it iu had Frisian, intermixed with snorts and neighs.

"What's that to thee?" growled Dirk; and began to wish a little that he was one, having heard that the sign of the cross was of great virtue in driving away fiends.

"Thou art not Christian. Thou believest in Thor and Odin? Then there is hope."

"Hope of what?" Dirk was growing more and more frightened.

"Of her, my sister! Ah, my sister, can it be that I shall find thee at last, aften ten thousand miles, aud thirty years of woful wandering?"

"I have uo man's sister here. At least, my wife's brother was killed—"

"I speak not of a sister in a woman's shape. Mine, alas!—O woful prince, O more woful princess!—eats the herb of the field somewhere in the shape of a mare, as ugly as she was once beautiful, but swifter than the swallow on the wing."

"I've none such here," quoth Dirk, thoroughly frightened, and glancing uneasily at mare "Swallow."

"You have not? Alas, wretched me! It was prophesied to me, by the witch, that I should find her in the field of one who worshipped the old gods; for had she come across a holy priest, she had been a woman again, long ago. Whither must I wander afresh!" And the thing began weeping bitterly, and theu ate more grass.

"I—that is—thou poor miserable creature," said Dirk, half pitying, half wishing to turn the subject, "leave off making a beast of thyself awhile, and tell me who thou art."

"I have made no heast of myself, most noble Earl of the Frisians, for so you doubtless are. I was made a beast of—a horse of, by an enchanter of a certain land, and my sister a mare."

"Thou dost not say so?" quoth Dirk, who considered such an event quite possible.

"I was a prince of the county of Alboronia, which lies between Cathay and the Mountains of the Moon, as fair once as I am foul uow, and only less fair than my lost sister; and, by the euchautments of a cruel magician, we became what we are."

"But thou art not a horse, at all events?"

"Am I not? Thou knowest, then, more of me than I do of myself"—and it ate more grass. "But hear the rest of my story. My hapless sister was sold away, with me, to a merchant; but I, breaking loose from him, fled until I bathed in a magic fountain. At once I recovered my man's shape, and was rejoicing thercin, when out of the fountain rose a fairy more beautiful than an elf, and smiled upon me with love.

"She asked me my story, and I told it. And when it was told, 'Wretch!' she cried, 'and coward, who hast deserted thy sister in her need. I would have loved thee, and made thee immortal as myself: but now thou shalt wander, ugly, and eating grass, clothed in the horse-hide which has just dropped from thy limbs, till thou shalt find thy sister, and bring her to bathe, like thee, in this magic well.'"

"All good spirits help us! And you are really a prince?"

"As surely," cried the thing, with a voice of sudden rapture, "as that mare is my sister;" and he rushed at mare Swallow. "I see, I see, my mother's eyes, my father's nose—"

"He must have been a chuckle-headed king that, then," grinned Dirk to himself. "The mare's nose is as big as a buck-basket. But how can she be a princess, man—prince, I mean? she has a foal running by her here."

"A foal?" said the thing, solemnly. "Let me behold it. Alas, alas, my sister! Thy tyrant's threat has come true, that thou shouldst be his bride whether thou wouldst or not. I see, I see in the features of thy son his hated lineaments."

"Why he must be as like a horse, then, as your father. But this will not do, Master Horse-man; I know that foal's pedigree better than I do my own."

"Man, man, simple, though honest! Hast thou never heard of the skill of the enchanters of the East? How they transform their victims at night back again into human shape, and by day into the shape of beasts again?"

"Yes—well—I know that—"

"And do you not see how you are deluded? Every night, doubt not, that mare aud foal take their human shape again; aud every night, perhaps, that foul enchanter visits in your fen, perhaps in your very stable, his wretched and perhaps unwilling bride."

"An enchanter in my stable? That is an ugly guest. But no. I've been into the stables fifty times, to see if that mare was safe. Mare was mare, and colt was colt, Mr. Prince, if I have eyes to see."

"And what are eyes against enchantments? The moment you opened the door, the spell was cast over them again. You ought to thank your stars that no worse has happened yet; that the euchanter, in fleeing, has not wrung your neck as he went out, or cast a spell on you, which will fire your barns, lame your geese, give your fowls the pip, your horses the glanders, your cattle the murrain, your children the St. Vitus' dance, your wife the creeping palsy, and yourself the chalk-stones iu all your fingers."

"The Lord have mercy on me! If the half of this be true, I will turn Christiau. I will send for a priest, aud he baptized to-morrow!"

"O my sister, my sister! Dost thou not know me? Dost thou answer my caresses with kicks? Or is thy heart, as well as thy body, so enchained by that cruel necromancer, that thou preferest to be his, and scornest thine own salvation, leaving me to eat grass till I die?"

"I say, Prince—I say—What would you have a man to do? I bought the mare honestly, and I have kept her well. She can't say aught against me on that score. And whether she be princess or uot, I'm loath to part with her."

"Keep her then, and keep with her the curse of all the saints and angels. Look down, ye holy saints" (and the thing poured out a long string of saints' names,) "and avenge this Catholic princess, kept in bestial durance by an unbaptized heathen! May his—"

"Don't! don't!" roared Dirk. "And don't look at me like that" (for he feared the evil eye,) "or I'll brain you with my staff!"

"Fool, if I have lost a horse's figure, I have not lost his swiftness. Ere thou couldst strike, I should have run a mile and back, to curse thee afresh." And the thing ran round him, aud fell on all-fours again, and ate grass.

"Mercy, mercy! And that is more than I ever asked yet of man. But it is hard," growled he, "that a man should lose his money, because a rogue sells him a princess in disguise."

"Then sell her again; sell her, as thou valuest thy life, to the first Christian man thou meetest. And yet no. What matters? Ere a month be over, the seven years' enchantment will have passed, and she will return to her own shape, with her son, and vanish from thy farm, leaving thee to vain repentance, and so thou wilt both lose thy money and get her curse. Farewell, and my malison abide with thee."

And the thing, without another word, ran right away, neighing as it went, leaving Dirk in a state of abject terror.

He went home. He cursed the mare, he cursed the man who sold her, he cursed the day he saw her, he cursed the day he was born. He told his story with exaggerations and confusions in plenty to all in the house; and terror fell on them likewise. No one, that evening, dare go down into the fen to drive the horses up; and Dirk got very drunk, went to bed, and trembled there all night (as did the rest of the household,) expecting the euchanter to enter on a flaming fire-drake, at every howl of the wind.

The next morning, as Dirk was going about his business with a doleful face, casting stealthy glances at the fen, to see if the mysterious mare was still there, and a chance of his money still left, a man rode up to the door.

He was poorly clothed, with a long rusty sword by his side. A broad felt hat, long boots, and a haversack behiud his saddle, showed him to be a traveller, seemingly a horse-dealer; for there followed him, tied head and tail, a brace of sorry nags.

"Heaven save all here," quoth he, making the sign of the cross. "Can any good Christian give me a drink of milk?"

"Ale, if thou wilt," said Dirk. "But what art thou, and whence?"

On any other day, he would have tried to coax his guest into trying a buffet with him for his horse and clothes; but this morning his heart was heavy with the thought of the enchanted mare, and he welcomed the chance of selling her to the stranger.

"We are not very fond of strangers about here, since these Flemings have been harrying our borders. If thou art a spy, it will be worse for thee."

"I am neither spy nor Fleming; but a poor servant of the Lord Bishop of Utrecht's, buying a garron or two for his lordship's priests. As for these Flemings, may St. John Baptist save from them both me and you. Do you know of any man who has horses to sell hereabouts?"

"There are horses in the fen yonder," quoth Dirk, who knew that churchmen were likely to give a liberal price, and pay in good silver.

"I saw them as I rode up. And a fine lot they are; but of too good a stamp for my short purse, or for my holy master's riding—a fat priest likes a quiet nag, my master."

"Humph. Well, if quietness is what you need, there is a mare down there, a child might ride her with a thread of wool. But as for price—and she has a colt, too, running by her."

"Ah?" quoth the horseman. "Well, your Walcheren folk make good milk, that's certain. A colt by her? That's awkward. My Lord does not like young horses; and it would be troublesome, too, to take the thing along with me."

The less anxious the dealer seemed to buy, the more anxious grew Dirk to sell; but he concealed his anxiety, and let the stranger turn away, thanking him for his drink.

"I say!" he called after him. "You might look at her as you ride past the herd."

The stranger assented, and they went down into the fen, and looked over the precious mare, whose feats were afterwards sung by many an English fireside, or in the forest, beneath the hollins green, by such as Robin Hood aud his merry men. The ugliest, as well as the swiftest, of mares, she was, say the old chroniclers; and it was not till the stranger had looked twice at her, that he forgot her great chuckle head, greyhound-flanks, and drooping hind-quarters, aud began to see the great length of those same quarters—the thighs let down into the hocks, the arched loin, the extraordinary girth through the saddle, the sloping shoulder, the long arms, the flat knees, the large, well-set hoofs, and all the other points which showed her strength and speed, and justified her fame.

"She might carry a big man like you through the mud," said he, carelessly, "but as for pace, one cannot expect that with such a chuckle head. And if one rode her through a town, the boys would call after one, 'All head and no tail.' Why, I can't see her tail for her quarters, it is so ill set on."

"Ill set on, or none," said Dirk, testily; "don't go to speak against her pace till you have seen it. Here, lass!"

Dirk was, in his heart, rather afraid of the princess; but he was comforted when she came up to him like a dog.

"She's as sensible as a woman," said he; and then grumbled to himself, "may be she knows I mean to part with her."

"Lend me your saddle," said he to the stranger.

The stranger did so; and Dirk mounting galloped her in a ring. There was no doubt of her powers, as soon as she began to move.

"I hope you won't remember this against me, madam," said Dirk, as soon as he got out of the stranger's hearing. "I can't do less than sell you to a Christian. And certainly I have been as good a master to you as if I'd known who you were; but if you wish to stay with me you've only to kick me off, and say so, and I'm yours to command."

"Well, she can gallop a bit," said the stranger, as Dirk pulled her up and dismounted; "but an ugly brute she is nevertheless, and such a one as I should not care to ride, for I am a gay man among the ladies. However, what is your price?"

Dirk named twice as much as he would have taken.

"Half that, you mean." And the usual haggle began.

"Tell thee what," said Dirk at last, "I am a man who has his fancies; and this shall be her price; half thy bid, and a box on the ear."

The demon of covetousness had entered Dirk's heart. What if he got the money, brained or at least disabled the stranger, and so had a chance of selling the mare a second time to some fresh comer?

"Thou art a strange fellow," quoth the horse-dealer. "But so be it."

Dirk chuckled. "He does not know," thought he, "that he has to do with Dirk Hammerhand," and he clenched his fist in anticipation of his rough joke.

"There," quoth the stranger, counting out the money carefully, "is thy coin. And there—is thy box on the ear."

And with a blow which rattled over the fen, he felled Dirk Hammerhand to the ground.

He lay senseless for a moment, and then looked wildly round His jaw was broken.

"Villain!" groaned he. "It was I who was to give the buffet, not thou!"

"Art mad?" asked the stranger, as he coolly picked up the coins, which Dirk had scattered in his fall. "It is the seller's business to take, and the buyer's to give."

And while Dirk roared for help in vain, he leapt on mare Swallow and rode off shouting, "Aha! Dirk Hammerhand! So you thought to knock a hole in my skull, as you have done to many a better man than yourself. He is a lucky man who never meets his match, Dirk. I shall give your love to the Enchanted Prince, my faithful serving-man, whom they call Martin Lightfoot.

Dirk cursed the day he was born. Instead of the mare and colt, he had got the two wretched garrons which the stranger had left, and a face which made him so tender of his own teeth, that he never again offered to try a buffet with a stranger.

[From Kingsley's "Hereward."

THE FROG PRINCE.

ONE fine evening a young princess put on her bonnet and clogs, and went out to take a walk by herself in a wood, and when she came to a cool spring of water that rose in the midst of it, she sat herself down to rest a while. Now, she had a golden ball in her hand, which was her favorite plaything, and she was always tossing it up into the air, and catching it again as it fell. After a time she threw it up so high that she missed catching it as it fell, and the ball bounded away and rolled along upon the ground, till at last it fell down into the spring.

The princess looked into the spring after her ball, but it was very deep—so deep that she could not see to the bottom of it. Then she began to bewail her loss, and said:

"Alas! if I could only get my ball again, I would give all my fine clothes and jewels, and everything that I have in the world."

Whilst she was speaking, a frog put its head out of the water, and said:

"Princess, why do you weep so bitterly?"

"Alas," said she, "what can you do for me, you nasty frog? My golden ball has fallen into the spring."

The frog said: "I want not your pearls, and jewels, and fine clothes; but if you will love me, and let me live with you, and eat from off your golden plate, and sleep upon your bed, I will bring your ball again."

"What nonsense," thought the princess, "this silly frog is talking! He can never get out of the spring to visit me, though he may be able to get my ball for me, and therefore I will tell him he shall have what he asks." So she said to the frog: "Well, if you will bring me my ball, I will do all you ask."

Then the frog put his head down, and dived deep under the water; and after a little he came up again, with the ball in his mouth, and threw it on the edge of the spring. As soon as the young princess saw her ball, she ran to pick it up; and she was so overjoyed to have it in her hand again, that she never thought of the frog, but ran home with it as fast as she could. The frog called after her:

"Stay, princess, and take me with you, as you said."

But she did not stop to hear a word.

The next day, just as the princess had sat down to dinner, she heard a strange noise—tap, tap—plash, plash—as if something was coming up the marble staircase; and soon afterwards there was a gentle knock at the door, and a little voice cried out and said:

"Open the door, my princess dear,
Open the door to thy true love, here!
And mind the words that thou and I said,
By the fountain cool, in the greenwood shade."

Then the princess ran to the door and opened it, and there she saw the frog, whom she had quite forgotten. At this she was sadly frightened, and, shutting the door as fast as she could, came back to her seat. The king, her father, seeing that something had frightened her, asked her what was the matter.

"There is a nasty frog," said she, "at the door, that lifted my ball for me out of the spring this morning; I told him that he should live with me here, thinking that he could never get out of the spring; but there he is at the door, and he wants to come in."

While she was speaking, the frog knocked again at the door, and said:

"Open the door, my princess dear,
Open the door to thy true love, here!
And mind the words that thou and I said,
By the fountain cool, in the greenwood shade."

Then the king said to the young princess:

"As you have given your word, you must keep it; so go and let him in."

She did so, and the frog hopped into the room, and then straight on—tap, tap—plash, plash—from the bottom of the room to the top, till he came up close to the table where the princess sat.

"Pray lift me upon a chair," said he to the princess, "and let me sit next to you."

As soon as she had done this, the frog said:

"Put your plate near me, that I may eat out of it."

This she did, and when he had eaten as much as he could, he said:

"Now I am tired; carry me up stairs, and put me into your bed."

And the princess, though very unwilling, took him up in her hand, and put him upon the pillow of her own bed, where he slept all night long. As soon as it was light he jumped up, hopped down stairs, and went out of the house.

"Now, then," thought the princess, "at last he is gone, and I shall be troubled with him no more."

But she was mistaken; for when night came again she heard the same tapping at the door; and the frog came once more, and said:

"Open the door, my princess dear,
Open the door to thy true love, here!
And mind the words that thou and I said,
By the fountain cool, in the greenwood shade."

And when the princess opened the door, the frog came in, and slept upon her pillow as before, till the morning broke. And the third night he did the same. But when the princess awoke on the following morning, she was astonished to see, instead of the frog, a handsome prince, gazing on her with the most beautiful eyes she had ever seen, and standing at the head of her bed.

He told her that he had been enchanted by a spiteful fairy, who had changed him into a frog; and that he had been fated so to abide till some princess should take him out of the spring, and let him eat from her plate, and sleep upon her bed for three nights.

"You," said the prince, "have broken this cruel charm, and now I have nothing to wish for but that you should go with me into my father's kingdom, where I will marry you, and love you as long as you live."

The young princess, you may be sure, was not long in saying "yes" to all this; and as they spoke, a gay coach drove up, with eight beautiful horses, decked with plumes of feathers and golden harness; and behind the coach rode the prince's servant, faithful Heinrich, who had bewailed the misfortunes of his dear master, during his enchantment, so long and so bitterly, that his heart had well-nigh burst.

They then took leave of the king, and got into the coach with eight horses, and all set out, full of joy and merriment, for the prince's kingdom, which they reached safely; and there they lived happily a great many years.

MANNA.—Some persons have attempted to trace a connection between the food miraculously rained down from heaven, for the sustenance of the Israelites in the wilderness, and the substance now known as "manna." Of the composition of the former we know nothing; while we do know that the latter cannot be used as food.

The manna now used is obtained chiefly from Sicily and Calabria, and is the concrete juice of several species of ash of the genera ornus and fraxinus. The juice exudes in the summer months, either spontaneously or through incisions made for the purpose in the bark, and is collected in leaves placed as cups to receive it; or it forms incrustations upon twigs, straws and leaves, placed under the trees. The best is of a whitish or light yellow color, in flakes and tears. It possesses a sweet, somewhat nauseous taste, and is soluble in water and alcohol. It consists of a crystalizable sweet principle, called "mannite," which sometimes amounts to seventy-five per cent. of true sugar, and of a yellow nauseous matter, which gives it its value as a purgative medicine.

A substance called manna is obtained by the Bedouin Arabs in the form of an exudation from a plant which grows in the country. After collecting it, they boil it, and strain it through a cloth. It is then put away in leathern bags, and used like honey, with bread.

The name is probably derived from the Syriac mano, a gift, which was applied to the food of the Israelites; but it is not likely that there is any further connexion between the two substances.

[For the Californian.]

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

PLANT-GROWING.

THE perfection of gardening is to produce plants grown in the way best calculated to set off their natural beauties; and perhaps there is nothing upon which cultivators are more likely to fall into errors than in the form of the various plants under their care.

Beauty is not very easily defined, for it may be seen in every tribe of plants and nearly every family of flowers. Whatever has too many or too few leaves cannot be beautiful as a whole, but its flowers may be all that can be desired. On the other hand, a plant, very splendid in habit, may have very little flower, and that little ugly. A plant to be beautiful must have a fine proportion of bloom, graceful foliage, and be of graceful form. In a general way a plant is not considered beautiful unless it shows an abundance of flowers evenly disposed over the surface of green, graceful, compact habit, whether bushy, pyramidal, or standard; colors of flowers not necessarily brilliant but dense; blooms large in proportion to the plant, or in racemes, trusses, umbels or bunches to form a sufficiently large feature; foliage shining like a camellia, dense like a rose, or velvety like a gesneria. These are qualities indispensable to make a plant beautiful.

Nevertheless there are plants with ugly foliage and beautiful flowers, like the cactus; and there are others the reverse, like the varieties of the variegated-foliage plants. And so with florists' flowers: many of these have insignificant plants, such as the carnations and picotees, some of whose flowers are beautiful beyond description, while the plant is a mere tuft of grass with long gawky stems unable to support themselves. But many others of this class are beautiful objects when properly and naturally grown, such as the fuchsia, cineraria, calceolaria, and geranium.

The growing of specimen plants requires first, that we should study and observe the habit of the subject, and aid in producing it in the best possible style. If a plant is naturally of pyramidal growth, it needs little else than rubbing off the buds wherever they are going to shoot and are not wanted, to throw the vigor of the plant into the branches that are necessary. If the plant is an irregular bushy grower, always take out useless shoots as soon as they appear, and stop any that appear to take the lead too soon. If the plant is of straggling growth, with long shoots, continually clip the ends of the branches, until the plant has been brought to the desired shape and form.

There are some plants naturally pendulous, with branches too weak to stand out without props; but what does this suggest? Why, that they are to hang down. We might as well prop up a weeping ash or weeping willow as to prop up any other weeping or drooping plant. If you have a plant of this kind, make a standard of it, and give it a chance to display its beauties.

It is half the battle to understand the natural growth of a plant, and it is the other half to make the best use of that habit when you cultivate it. The formation of a standard is simple enough, no matter what it is. The main stem or leader must have the lower side-branches constantly removed, until the stem has gone up as tall as we require it; but we must not, while it is growing, take off the branches too high up. When we have the stem as high as we wish it, the top may be checked, to induce the side shoots of the head to grow; and the ends of the side branches should be stopped in the same way, so that it will become bushy. With the proper treatment, in this way, a plant may be made to assume almost any shape desired. If plant purchasers would only have the same eye to symmetry and form that they exhibit in making their other purchases, the gardeners and florists would soon find it to their interest to grow better plants than they now have for sale. The most of them are a disgrace to the name of gardening; and how any lady can be tempted to purchase such distorted, ill-shapen objects, is a wonder, since they have such correct perceptions in other matters of form and proportion.

The most common plant, when well grown, with healthy foliage, without even a flower on it, would be an object of more admiration and pleasure than the most showy flower on a poor, miserable, deformed plant, such as is usually seen in this locality.

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

Feb. 18th. St. Simeon of Jerusalem, Speedwell, (Veronica vivensis.)
Feb. 19th. St. Barbatus, Field Speedwell, (Veronica agrestis.)
Feb. 20th. St. Mildred, Navelwort, (Cynoglossum omphalodes.)
Feb. 21st. St. Serviamus, White Crocus, (Crocus versicolor.)
Feb. 22d. St. Margaret of Cortona, Herb Margaret, (Bellis perrenis.)
Feb. 23d. St. Milburge, Apricot, (Prunus Armeniaca.)
Feb. 24th. St. Ethelbert, Great Fern, (Osmundia regalis.)

IRIS.

THE happiest man in the world is the man with just wealth enough to keep him in spirits, and just children enough to make him industrious.

THE Gospel of the day—The Gospel according to St. Lucre.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1866.

THE PRESIDENT'S POSITION.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S position at the preseut moment is not a particularly enviable one. A native of the South, but siding with the North from the very inception of the rebellion, denunciation the loudest, vituperation the coarsest, and invective the most bitter, have been heaped upon his head by Southern extremists. The son of a plebeian, and a tailor himself, he could never have the support of the chivalry under any circumstances, while the position which he took and so manfully occupied through the rebellion was construed into an additional crime which shut him forever out from all Southern sympathy. No concessions which he could now make to their prejudices or their pride could give him place in their affections.

And now he has alienated from himself a corresponding wing of the nation—the radicals of the North. We congratulate President Johnson, for the endorsement of extremists is precisely what an Executive should strive not to obtain.

Consistency is, very often: the best thing that can be done under the circumstances. The action of the South, in rising against the general government, was rebellion, if ever rebellion existed on earth. And the law prescribes but one way of dealing with rebels. In the outset we refused to accord belligerent rights to our opponents, and a state paper was issued declaring all men taken upon the seas, in arms against the commerce of the United States, pirates, and that as pirates they would be dealt with. But they were not. To have been consistent, every rebel taken should have been hanged, particularly those taken upon the sea, but they were treated as prisoners of war. And, notwithstanding the unpleasantness of the concession, we were at last compelled to concede belligerent rights to our opponents and conduct the struggle according to the rules of legitimate war, exchanging prisoners, receiving and sending flags of truce, and entering into treaties and stipulations. Consistency demanded a different course, but what else could be done?

Now, that the war is over, what course are we to pursue? After fighting under the banner of the Constitution, are we to fling the Constitution aside the moment that the fight is won? Reconstruction is necessary, but upon what basis is reconstruction to be effected? Having refused to allow the South to nullify, and having spent millions of money and poured out enough blood to float half the navies of the world to preserve the Union and maintain the Constitution intact, are we now to inaugurate nullification at the North? Having conquered, are we now to "make a wilderness and call it Peace?" This is what the radicals demand.

If Union was worth fighting for, it is certainly worth having. It certainly were a sad reflection to think that, after all, we have resorted to the stern logic of arms in defence of a bubble which the points of our bayonets have pricked and broken forever. During the war we deprecated the spirit which was begotten as the struggle progressed. If the South was indeed peopled by the fiends which were pictured to us, why fight for a Union with them?—better fight for Union with Apache or Comanche savages. The phrase "social amenities" was sneered at as the war waxed to a close, but what else is to supplant the iron non-intercourse of war? Annihilation of the conquered is scarcely to be thought of, much as it would gratify the extreme radical wing of the North. Nor can we keep our foot upon the neck of the subdued unless we maintain a standing army in their midst at an expense which would soon impoverish as well as depopulate the nation. Slavery is forever abolished, and the Constitution offers itself as a solution of all our difficulties. Why sneer at its provisions, when it was under its banner that our battles were fought? Adopting it as the light by which to be guided in this moment so fraught with difficulty and danger, President Johnson's position is unassailable, and, even were the absurd threat of his impeachment and removal from office carried out, he would still have the satisfaction of being right—which a great statesman has declared is better than to be President.

A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

A STEP in the right direction has been taken by the Senate of the State. The American Flag newspaper of this city published the statement that seven Senators had been bribed by the payment of $12,000 to each, to vote against the repeal of the Specific Contract Law. The editor of the Flag has been summoned before the Senate to substantiate the charge, and, neither making it good nor answering the questions put to him, he was very properly committed to the county jail for contempt.

The recklessness of the Flag's course, and the maliciousness and falsity of its charges, have passed into a by-word, bringing it into general disrepute among all whose esteem is worth having. Our chief public officers, and especially the military commandants of the coast, have been repeatedly branded in its columns as guilty of malfeasance, corruption, and other crimes—all to gratify some private grievance, real or fancied. Without running over the whole list of those who have thus been libelled, we may simply mention that gray-haired veteran, the late lamented Gen. Wright; Gen. McDowell; Gen. Drum—the latter officer probably owing his present rank, in some degree, to the abuse of the Flag, which has now come to be considered as an endorsement of merit worthy in most cases of promotion by brevet. Of the number of private citizens that would have suffered—had it been within the Flag's power to make them suffer—by the spread of evil report, we have not space to recapitulate one-half the list. There were no loyal men on the coast, it claimed, save its subscribers, and advertising in its columns was made the test of political soundness, all who refused to yield it that support being whistled down the wind as Copperheads.

In this instance the Flag has gone a little too far. To publish that there are runs upon banks when there are not, for the purpose of creating panics, or to circulate the false report that this or that man is a Copperhead and traitor, was all well enough, for no harm could be done after its animus was known; but to impeach seven Senators for bribery—not stating specifically who they were, but leaving suspicion to hover over the whole Senate, was decidedly unwise. Anything that advertises a journal is commonly supposed to aid its circulation; but to have its editor arraigned and branded as a malicious libeller will scarcely benefit the Flag, we imagine.

ENCORES.

IF there be one nuisance at a place of amusement more noticeable than crying babies, sharp-elbowed spinsters, bucolic couples who carry on love-making in audible whispers, or a gentleman seated next you who keeps time to the music by drumming on his teeth with the head of his cane or a bootjack, it certainly is the custom of encoring. At a negro minstrel performance, especially, where sentimental songs are as much out of place as whistling would be at a funeral, to gratify the whim of a few weak-eyed spoonies in the galleries, the whole audience have to sit and listen to "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," resung until they have a strong desire to stone the singer to death. It is an unfortunate fact that encores always come from persons who are as ignorant of music as they are of propriety, so that the worst things on the programme are invariably the ones that are repeated.

Aside from the injustice to a great portion of the audience, these encores are cruel to the performers. After singing through a difficult piece—one of those pieces which some one wished were impossible—turning pirouettes on the very tips of their toes, or throwing a dozen handsprings backwards, a performer, much as he feels the honor of the encore, would much prefer to be excused from an immediate repetition of the feat. But these enthusiastic wearers of heavy-heeled boots and carriers of stout canes have as little mercy as clod-hoppers sometimes have for their beasts, howling, and whistling, and cat-calling until the poor performer, already in the very last stage of exhaustion, yields to their exactions.

We suggest that encoring be forbidden in all places of amusement as strictly as spitting on the seats or hanging the legs over the balconies, and that a regular policeman be employed to enforce the rule, putting out the first person who dares to violate it—and not returning his money at the door.

When the programme is a long one, the nuisance is fairly unbearable. Down in the middle or at the very close there may be some gem which the majority are eagerly waiting to hear, but to gratify some gentleman just released from a ten years' residence in San Quentin or an equal service upon the Plains, who has never heard "Ever of Thee" or "The Cottage by the Sea," they have to sit and listen to the dreary repetition of these tunes until the singers are crack-voiced and incapable of doing justice to the rest of the programme.

At the foot of the programmes of the minstrel troupe now performing here there is a notice: "Owing to the length of performance, no encores will be received." They might say to the elements that, as their interest demanded good weather, it must neither blow nor rain. The announcement seems simply to act as a hint to boors to bellow and beat their boots to pieces in enforcing encores. If the minstrels wish to suppress the nuisance effectually, let them mount a huge squirt-gun upon the stage, and play upon the first man, woman or child who persists in keeping up an uproar after a signal is given from the stage to stop. If a mild measure like that does not prove effectual, a small Parrot-gun planted so as to command the house, or a few sharp-shooters posted up in the flies, might prove a pregnant hint towards the preservation of order. But whatever the means adopted, let one end be secured—a total doing away with encores, save under the most extraordinary circumstances.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE Wild Irish Mother was withdrawn from the Opera House stage on Monday night, the Child Stealer stealing away to make room for another novelty of dramatic art. Mrs. Edwin, on the last three representations, appeared in the role of "Ellen O'Brien," and the piece was materially benefitted by the change. On Monday evening, Marcillac, or The Honest Man, was produced. An honest man is said to be the noblest work of God, but this is a translation from the French by Harry Courtaine, who made his reappearance on Monday evening, after a prolonged absence from our stage. For quite a number of months past Mr. Courtaine has been sojourning in the Sage Brush, in close communion with the literati of that Areopagus. The alkali of the region having neutralized the effect of the literati, he returns to us in an improved condition of mind and body, and as yet has not once disappointed the management or the public. So favorable was his reception, that we trust he will be encouraged to continue in the paths of pleasantness and the ways of sobriety. Marcillac is a translation of a very Frenchy drama, most thoroughly improbable in plot, and inconsistent in character. The hero, "Robin," (Mr. Courtaine,) like the Rudge raven, reiterates that he is a devil all through the piece, but turns out to be a very simple fellow at the dénouement. The dénouement is weak enough, a tea-bell and a small Hibernicon constituting the climax. We admire the originality of Robin in giving the mistress of his affections a hand-bell, by the aid of which she can ring for her future husband as though he were a muffin instead of a muff, but we cannot endorse the brilliancy of the idea, particularly as emanating from one who has been a sensible, shrewd fellow all through, playing himself off for the devil. Still, the piece is ingeniously constructed, and had the author strengthened the dénouement, and pitched the tea-bell and doxology which he chants to his lady love to the dogs, it would have proved a decided hit. As Robin, Mr. Courtaine was excellent, and merited all the applause he received. "Jean Gauthier"—a man who had sworn to let no words but "yes" and "no" pass his lips, even to his own wife and children, until some one appeared speaking a pass-phrase which would authorize him to reveal a certain secret—was personated by Mr. Thorne, who managed to make his ayes and noes prominent features of the piece. Mr. Jackson, as "Chevalier de la Rapiniere," was very good indeed, and we are glad to be able at last to speak one line of praise for him without qualification. Marcillac was played until Friday evening, when it gave place to Delicate Ground, Little Toddlekins, and A Day After the Fair, for a benefit. This afternoon the two latter pieces will be played, and this evening the charming comedienne Emily Thorne reappears upon our stage as "Hester Grazebrook," in The Unequal Match. The Seven Sisters is in active preparation.

At the Metropolitan, The Brown's Horse has had a most successful run, drawing as a bronze horse should. It ought to have put out an extra pull for Mr. Tibbetts' benefit, but Monday evening is seldom favorable to theatricals. It has not been very easy for the actors to lose their cues in this piece, but Mr. Leach contrived to lose his one eveuing in coming down through a skylight, it catching among the shingles and remaining on the roof. The waterfall of Kao-Jan still remains the admiration of thousands. And still the many actors and actresses in this excellent extravaganza—put upon the stage after a fashion that should serve as a model to many managements—"act well their parts, there all the honor lies." Friday evening, the company performed at San José. This evening, The Mormons, or Female Life at Salt Lake, will be produced. Monday evening, for the benefit of doorkeepers and ushers, The Lakes of Killarney and The Elves will be played. The Naiad Queen is in rehearsal, and, if it be brought out as was The Bronze Horse, it cannot fail to prove a success.

From the Academy of Music to the Anatomical Museum the journey is as easy as the contrast is striking, for one has only to step around the corner. "Men know thyself," is a favorite injunction, and we do not know a better opportunity of becoming acquainted with oneself than by dropping in at a place where one can see his backbone beautifully done in wax, and his lungs cast in plaster. Determined to shed light upon the community, the proprietors mounted a moveable calcium light on the roof of their establishment Thursday evening, which threw its rays up and down the street and far through the fogs that hung over and around the city. A better device for making a raise could not be adopted.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

FROM ROMAN'S.

IN Hammond on Wakefulness, we have an excellent thing to put a person to sleep. Not that the book is dry or stupid, for the contrary is the case, but reading so much about sleep is like inhaling the breath of poppies, and one feels very much like dropping off in a doze. Sancho Panza blessed the man who invented sleep, and many thousands will bless Dr. Hammond if his suggestions enable them to avail themselves of the invention. For what is worse than to tumble about all the night through, feeling that one ought to go to sleep to prepare one for the duties of the morrow, and yet unable to close one's eyes? The picture of a man sleepless through all eternity carries to one familiar with the torture of wakefulness more of terror than that of Prometheus bound upon the rock, Ixion revolving upon the wheel, or Sisyphus toiling to roll the vexatious stone up the summitless hill. Among the causes of wakefulness, a rush of blood to the head is mentioned as prominent. Those subject to the flushed face, the throbbing of the carotids and temples, the suffusion of the eyes and the feeling of fulness in the head, which this abnormal condition produces, will be glad to learn that bromide of potassium, taken in doses of from ten to thirty grains, is said by Dr. Hammond to be a perfect cure, all the unpleasant symptoms disappearing as by magic under its use. The use of opium, valerian, assafœtida, and other antispasmodics, is deprecated in cases of wakefulness, tonics being recommended as almost always useful. Plainly cooked and nutritious food for supper—in some cases stimulants, such as good whiskey, lager beer, Tarragona wine, or coffee—warm baths, and the application of cold water to the head, are prescribed, the treatment of course varying with different cases and individuals.

The Devotional Study of the Scriptures, by the Rev. Edward Meyrick Gouldburn, contains the substance of some sermons on the subject, delivered by the author while Chaplain of Rugby School to his young congegration. As a means of helping the young over some of the difficulties which beset and bewilder the student of the sacred volume, Dr. Goulburn's book is a very valuable one.

Mildred's Wedding reminds one very much, in its involutions and convolutions, of some of Wilkie Collins' most popular novels. Containing enough plot for a dozen dramas, the dramatist would find the task of condensing it a most difficult one, and probably would have to end his ambitious attempt by playing it serially like the Braddon novels—"to be continued." It is published as an auto-biography; to say that it amuses and enthralls from beginning to end, is simply to repeat what the London Athenæum says of it. It is a reprint of an English novel. Francis Derrick being the author.

NOT FROM ROMAN'S.

For the Grant and Sherman; their Campaigns and Generals, of J. T. Headley, Mr. E. E. Spear is the general agent in this city. This work is the most complete history of these celebrated campaigns which we have yet seen, and Mr. Headley, by his spirited style and connected narrative has given to it more than the interest of a romance. The work is illustrated with battle pictures, and the portraits of prominent generals.

The Tribune Almanac for the year is out. As usual it contains a considerable amount of well digested information, but the publishers could very well afford to circulate it free, for aside from advertising the Tribune extensively, just one half the book is devoted to general advertisements, chief among which are quack medicines. On one page we have a table of the tides, and on the next the virtues of Constitution Water—a water which the editors of the Tribune certainly have never drank of very freely—are set forth. What necessity to buy an almanac of this kind when the proprietors of medicines circulate similar ones gratuitously?

E. R. Highton publishes a pamphlet entitled Some General Observations on Matters of Public Interest, with special reference to the municipal government of San Francisco. Without having time to give Mr. Highton's work the critical perusal it demands, a glance through its pages convinces us that he has spared no pains in possessing himself of statistics and data to build his observations upon, and that many of his suggestions are worthy of adoption.

THE Report of the Mercantile Library comes to us with the compliments of Librarian Webb. In this little work Mr. Webb fully sustains the reputation he sometime since won as the feuilletoniste of the Golden Era, and more permanently established by his poetical contributions to a little volume called Outcroppings. We notice with some surprise that more works of romance are taken from the library than historical and scientific ones, and that the nearer the approach to saffron the cover, the more the demand for a book. Let Mr. Webb educate his parish up to a better standard.

IT is always safe even to learn from our enemies; seldom safe to venture to instruct even our friends.

[For the Californian.]

SUNSET.

ALONG yon purple rim of hills,
How bright the sunset glory lies!
Its radiance spans the western skies,
And all the slumbrous valley fills:

Broad shafts of lurid crimson, blent
With lustrous pearl in massèd white;
And one great spear of amber light
That flames o'er half the firmament!

Vague, murmurous sounds the breezes bear;
A thousand subtle breaths of balm,
From some far isle of tropic calm,
Are borne upon the trancèd air.

And, muffling all its giant-roar,
The restless waste of waters, rolled
To one broad sea of liquid gold,
Goes singing up the shining shore!

INA D. COOLBRITH.

[For the Californian.]

WHY WOMEN DRESS.

[THE reader will be a little surprised at the naïve way in which Hagar reveals the secrets of the prison-house, telling the outside world how complexions are made up and paint and things are put on. There is a sort of escaped-nun air about the story that is quite as refreshing as it is convincing. Men, who were doubters ever as well as deceivers, will now become confirmed sceptics in all that pertains to female charms—particularly the charm of complexion. To this complexion we have come at last. We are rather surprised, however, that Hagar should flatter man's vanity by assuring us that it is for him that they dress and "spend sleepless nights and anxious days."]

"The true explanation of the prevailing extravagance in costume is that women dress for one another."

WOMEN dress for one another! for one another!! That statement is all nonsense; women do not dress for one another: we dress for you, gentlemen—for you alone. It is a pity to spoil a pleasing delusion, but it is a duty to correct errors. We hear and read a great deal about the sinful and reckless extravagance of women. "The Rict of the Women"—an article setting forth our fearful extravagance and its no less fearful consequences—appeared, quoted from the Round Table, in nearly every paper published in this State. Indeed one has only to pick up a newspaper or a magazine to find something on the never-failing topic—"the extravagance of the women."

I for one am tired of so much censure, and think the time has come when justice demands that we investigate the causes of such ruinous effects. I think enough has been said to rouse woman to reflect on the evil of her ways, and at the same time say a word occasionally in self-defence. Bearing these terrible accusations in silence is equivalent to acknowledging them to be deserved. To add injury to injury, gentlemen, after douching us with our own isms and follies through the press, you sum them all in the one word "extravagance," and make the bold and false statement that women dress for one another. According to that theory, women dress up to look pretty when in company with each other. I wish you could see us when we are where we do not expect to meet gentlemen. You would see different looking specimens of perfection from the lady of faultless toilet that you meet in the parlor and on the street. You know what lunch parties are, do you not? They are a California institution as far as my knowledge of them goes—and very stupid at that. When invited to one of these entertainments, the first inquiry a lady makes is: "Will there be any gentlemen present?" It is very seldom the latter worthies attend ladies' lunch parties. What I was going to say is this: You would be astonished to see the difference the reply makes in the lady's dress arrangements. If there are to be no gentlemen present, she proceeds with the novel or fancy-work with she may be engaged, spending very little time in dressing, I assure you. But if there is to be even one gentleman present, you would be surprised to know the number of hours we spend in dressing, the length of time we stand before the mirror, and the number of times we turn round before it.

When invited to take a ride by a lady, do you suppose we keep her waiting for at least three hours while we run, to be gone "just a moment," to put on cloak and hat? Think how many times you, my gentleman critic, have been kept waiting that long, with nothing to do to amuse yourself except to pace up and down the floor of a gloomy parlor. And all this while that lady was dressing for you. You are mistaken when you think we would spend so much precious time—I might say our whole lives—and next to the last cent we possess, in dressing to look pretty to please one another. No, no gentlemen, it is for you we do all this. Ladies would not spoil their complexions by using ruinous paints on the face, knowing they lend only a passing charm, for one another—never. It is for you we do it all. You do not know the difference between natural and artificial beauty. You do not know whether the pretty flush on the face is natural or "put on." You do not know whether the softness and fairness of a pretty face is nature's work or "liquid pearl"—the fashionable name for whitewash. Indeed you do not. To use your own words, gentlemen, you "only know when a woman looks well." You may think you know a painted face, but you do not. I could not detect it myself if I had not seen the paint put on and were not familiar with this branch of high art. And just here, in confidence, I will explain the modus operandi. In the first place we wash the face over with a whitewash, let the face dry, then rub it gently with a flannel cloth; next apply the red to the cheeks, again apply the whitewash, again let the face dry, smoothing it over with the flannel as before. Again put a little rouge on the cheeks and finish by applying to the whole face a coat of "liquid pearl." That is the way we do it! And as long as you think the pretty face which we make up a genuine one, what is the difference whether it is or not? Oh, but you are deluded about some things! A few days ago when walking with Mr. H., all at once, stopping as suddenly as though a streak of lightning had flashed across his path and he was afraid of stepping on it, he said to me, "Hagar, who is that lady that just bowed to you?" After breathing a full, easy breath, relieved to find that I had done nothing to cause his excitement, I replied in the most matter-of-fact manner—"It was Miss So-and-so." His next exclamations were, "beautiful!" "charming!!" lovely!!!" I had seen that face at a time of day when gentlemen are not supposed to see ladies. I had seen that face when it presented a different appearance from that which captured him on the street. But as he thought the face what it seemed, I was not going to undeceive him, no, no. And though I knew as we walked along that he was contrasting that girl's bright face and dark shining locks with my dull face and faded golden hair, I only remarked, meekly, "Yes, she is very beautiful."

Who describe the belle of a ball room, telling what she wore, how she had her hair done up, the color and quality of her complexion and eyes, lips and teeth? Gentlemen. Women dress for one another! Absurd. It is for you, who condemn our extravagance, that we promenade the streets with three-quarters of a yard of rich silk or velvet trailing behind us; it is for you we spend sleepless nights and anxious days, devising ways and means to look charming and to please; it is for you we spend our last dollar for dress, and go half-starved and comfortless in consequence. It is for you; we are just what you make us. Do not, then, be so inconsistent as to blame woman for being what she is; do not lay all the awful sins of the unnatural life you compel her to lead at her door. Such inconsistency does not accord with the dignity and wisdom of man. Remembering that the accusations which you heap upon her reflect back upon your own souls—that you will have to answer for the greater weight of woman's sins at the great day of settling accounts—reflect, and do not be too severe upon your own works, if they are evil.

HAGAR.

BORROWING OUR FASHIONS.—A London fashion paper says that English ladies are adopting the custom of the Americans of wearing pistols in their belts. The writer disapproves of the custom, though we are told the pistols of the English ladies are small and jewelled, and for ornament, not for use—unlike the blunderbusses of their lady-cousins in this country. An aumoniere is said to be more in keeping with the benificent character of woman. The only mistake of the London writer is in saying that American ladies wear pistols. It is cannon they carry, of the largest calibre—Dahlgren kind. They carry them to fire salutes at each other on meeting.

A WORK has just been published by C. Schroeder Van der Kolk, entitled "Soul and Body" (Seele und Leib,) in which he endeavors to prove that what is called soul is simply the manifestation of brain, just as digestion is the function of the stomach. He says memory, imagination, reason, and even volition, are but the result of physical actions, or electro-molecular, excited by the operation of perception—the contact with the outer world.

NOT long since, a fire-eating Irishman challenged a lawyer, who gratified him by an acceptance. The duellist, being very lame, requested that he might have a prop. "Suppose," said he, "I lean against this milestone?" "With pleasure," replied the lawyer, "on condition that I may lean against the next." The joke settled the quarrel.

OUR little advertising friend gets off a little bon-mot about Bowles' book which was told to the editor as being in type for the CALIFORNIAN, without credit-marks. It is undoubtedly an excellent joke on us, but it is scarcely equal to the one which Judge Rix got off over his Sherry in a libel suit lately decided.

THE Flag exults because its editor "was not shot, not bowie-knifed, not bayoneted, not hanged, not sabred, not beset by a riot, not beaten to death" on landing at Sacramento. This only furnishes another illustration of how seldom men get their deserts in this life.

SUFFERING is no duty but where it is necessary to avoid guilt, or to do good; nor pleasure a crime, but where it strengthens the influence of bad inclinations, or lessons the generous activity of virtue.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage. 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Furallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., fe6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M fe25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	faints.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!
The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
Wine of Pepsine,
OR,
RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and preserving this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.
For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
GLUCOLEIN,
A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF
COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.
Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.
Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.
Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

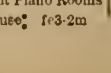
4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick-silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.
A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.
Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.
I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,



Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms No 26 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

SILK HOSE AT COST.

IVINS' PATENT HAIR-CRIMPERS!
No Lady should be without one.
TRIMMINGS, FRINGES,
BUTTONS, THREADS,
COTTONS, NEEDLES,
TAPES, FANCY GOODS,
ETC.
HOOP SKIRTS, NEW STYLES,
Best ever Imported.
ALL TO BE FOUND AT THE
PIONEER TRIMMING EMPORIUM
OF
MRS. NORCROSS,
No. 5 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.
fe21-tf

STRAIN'S CONDITION POWDERS
FOR HORSES.

A Certain, Safe and Sure Cure for all Diseases of the Horse—superior to any article of the kind now in use. For sale by R. H. McDONALD & CO., Sole Agents, Corner of Pine and Sansome street.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

dc23-3m

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,

dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

NEW

PIANOS

TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

fe20-1m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Leidedorff street, San Francisco.

THE

MUTUAL

Life Insurance Company

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED 1842.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

AN EXAMPLE OF THE

DIVIDENDS OF 1866.

POLICY NO. 33,321,

FOR

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!

Issued in San Francisco, August 22, 1864.

The amount Premium paid thereon in one year was $304 40.

The Amount of Dividend for one year to August 22, 1865, was $539 62,

Being $235 22 More than am't Premium paid,

Making the amount of Policy on August 22, 1865,

$10,539 62!

If the Dividend is used in payment of Premium, instead of being added to the Policy, the next payment required will be

Only $88 22,

instead of $304 40.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF

Policies Issued in 1864.

Amount Policy.	Premiums paid One Year.	Dividends One Year.
$10,000	$220 80	$394 77
5,000	120 72	237 27
2,500	87 40	141 80
1,000	21 70	39 48

ALL THE PROFITS OF THE COMPANY ARE

DIVIDED ANNUALLY,

AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS,

AND

CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS, OR ADDED TO THE POLICY, AT THE OPTION OF THE ASSURED.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

LIFE POLICIES ISSUED,

PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.

AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES issued, paid up in Ten Years or otherwise.

CHILDREN'S ENDOWMENT POLICIES, Etc.

H. S. HOMANS,

General Agent for California, Oregon, and Nevada.

No. 609 Clay street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—Holders of Policies issued through this Agency in 1864 can ascertain the amount of their Dividends upon application to the General Agent, and the Amount of Dividends on Policies issued in 1865 as soon as received.

fo17-1m

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15*TH OF EVERY MONTH.*

THURSDAY, FEBUARY 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON THURSDAY, - - - - MARCH 15TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., de16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,

Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

fe2 SAN FRANCISCO,

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

fe10-3m

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON THURSDAY, - - - - - MARCH 1, 1866,

AT ELEVEN O'CLOCK, A. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

fe23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPIDLY taking the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their construction that, when once built, they can be put in order by almost any person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can be set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durable as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Second street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

jn29-3m San Francisco

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

CHARLES DICKENS.

THE time has long gone by when criticism could do anything, for good or evil, for the works of Charles Dickens. No amount of literary censure or praise could lower or raise his estimation with the general public. Nor, on the other hand, do we believe that any criticism, however just, or fair, or thoughtful, would lead him to alter his style, or tone, or mode of writing. We must make up our minds to take the author of "Pickwick" for better or for worse. We do not indeed agree with the opinion expressed in the postscript to "Our Mutual Friend," that an an author must always understand what he is about better than a critic. If this were so, a painter, writer, sculptor, or artist of any kind, would be the only competent judge of the merit of his own work, an argument which refutes itself. But we do hold, that with every artist a time comes when the function of criticism ceases, as far as he himself is concerned. A very young husband may think it worth while to try and improve the mind and elevate the character of a youthful bride, though the task generally ends in disappointment. But no sane elderly married man ever dreams of trying to correct the faults of the mother of grown-up children. Now, Mr. Dickens and the public have been, so to speak, wedded too long together, and, on the whole, love each other too dearly, to dream of any possible improvement of their marital relations.

Moreover, there is probably no writer of eminence who has shown less faculty of improvement—if we may use such a phrase—than Charles Dickens. By the force of an almost unequalled genius, he placed himself, on his first appearance, in the foremost rank of English authors; and from that rank he has never receded or advanced. In the novels of Thackeray or Bulwer you can trace a marked improvement in the art of writing and story-telling, as the author gained skill by experience. You can trace nothing of this kind in those of Dickens. "Great Expectations" is as perfect or imperfect as a novel as "The Old Curiosity Shop," and in the same manner. As a veteran novelist, Mr. Dickens evinces the same inability to compose a story which he showed as a literary tyro. With the exception, perhaps, of "Barnaby Rudge,"—the least popular of all his novels—there is not one in which the story, as a story, is not unsatisfactory, in which the plot is not confused, the explanation inadequate, and in which there is not an absence of proportion between the foundation of the superstructure and the superstructure itself. In this latest novel, the "Mutual Friend" himself, the Veneerings, the Podsnaps, and the Lammles, have absolutely nothing to do with the development of the story, which they introduce, as it were, to the reader. The murder of John Harmon, the supposed key-note of the novel, is almost lost sight of throughout the bulk of the novel; and the main interest centres, not about the chief actors, but about Eugene Wrayburn, and Lizzie Hexam, and Bradley Headstone, mere supernumeraries in the drama of "Our Mutual Friend," whose presence might be dispensed with without injury to the main plot.

In trying to unravel one of Mr. Dickens' plots, we are always reminded of the Maze at Hampton Court; the clews which appear the most promising end in nothing, and we make a dozen false starts before we catch hold of the correct path. We fancy, for instance, that the adoption of Johnny and Sloppy is to lead to something important in the solution of the Boffin mystery; but Johnny dies before he can be brought home, and Sloppy only reappears in the last chapter, to aid in administering due castigation to Silas Wegg. Then, too, the hero and heroine of the "Mutual Friend" are of the usual cast-iron, or rather cast-wax, stamp we are so used to in all Mr. Dickens' novels. M. Henri Taine, in his able critique on English novelists, says that he always feels inclined to address the excellent young men and amiable young women who play the lovers in Mr. Dickens' works as good little boys and girls. "Soyez sages, mes bons petits enfans," is the valedictory benediction he would bestow upon them. Ruth Pinch, Ada Jarndyce, Florence Dombey, Kate Nickleby, Little Dorrit, and the rest, are all twin sisters. Every now and then we have a heroine who begins by being a little wilful and proud, like Bella Wilfer, but she always ends by toning down into a perfect woman. So, in like manner, the heroes are always well-conducted, excellent young men, with the highest principles, and all the domestic virtues. And, somehow, Mr. Dickens himself seems aware of their essentially prosaic nature. He has created scores of characters which will live as long as the English literature of our time is read; but he has never thrown the whole power of his matchless genius on the delineation of a hero or heroine. "Vanity Fair" was called a novel without a hero; but Dickens' novels might, we think, be more truly called novels without heroes and without plots.

Then, also, since we are picking out faults, we may say that the artistic merit of Mr. Dickens' pictures is strangely injured by his passion for irrelevant discussions—a passion which has grown upon him in later years. When Thackeray stopped in the middle of his narrative to enter on some topic which took his fancy, we were almost sorry when the topic was dropped and the narrative resumed. But with Dickens the case is different. We may or may not agree with Mr. Dickens' views about Chancery suits and administrative reform; but, agreeing or disagreeing, we do not wish to have them forced upon us in the middle of a novel, like a dose of medicine in a spoonful of honey. Thus in "Our Mutual Friend" one of the most fanciful and brilliant passages is the protest against the modern Poor-law system, given through the narrative of old Betty, but it has no more to do with the story than with Captain Cook's voyages. Mr. Dickens would, perhaps, urge in reply that a great moral lesson can be enforced better through the medium of a novel than of an elaborate Blue-book. We are quite willing to admit the plea in the interests of social progress, but not in those of art. As an earnest reformer, Mr. Dickens may be right in interlarding his novels with political and social discussions; as an artist, he is undoubtedly wrong.

In "Our Mutual Friend," all the peculiar merits and defects of the writer we all admire so much may be found in their full force and development. It is the fashion, amongst the class of critics in whose eyes popularity is the heaviest sin that can be laid to a writer's door, to say that Dickens has fallen off. Whether he has fallen off or not is a question of opinion, but it is certain that nobody has yet risen up to him. Let any candid reader try and picture to himself what a sensation "Our Mutual Friend" would have produced if it had been written by a new and unknown author. It is only because we are so used to the marvellous creative power of the great English novelist that we have almost ceased to wonder at his creations. We have plenty of clever novel-writers at the present day, and Anthony Trollope, Bulwer, Miss Evans, Charles Reade, and a dozen others, might be named as novelists whose works will live after them; but what single writer is there amongst the lot who would have written the account of the Pool below the bridges, of little Johnny's death, of Bradley Headstone's death agony, or of the doll-dressmaker's "bad boy?"

It is getting the fashion, now-a-days, for novelists to photograph the features, habits, tricks of voice and manner of their friends and acquaintances, and so to produce a life-like portraiture. But yet, even to those who know the originals, the impression produced by those photograph likenesses is not half so vivid as that which Mr. Dickens creates out of his own genius. Nobody can give a name to Mr. Podsnap, or Fascination Fledgby, or Mr. Twemlow, or Alfred Lammle, but yet everybody feels that he knows them personally, the moment he has read "Our Mutual Friend." Just as no critic can ever discern the art by which a great painter produces a resemblance by a few touches, so no disquisition can explain how it is that Mr. Dickens throws off his likenesses. We know far more of the real nature of Becky Sharpe and Colonel Newcombe than we do of any personage in Mr. Dickens' novels; but if the latter writer had painted them—a thing he could not have done—we should have seen them before us as they lived and moved; we should have known them if we had met them in the street.

And, in our opinion, it is this faculty of bringing his personages before us in flesh and blood which constitutes Mr. Dickens' extraordinary talent. In spite of the extravagance of his plots, the men and women of his pages are living beings. When once seen they come home with us, as persons we have known in life. Mr. Pickwick and Sam Weller, Mark Tapley and Jonas Chuzzlewit, Pecksniff and Harold Skimpole, Little Nell and Paul Dombey, and a hundred others, are personages whose names you may recall in writing or conversation with a far greater certainty that those you address will understand the reference, than if you mentioned the most famous names in modern science, or art, or politics. To this great Dickens' portrait gallery "Our Mutual Friend" will add not a few pictures. Bella, the "boofer lady," Mrs. Wilfer, Silas Wegg, old Betty, Rouge Riderwood, and Mr. Veneering, are henceforth recognized public characters.

Nor is there any failing in this, the latest of the series, in that wonderful power of seeing what everybody feels he ought to have seen himself—which distinguishes all Mr. Dickens' works. When the tavern waiter in the Christmas story complained about the hardship of his having to profess an interest in the prospects of the moors, we all felt quite astonished that this observation had never struck us before. So the mere phrase about the Lammle household, that their servants were not quite like any other people's servants, gives us an idea of the Lammle interior which pages of minute description would not produce. Mr. Dickens tells us in his preface how "Our Mutual Friend" was nearly being abruptly removed from the world by the dreadful Staplehurst accident. Had it so been, there is no living author whose death so many thousands of readers, to whom his face is unknown, would have grieved as for that of a friend, not mutual, but personal. The Reader.

"I GAVE the fellow a shilling," said Sir Walter Scott, on some occasion when sixpence was the fee, "and added, 'Remember you owe me sixpence.'" "May your honor live till I pay you!" said Pat.

LAST TRIAL OF FIDELITY.

AN officer in the French army, during the reign of Napoleon, having incurred the suspicion or resentment of the Emperor, thought it expedient to abandon his country and take refuge in one of the Austrian provinces: and here he became advised of, and initiated into a society, the object of whose formation was to hurl to the ground the Colossus whose arm smote and governed the whole Continent of Europe with a sceptre of iron. One day a letter was brought to him containing the usual signs and password of the society, and requiring him to repair on the following night to a secluded spot in the forest, where he would meet some of his associates. He went, but he found nobody. The orders were repeated four times: the officer sought the place with no better success than the first. On the fifth night of his appearance at the rendezvous, after waiting some time, he was on the point of returning, when loud cries suddenly arrested his attention.

Drawing his sword, he hastened to the spot whence they seemed to proceed, and was fired upon by three men, who, on seeing that he remained unwounded, instantly took to flight: but at his feet lay a bleeding corpse, in which, by the feeble light of the moon, he in vain sought for tokens of returning animation. He was yet bending over the dead man, when a detachment of chasseurs, summoned apparently by the noise of the pistols that had been discharged at himself, came up suddenly and arrested him as the assassin. He was loaded with chains, tried the next day, and condemned to die for his supposed crime. His execution was ordered to take place at midnight. Surrounded by the ministers of justice, he was led at a slow pace, by the light of torches, and the funeral tolling of bells, to a vast square, in the centre of which was a vast scaffold, environed by horsemen. Beyond these were a numerous group of spectators, who muttered impatiently, and at intervals sent forth a cry of abhorrence.

The victim mounted the scaffold—his sentence was read—and the first act of the tragedy was on the point of fulfilment, when an officer let fall a word of hope. An edict had just been promulgated by the Government, offering a pardon and life to any condemned criminal who should disclose the members and secret tokens of a particular association, the existence of which the Frenchman to whom these words were addressed had lately become aware of, and of which he had become a member. He was questioned, but he denied all knowledge; they urged him to confess with promises of additional reward: his only reply was a demand of immediate death—and his initiation was completed.

All that passed was a terrible trial of fidelity. Those who surrounded him were members of the society, and every incident that has been described, from the summons to the last moment of expected death, was only a step in the progress of the fearful experiment by which they sought to determine the trustworthiness of the neophyte.

MAGIC LANTERNS.—The principle of construction is very simple. It consists of a tin box, with a bent funnel at the top, which serves the double purpose of allowing the smoke and heat to escape, and preventing the light dispersing in the room, and thus interfering with the reflected image. It has a door at the side, a polished tin concave reflection at the back of the inside, and a powerful light placed at the focus of the reflector; the light being supplied by an argand oil or gas lamp, or by the combustion of oxygen and hydrogen gases thrown upon lime. For private exhibition, the oil argand is generally and more easily employed. Opposite to the light and focus of the reflector is a movenble or telescopic tube, containing an hemispherical illuminating lens near to the reflector, and a converse lens at the extremity of the tube; and between the two lenses is a slit for the introduction of the painted glass slides. To use the magic lantern, light the lamp, polish the reflector with a dry cloth, and also carefully wipe the lenses, to remove any moisture; then place the lamp in the focus of the reflector, close the door of the lantern, and place it upon a table ready for use. Suspend a wet sheet from a line stretched across the room, or have a screen made of calico stretched tightly upon a frame; in the event of not using either of them, you must reflect the images upon a smooth whitewashed wall. Slip in a slide with the figures and other subjects inverted or upside down—then advance or recede with the lantern, and by moving the tube in front of the slide you will be enabled to adjust the focus, and obtain a magnified image of the painting upon the slide reflected upon the sheet, screen or wall. When the room is large enough, it is better to place the screen between the spectators and the lantern, as it renders the deception more complete.

YOUNG MEN who wish to prepare themselves for active business life by receiving a thorough commercial education, are referred to the circular of the Pacific Business College, published in our advertising columns. This Institution, under the able management of its President, M. K. Laudenslager, has been for many months in successful operation, and merits the fullest recognition from our business community.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH, WHITE SKIN.—Davidson's Circassian Bloom has no equal for beautifying, whitening, and preserving the complexion and skin, removing freckles, tan, moth, pimples, and protecting the charms of beauty from the winds and dust.

On the "Qui Vive."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

Concord Wagons and Harness.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

Dainty Work.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of sufferiug is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Bahhittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Bahhittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veeder,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Bahittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Bahhittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more evident merits.
JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Bahhitonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his cure. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.

The following card will explain itself without comment:

San Francisco, Jan. 19, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been for seven years afflicted with rheumatism, and during that time I suffered more than generally falls to the lot of any human being in a life time. My ankles at times would measure six inches in diameter; my fingers were drawn into the palms of my hands; pains the most excruciating in my extremities, my hips and back, until I almost wished for death to relieve me of my sufferings. I tried every known remedy, and spent many hundred dollars without obtaining any relief. I have been swindled so many times by miserable Quacks, that I was afraid to try your remedy. Fortunately while reading one of your bills, a friend of mine told me that he had been cured by you. I concluded to try once more, though I had little confidence in it, because my case was of so many years standing; but judge of my surprise, when, after using it two days all my pain left me, and the swelling in my ankles decreased, and I am now, after using your remedy ten days, well and able to leave for my home. God bless you, Doctor. You will be considered a benefactor. Gratefully yours, fe3 Asa Willet, Drytown, Amador county.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

☞ At least two-thirds of the Diseases with which the human family are afflicted, are brought on by the want of attention to the condition of the Blood. Whenever the Blood becomes impure, no matter from what cause, the effects of such impurity are immediately felt, either in one way or another; and unless measures are at once taken to remove such impurities, the whole system becomes affected, and a long fit of sickness and sometimes death is the result. Dr. Samuel Adams, a well-known Chemist of San Francisco, has discovered certain herbs and roots, mostly of California growth, which he has combined with Sarsaparilla and Iodide of Potas, and succeeded in producing a Medicine that, while it is entirely harmless in every particular, will in a short time completely eradicate from the Blood all impurities, of whatever nature, and will restore the patient to perfect robust health. The preparation is called "Adams' Blood Purifier," and is for sale at wholesale at the

United States Drug Store,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets, San Francisco, and by all druggists in the state.
ja6-1m

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

Astrology.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star-reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the bidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, he they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

Wanted—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. Shear, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California.

CHARLES BERNARD,

MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN

FAMILY CHARTRES COFFEE

AND SPICES OF ALL KINDS,

No. 707 Sansome-st., cor. of Gold,

Between Jackson and Pacific.

FIRST PREMIUM AWARDED BY THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE,

FOR THE BEST COFFEE and SPICES.

R. H. McDONALD. J. C. SPENCER

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

Importing and Wholesale

DRUGGISTS,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO,

AND

SACRAMENTO CITY.

WE MOST RESPECTFULLY invite the attention of DRUGGISTS, DENTISTS, PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, MERCHANTS, MILL-MEN, ASSAYERS, BREWERS, SODA WATER MANUFACTURERS, AND OTHERS,

To our well-assorted stock of articles in their line:

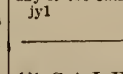
Drugs and Medicines,	Herbs and Fluid Extracts,
Paints and Oils,	Corks, every variety,
Dental Goods,	Acids, Marble Dust,
Elastic Stockings,	Plaster, Blue Stone,
Trusses and Supporters,	Sal Ammoniac,
Druggists' Glassware,	Copperas,
Leeches,	Irish Moss,
Surgical Instruments,	Retorts and Crucibles,

Together with a Complete Assortment of Drugs.

Our senior partner is now residing at the East, giving his personal attention to the purchasing and shipping of supplies. We are thereby enabled to furnish goods of the First Quality at very Low Prices. We will not be undersold by any house in California.

We would respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our stock before dealing elsewhere. Goods shipped to any part of the coast.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
San Francisco and Sacramento City.



R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
SACRAMENTO AND
SAN FRANCISCO.

IMPORTERS OF

Dental and Surgical Instruments,

Teeth, Gold Foil, Forceps of all kinds, Dental Cases, all sizes, with and without Instruments · Vulcanizers, and all materials for doing Vulcanite work · Burrs, Drills and Excavators; Anatomical Preparations. In short, EVERYTHING USED BY THE DENTAL PROFESSION

☞ Our Stock was never better than at present.

BOOKS.

We have constantly on hand all the

STANDARD WORKS ON DENTISTRY.

Are Agents for the "DENTAL COSMOS," published in Philadelphia, which is the best monthly work on Dentistry published.

The Dental Profession can rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner, and with dispatch.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco,
oc28 and Sacramento City.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S

California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half-way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition of asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.
In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.
The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.
For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

SCALES!

MANUFACTURERS' Branch House on the Pacific coast.

Fairbanks' Standard Hay, Cattle, Miners' Druggists' and Grocers' Scales, adjusted to English, Spanish and Chinese weight.

We also REPAIR (supplying parts when broken or worn out) and re-adjust our Scales to the original standard.
FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
☞ Send for Illustrated Catalogue. ja27 3m

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCFR OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTablishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can he found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

de30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,

ja29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

de30 3m

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE,

SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at he last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)

SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING

Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

---

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Bahhitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,

de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum.....7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum.....4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum....7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,

ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

NEW TYPE.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco.

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,

No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY

Enables Country Residents to make purchases in the City without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,

40 Broadway, N. Y.

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding

WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,

NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,

751 MARKET STREET,

(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle-aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other Important and Interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President

fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,

Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY AND Children's Clothing STORE,

Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to

Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,

OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27 1m

---

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."

For sale in glass only, by

ja27 1m BARRY & PATTEN

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 2d of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30 3m

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same beiag duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereou, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removiug stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demaud, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the cousideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulatious of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered ton nage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50

Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband - Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By JAMES C. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

dc23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisc , in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. } By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Depnty Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. } B. S. BROOKS,
dc23 3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN COUCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.

San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE, fe10-5t Att'y for Administrator.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,

AND

Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE

TO THE

CLIFF HOUSE

TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-t

---

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy

IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY

will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the

MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only, by
SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fo17-3m San Francisco, Cal.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by
N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture

THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,

and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade

WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Traveling Risk)
ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c.
Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days..... 2
Twelve Days..... 3
Twenty Days.....
Thirty Days..... 5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,
141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,
NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
de16 3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and steamer running to Guayquil, touching at Tumaco, the port of the new mines, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

FEB. 19TH, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

FEB. 28th, - - - - - COLORADO,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

HOLT'S MAP

OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13 tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY,
SATURDAY, FEB. 24,
AT HALF PRICES,
Commencing at 2 o'clock,
GRAND MATINEE:
LITTLE TODDLEKINS,
AND A DAY AFTER THE FAIR.

THIS EVENING, FEBRUARY 24,
The celebrated Vocal Comedienne,
MISS EMILY THORNE,
Will make her First appearance at this house, as HESTER GRAZEBROOK,
IN
The Unequal Match,
SUPPORTED BY THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

MONDAY EVENING:
MISS EMILY THORNE
IN
Masks and Faces!
Peg Woffington, - - Miss Emily Thorne.

The Spectacular Extravaganza of the Seven Sisters
Will shortly be produced.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NEW BOOKS
JUST RECEIVED AT
A. ROMAN & CO.'S.

Across the Continent: A Summer's Journey to the Rocky Mountains, the Mormons, and the Pacific States, with Speaker Colfax: By Samuel Bowles, Editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
Winnifred Bertram, and the World She Lived In. By the author of "The Schonberg-Cotta Family."
Personal Reminiscences of the Life and Times of Rev Gardner Spring, D. D., with Portrait.
The Pilgrim's Wallet; or Scraps of Travel gathered in England, France and Germany. By Gilbert Haven.
A Spinster's Story. By M. A. F.
Tales, Romances and Extravaganzas. By Thomas Hood.
A Summer in Skye. By Alexander Smith.
Winning his Way. By "Carleton"
The Letters of Mozart. Translated by Lady Wallace.
The Freedman's Book. By L. Maria Child.
A Biography of Richard Cobden: By John McGilchrist.
Herman: or Young Knighthood. By E. Foxton.
Later Lyrics. By Julia Ward Howe.
Country Love vs. City Flirtation; or Ten Chapters from the Story of a Life. Reduced to Rhyme, for Convenience Sake, by H. T. Sperry.
Fighting Joe; or, The Fortunes of a Staff Officer. By Oliver Optic.
The Privateersman. By Captain Marryat, R. N.
The Dutch Pilgrim Fathers. By Edward Hopper.
DeVane; a Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.
Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. By J. G. Holland.
The Prince of Kashna; a West Indian Story. By Richard H Kimball.

COMPLETE SETS OF
Bohn's Celebrated Libraries.

We have on hand the largest stock of Standard, Miscellaneous
AND LIBRARY BOOKS
TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
fe2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24-3m

---

HAMLIN & CROSS.

GEO. HAMLIN.....F. L. CROSS.

DEALERS IN CHEAP PUBLICATIONS,
STATIONERY, BLANK BOOKS,
MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS,
611 Montgomery street, corner of Merchant.
fe24-tf

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,
Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETTS

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half-Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, FEB. 24,
The Grand Spectacular Play entitled,
The Bronze Horse,
And THE BUISLAY FAMILY, in their Wonderful Acts.

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, FEBRUARY 24TH, Last Night of the Operatic Dramatic Spectacle, entitled,
THE BRONZE HORSE!
In which the
Celebrated Buislay Family
And the FULL DRAMATIC COMPANY will appear.

Zamna, Prince of China.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Margela, Princess of Mogul.....Miss Hinckley
Peki, Daughter of Tchin-Kbo....Miss C. Chapman
Kan-Jan, fourth wife of Ping-Sing.....Mrs. Judah
Lo-Mangli, a Spirit.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Tajana.....Miss Julia Gould
Cloud King.....Mr. L. F. Beatty
Ping-Sing, a Mandarin.....S. W. Leach
Tchin-Kao, a Farmer.....Geo. Roundy

To conclude with
The Mormons,
OR,
FEMALE LIFE IN SALT LAKE!
In which all
THE FEMALE MEMBERS OF THE COMPANY will appear.

MONDAY NIGHT:
BENEFIT OF THE DOORKEEPER!
On which occasion,
The Lakes of Killarney,
AND
THE ELVES!

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

RELIABLE
AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends delared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTIBLE after five years from their date.
Thirty days grace in payment of premium.
C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.

STEPH. T. KING,
General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
fe24-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD
AND Constitution,
WITH
LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
fe19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,
(Organist of Cavalry Church,)
TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.
Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30 3m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.
J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Starke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Adolph Levy, 19 Second street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.
E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.
Marcus Pezold, 46 Second street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner Bush.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. S. W. Dennis, removed to 14 Geary.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.
Wm. Brown & Co', 16 Third street.

FURNITURE.
N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
W. H. Pillner & Hunter, Gallery 14 Second street.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Speeen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Kretschman, Third and Mission.
Donahue & Phelan, 31 Second street.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

NATIONAL
Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE,
Brannan's Express Building,
402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)
PERMANENT OFFICE,
(After March 1st,)
408 Montgomery street,
Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,
Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President.
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

FOR GENUINE
Scotch Ginghams,
AND CHOICE DRESS GOODS,
GO TO
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja23 tf

BEER AND WINE SALOON.
FAUST CELLAR,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.
☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24-3m

---

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
a27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 14. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 3, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- Cultivation of Flowers.—By "Iris."
- Human Nature in Ships' Names. By C. R. C.
- To Be Regretted.
- "Kindly Humor."—An Item that was not Enjoyed in the Bulletin Office.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

POETRY:
- Fantasia.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

SELECTED:
- A New Biography of Washington. By "Mark Twain."
- A Strange Affair.
- Dr. Holford's Patient.
- Bull vs. Bear.
- A New Disease—A Laughable Story.
- Deadheads as Critics.
- A Word for Cats.
- The Miser's Story.
- Presence of Mind.—"Mark Twain."

POETRY:
- The Earl o' Quarterdeck.
- April Rain.—By Robert Buchanan.

[For the Californian.]

FANTASIA.

IF on some summer eve I seek the marges
Of a so shaded pool
I scarce can see the cool
White water-lilies tremulously floating,
As each palpable, pale gulc
Its parian hull unveils—
Dilating to a wilderness of waxen
Scented sails—

I shall declare a fleet of silver barges,
A whole armada, hies
From lakes of paradise;
Aud with it fairy-voyagers, fit for boating;
So to take me by surprise,
As in olden magic tales,
With golden freights displayed in many flaxen-
Tinted bales.

If then I see the fiery-fly ascending
In its glowing, bright balloon—
Its car a crescent moon
Above the ebon-waters gaily swinging—
A delicious, wild monsoon
Rushing out from spiced eaves,
Smiting down the sighing Cereus in the splendor
Of its leaves—

I shall believe a marvelous dream is lending
The divinest sight to me,
That I may truly see
How the illumined soul escapeth for its winging
And its flying, being free—
Or that fiery fly deceives,
And the dream is weaving so I may not render
What it weaves.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 1st, 1866.

I HAVE just returned from Sacramento. It is a rather pleasant place to visit, but on the whole I prefer San Francisco.

People up there have an unpleasant way of shooting at each other on Sunday afternoons, and not caring how non-combatants happen to be in range. And, if one ensconces himself comfortably behind a hack, to be out of harm's way, the rascally driver mounts the box and drives off, leaving one exposed to the fire of the belligerents.

It is curious how suddenly people remember engagements when pistols are drawn and bullets buzz around indiscriminately. Probably there were a hundred and fifty people in front of the Orleans Hotel last Sunday afternoon when the fight began, but in five seconds the street was empty.

Ah, but it was a rare sight to see Mark Twain getting out of the way. That Wild Humorist of the Pacific, Ned Ellis, Billy Stevenson, and myself, stood talking together when the trouble occurred. A bullet or something else missed Stevenson... how it could miss him I don't see . grazed the top of Ellis's head, taking a good deal of the hair off, and lodged in Mark Twain's pocket-book.

That pocket-book saved the Wild Humorist's life. How many hundred thousand dollars in greenbacks it contained, I do uot know; but there were enough to stop the bullet... it couldn't pass the curreucy.

The real object of our visit to Sacramento has not transpired as yet. We did not go up there to bribe Senators, though the plethoric condition of my companion's pocket-book might indicate that he was entrusted with funds by our local banks for that purpose.

The fact is, we went up to liberate McCarthy.

A slight mistake was made, and we let out Gelston instead. But his absence is only temporary, for he said nothing about giving up his room before leaving. He had some little business with the Freedmeu's Bureau, and just stepped around the corner to attend to it. He may be expected back most any time. I asked Gelston how he liked his quarters. He at once retorted by asking if I had any wish to go halves with him. I replied no, that I had come up to stay with McCarthy.

He said the farc was not so good as at some hotels he had frequented. Some persons might like Peruvian woodcock, but he didn't.

I asked him what kind of a bird Peruvian woodcock were. He replied: "Cold beans."

Sacramento does not smell sweet. The water in its streets and cellars, like business, has come to a stand still, and a big bid is offered for the cholera. There are little pools all around town... and every now and then you will see billiard sharps playing for them.

Is it not written that once an angel came down and troubled a Pool?

I don't think that spirits trouble Capt. Poole much, for he has a mighty easy way of dealing with them. A middle-aged man, of florid complexiou, rich but respectable origin, and strictly virtuous habits, he resides principally at Collinsville. It is remarked of him that he draws more water, and drinks less than any other man on the river.

Time and tide-lands wait for no man. I know any number of tied-lands—tied so fast that a good many persous cannot get hold of them.

I am interested in tide-lands. This is a natural result of reading the Bulletin. For the past month it has had two editorials a day, with that stereotyped heading. Sometimes it occurs to me that it might occasionally vary the programme a little by pleasing allusions to other subjects of equal moment and interest.

For instance, it might say something about the Freedmen's Bureau. Or it might discuss the reconstruction policy, which is now agitating the public mind to some extent. But I have not time to enumerate all the legitimate topics upon which it might touch without stepping aside from the proper paths of journalism to strike at private reputatious aud provoke personal quarrels.

There is a tide land in the affairs of some men that, taken at its full, leads on to misfortune.

I have always admired the Bulletin. During my residence on this coast, I think I remember having knowu it to speak well of two men... those men were its own editors and proprietors, and even of them it only spoke praisefully in writing their obituaries.

Alas! who will write the obituaries of the surviving editors, when these ornaments to their profession are removed in the due course of nature to another and a hotter world?

When the late lamented James Nesbit went down upon the deep and was lost in the terrible wreck of the Brother Jonathan, his surviving partner wrote of him: "He was the guiding and controlling spirit of the Bulletin."

It always seemed to me that there was no occasion for that unkindness. Whatever the sins of Mr. Nesbit may have been, he then stood in the presence of his Maker, beyond the arraignment of any human tribunal.

Why publish to the world that he was the author of all the cruel lashes under which so many good and true men have writhed? Very few in this community love or have cause to love the Bulletin. Why should the living cast all that load of responsibility upon the shoulders of the dead, steeling the hearts of men who otherwise would have wept above his open grave?

The late Dr. Tuthill, too. No one who knew that genial gentleman would ever suspect him of saying anything unkind or untrue about a friend, for all his quiet manner and kindly humor. While living he was my friend. When he sailed for Europe I bade him good-bye, and congratulated him on getting away from the Bulletin. I hoped to welcome him on his return. The good gentleman died, and now they come and tell me that he is the author of a little piece of pleasantry which is published to reflect upon my reputation. It is impossible for me to go to him in my quiet manner and remark with my kindly humor: Surely, Doctor, you never said this, and certainly you never thought so?

This ringing in dead men on you is in very bad taste... simply as a matter of æsthetics it is to be deprecated. For a daily newspaper which has a large circulation and claims a corresponding influence, to step aside from the legitimate paths of journalism to indulge in a purely personal attack upon an individual, is in very bad taste, also.

In view of the strange mortality that has prevailed among the Bulletin people during the past year, I am surprised that they do not think about eternity as well as time and tide lands, and put one or two generous actions on record, so that their cotemporaries may speak well of them in an epitaph.

It is always well to have a place in men's affections.

Once it was my ambition to have a place on the Hudson, but I now sigh for a farm on the Sacramento.

Perhaps I should say under the Sacramento, for nearly the whole valley is submerged.

Salmou and sturgeon flounder about among the tops of trees where birds were formerly found. With so many fish around, however, I shouldn't thiuk the birds would have auy trouble in finding a perch.

It must be nice to own a farm where you can row around the meadows and shoot ducks. And then think what a capital Swimmiug Bath one would have at his very doors.

Jump's last—or the last Jump—wouldn't be a circumstance to it.

There have been various explanations offered of the sudden rise of the river, but none of them seem to cover the ground exactly.

Of one thing I am certain, however... Capt. Poole does not lower the river any by the water he drinks.

The report that he drinks like a fish I deny. Fish drink water, and he is no such gudgeon as that. No, no; the captain doesn't drink like a fish, nor a horse, uor any other auimal that I know of.

He drinks like a man that likes it, and I reject all other figures of speech.

Some one says figures can't lie, but I fancy that can scarcely be said of lay figures.

You should see the figures in The Naiad Queen—figures of speech they may be called, for they all talk.

Tibbetts does make some queer additions occasionally to his Gallery of Beauties. Of course he can't always get a good looking ballet, but he might, and I think should insist on straight legs.

Ah, the review of that Naiad army!

Flashed all their ankles bare,
Ten thousand legs iu air,
While we all wondered.

Maguire, they tell me, is borrowing a hint from Tibbetts. There is a spectacular piece in those managerial eyes.

He has already advertised for fifty respectable young ladies, having no objection to go a short distance into the country. It would be a sad thing if that number of respectable young ladies could not be found in the city, and I hope they'll come forward at once. He might select them, one would think, from his audieuce, on Saturday afternoons.

INIGO.

MISS ANNA DICKINSON is still delivering arouud the country her lecture upon "Marrying and Giving in Marriage." Now, as Miss Dickinson has never been married or given in marriage, what can she know upon the subject?—Boudoir.

THE EARL O' QUARTERDECK.

A NEW OLD BALLAD.

THE wind it blew, and the ship it flew;
And it was "Hey for hame!
And ho for hame!" But the skipper cried,
"Haud her oot o'er the saut sea faem."

Then up and spoke the king himsel':
"Haud on for Dumfertine!"
Quo the skipper, "Ye're king upo' the land—
I'm king upo' the briue."

And he took the helm intil his hand,
And he steered the ship sae free;
Wi' the wind astarn, he crowded sail,
And stood right out to sea.

Quo the king, "There's treason in this, I vow;
This is something underhand!
'Bout ship!" Quo the skipper, "Yer grace forgets Ye are king but o' the land!"

And still he held to the open sea;
And the east wind sank behind;
And the wast had a bitter word to say,
Wi' a white-sea-roarin' wind.

And he turned her head into the north.
Said the king: "Gar fling him o'er."
Quo the fearless skipper: "It a' ye're worth!
Ye'll ne'er see Scotland more."

The king crept down the cabin-stair,
To drink the gude French wine,
And up she came, his daughter fair,
And luikit ower the brine.

She turned her face to the drivin' hail,
To the hail but and the weet;
Her snood it brak, and, as lang's hersel',
Her hair drave out i' the sleet.

She turned her face frae the drivin' win'—
"What's that ahead?" quo she.
The skipper he threw himsel' frae the win',
And he drove the helm a-lee.

"Put to yer hand, my lady fair!
Put to yer hand," quo' he;
"Gin she dinna face the win' the mair,
It's the waur for you and me."

For the skipper kenned that strength is strength,
Whether woman's or man's ut lust.
To the tiller the lady she laid her han',
And the ship laid her cheek to the blast.

For that slender body was full o' soul,
And the will is mair than shape;
As the skipper saw when they cleared the berg,
And he heard her quarter scrape.

Quo the skipper: "Ye are a lady fair,
And a princess grand to see;
But ye are a woman, and a man wad sail
To hell in yer company."

She liftit a pale and a queenly face;
Her een flashed, and syne they swam.
"And what for no to heaven?" she says,
And she turned awa' frae him.

But she took na her han' frue the good ship's helm,
Until the day did daw;
And the skipper he spak, but what he said
It was said atween them twa.

And then the good ship, she lay to,
With the land far on the lee;
And up came the king upo' the deck,
W' wan face and bluidshot ee.

The skipper he louted to the king:
"Gae wa', gae wa'," said the king.
Said the king, like a prince, "I was a' wrang,
Put on this ruby ring."

And the wind blew lowne, and the stars cam oot,
And the ship turned to the shore;
And, afore the sun wus up again,
They saw Scotland ance more.

That day the ship hung at the pier-heid,
And the king he stept on the land.
"Skipper, kneel down," the king he said,
"Hoo daur ye afore me stand?"

The skipper he louted on his knee,
The king his blade he drew:
Said the king, "How danred ye contre me?
I'm aboard me ain ship noo.

"I canna mak ye a king," said he,
"For the Lord alone can do that;
And besides ye took it intil yer ain han',
And crooned yersel' sae pat!

"But wi' what ye will I redeem my ring;
For ance I am at your beck.
And first, as ye loutit Skipper o' Doon,
Rise up Yerl o' Quarterdeck."

The skipper he rose and looked at the king
In his een for all his croon;
Said the skipper, "Here is yer grace's ring,
And yer daughter is my boon."

The reid blude sprang into the kiug's face—
A wrathful man to see:
"The rascal loon abuses our grace;
Gae hang him upon yon tree."

But the skipper he sprang aboard his ship,
And he drew his biting blade;
And he struck the chain that held her fast,
Bnt the iron was ower weel made.

And the king he blew a whistle loud;
And tramp, tramp, down the pier,
Cam' twenty riders on twenty steeds,
Clankin' wi' spur and spear.

"He saved your life!" cried the lady fair;
"His life ye damna spill!"
"Will ye come atween me and my hate?"
Quo the lady, "And that I will!"

And on cum the knights wi' spur and spenr,
For they heard the iron ring.
"Gin ye care na for yer father's grace,
Mind ye that I am the king."

"I kneel to my father for his grace,
Right lowly on my knee;
But I stand and look the king in the face,
For the skipper is king o' me."

She turned and she sprung upo' the deck,
And the cable splashed in the sea.
The good ship spread her wings sae white,
And away with the skipper goes she.

Now was not this a king's daughter,
And a brave lady beside?
And a woman with whom a man might sail
Into the heaven wi' pride? [Argosy.

DOCTOR HOLFORD'S PATIENT.

THE GOVERNESS' MISTAKE.

"WHAT on earth am I to do?" asked the doctor, in a tone half humorous, half sad, as he walked up the High street with his friend Mr. Bailey. "If I warn her she won't stay with me a week; I've lost two governesses already by listening to your advice."

"Well," doubtfully rejoined Mr. Bailey, "perhaps you are right. He may be safe enough, after all; but what a silly girl she must be!"

"On the contrary," interrupted the doctor, warmly, "She's a treasure! As like her poor father as can be—full of good sense and right feeling. I can't think what possesses her not to let that unfortunate man alone, and I can't warn her. Nobody has managed my poor brats the least like her since——" and the doctor coughed away a sigh.

A somewhat whimsical expression passed over his friend's face. Dr. Holford had lost his wife six months before, and had been in a peck of troubles ever since about his three children, the youngest an infant of six months old. The doctor knew no more of the details of household economy than his baby, and it had become evident to all his friends that he could not exist long without a wife; but whom should he marry? that was the question. To complicate matters, Dr. Holford was obliged to eke out the profits of a not very remunerative practice, by receiving a patient at his own house, and rich patients were not always easy to find. At the time we write of he had just received as an inmate a soi-disant nervous invalid, Walter Stone by name, whom he watched with singular carelulness, for in his secret soul the doctor knew the man was insane, and although in truth he believed him to be perfectly harmless, yet he daily expected some mad freak or folly to appear. None had as yet, and all things had gone smoothly for two or three weeks, when, according to the usual malignity of circumstances, a most inconvenient and aggravating interest in Walter Stone began to appear in the conduct of Miss Stuart, the children's governess. It is true that Mr. Stone was a handsome young man, with a manner in which none but a professional eye could detect any taint of madness, but that made it all the more alarming; and feeling himself as yet not thoroughly acquainted with the state of his patient's mind, the doctor was on tenterhooks. As he said, he dared give no serious warning. A nervous patient might be all very well, but no governess would stay with a live lunatic loose about the house. So Dr. Holford was fain to let matters take their course, trusting to the chapter of accidents and to Miss Stuart's good sense to set her right in time. After all, he thought, there could be no great risk. Walter Stone had come to him with an excellent character for quietness, and might, for all he knew, be curable. So he determined to hold his tongue, and hope that no bad consequences would ensue. What did ensue we shall presently see.

A day or two after this conversation with Mr. Bailey, the doctor happened to look out from his surgery window on the little plot of ground at the back of his house which he was pleased to dignify with the name of a garden. Dr. Holford worked in it a good deal himself, and took great interest in the one or two flower-beds, and the border rich with bright colors, in the arrangement of which he flattered himself Sir Joseph Paxton could not hold a candle to him. The air was scented with the breath of lilacs and hyacinths, and the perfume of two gnarled old hawthorns, covered, one with white, and the other with pink blossom, that stood on the grass-plat by the side of the path, and that were the pride of the doctor's heart. That garden was a kingdom for bees and butterflies, and they hummed and danced merrily in the sunshine. On this particular May afternoon, a fresh little human flower moved quickly to and fro among the butterflies, clad in a soft grey stuff gown, with pink ribbons at the throat and wrist. It was the young governess, Lizzie Stuart. She was a pretty girl, of about twenty, with large grey eyes and fair shiny hair. A sprig of pink was stuck in the waistband that girded a small round waist, and they were very little feet that tapped impatiently upon the gravel walk. The doctor could not help watching her from the window as he smoked his pipe; she made such a pretty foreground to his favorite flowers as she went and came under the hawthorns. Presently a young man came out, and walked across the grass-plat towards her. She met him with an outstretched hand, and they strolled along the path together. It was perfectly natural that they should do so, and the doctor ought to have been glad that his patient should be subjected to such soothing influences, but somehow he sighed a little as he saw how earnestly they were talking, her face raised up to him, and his bent down to her. Certainly Lizzie did not seem afraid of Walter Stone. The doctor put his pipe in the corner with another sigh, and went up stairs to dress for dinner.

The pair in the garden did not remain long together. Walter Stone sauntered back into the house, and Lizzie went on walking, up and down the short gravel walk. For fear of mistake, we had better let the reader into a secret at once. Almost from the first moment, three months ago, when Dr. Holford had done her the immense honor of confiding to her care his motherless children, Lizzie Stuart's tender little heart had been in the doctor's keeping. Indeed, she had loved him all her life, as her father's friend and her own—but of late what was it that made Lizzie blush, all to herself, in the solitude of her own room, when she thought of the gratitude and affection she owed to the doctor? Ah! what a wealth of pity and devotion she poured out upon him in secret, and what romantic castles were built up in that graceful little head of hers, as she sat of an evening looking out upon the hawthorns, of the wonderful ways in which she was to be a help and a comfort to him, without his knowing who had done the work! But though her love was an "open secret," there was no one to find it out except, indeed, the doctor himself, the last man on whom the idea was likely to dawn, and it is doubtful if even Lizzie had more than an inkling of the truth. If she had, she guarded her secret jealously, and only let it appear in a most tender and zealous performance of her duty towards his children, as to which the doctor said no words, but thanked and blessed her in his heart.

But within the last fortnight it had occurred to this young woman to set herself up in judgment upon the doctor's conduct, and after mature deliberation, she had come to the conclusion that he had either made a great mistake, or was doing very wrong. The idea troubled her sorely. Miss Lizzie was a young lady who rather piqued herself upon the possession of an independent judgment, and paid the youthful penalty, of course, by sometimes too much undervaluing the experience of her seniors. Her early training had perhaps encouraged this state of mind; for her father, dear as she had been to him, had not been able to steer altogether clear of that wretched system of "spoiling till five, trying experiments till fifteen, and contradicting till twenty." Besides all this, Miss Lizzie had lately been studying Dr. Winslow's Obscure Diseases, that most popular of scientific works, and had rebelled against the theories therein propounded with all her heart. Very Hard Cash had fallen in her way immediately afterwards, and she had glowed with sympathy for Alfred's wrongs and Julia's love, and for all the supposed victims detained in a thousand lunatic asylums by commissioners in lunacy like those described by Mr. Read.

And now Walter Stone had crossed her path, and lo! her dreams were realized. He was pleasant, handsome, and as gentle as Alfred; and more than all, he had appealed to her compassion, and poured into her ear a piteous story of the unnatural brother, who, for the sake of obtaining the management of his (Walter's) property, had condemned him to lifelong captivity, Lizzie knew as a fact that his brother had consigned him to Dr. Holford's charge, and that, in spite of all his apparent liberty, he was narrowly watched—in itself a suspicious circumstance, considering that nervous ailments only were the plea for his incarceration. She had even heard Dr. Holford chuckle over the story of the way in which he and Edward Stone had managed to entrap Walter into voluntarily giving up his purse into their care, so as to render his escape, by train or other conveyance, impossible.

And this was a sane man! Lizzie's brain took fire at the thought. To dispose of the certificate of lunacy was the work of a moment; were they not all—those mad doctors, and Dr. Winslow in particular—ready to swear to any man's insanity at a moment's notice? And then Walter had told her that he had himself given opportunity to his enemies in some moments of excitement consequent on the loss of money. But the doctor—there was the rub. Could it be possible that Dr. Holford, the upright and honorable, had deliberately lent himself to this vile plot? Even Lizzie's excited imagination could not lead her to believe that. No; the man was not mad—that was certain—but the doctor had been deceived; his keen eye had been blinded by Walter Stone's perfidious friends, who, though they had cautiously avoided committing themselves by speaking of more than "nerves," had so cunningly worded their artful testimony that the doctor had jumped to the conclusion without much personal observation that Walter must be insane. That could not be a fault—at least—well, hardly, or if it were, she, Lizzie Stuart, would undeceive him, and enable him to make atonement. And then she went off into a day-dream, and was just in the middle of a speech from the doctor, expressive of his deep gratitude to her for having, by her woman's keen-sightedness and quick judgment, disabused him of the idea under which he had been laboring, etc., when she looked up, and behold the moon had risen, and was already lightening up the top branches of the hawthorns! She turned into the house, fully resolved to speak seriously to the doctor the very next morning.

The moon was high in the heavens when Lizzie Stuart went that evening, as her custom was, to sit in the nursery while nurse went down to her supper. At these times Lizzie always sat in a particular chair by the window. Nurse's white-curtained bed stood in a recess at the back of the room; a little to one side, but facing the fire—still necessary at night—was the baby's bassinet, of which little but the hood was to be seen from where Lizzie sat. The other two children slept in what was, in fact, an adjoining room, though the door of communication had long been removed, to make the two nurseries as far as possible into one. There was no light in the room but the moonshine and the glimmer of the fire; Lizzie leant back in her chair, and resumed her day-dream. By-and-by, a low knock came at the door.

"Come in," said Lizzie, wondering that nurse, should have made such haste at her supper.

The door opened softly, and Walter Stone put his head into the room. "I want to speak to you," he whispered, excitedly; "you must let me come in. It is most important."

There was something queer about his manner, but Lizzie, strong in her conviction, was in nowise frightened. Besides, he had talked to her that day of escape, and she longed to repeat the arguments she had used against any such scheme, for its success would be fatal to the doctor's credit. While she hesitated, he stole silently up to her, closing the door behind him. No other man living would Lizzie have allowed to remain there, but her sympathy for Walter Stone was deep and strong, all the more strong from her love for the man who was doing him such unwitting injury. How grieved the doctor will be to-morrow! she thought, and she let Walter stay. He sat down by her side, and remained silent. After a minute or two the stillness grew oppressive, and she opened her mouth to speak. As she did so, she looked in his face, ghastly in the moonlight! Ah! how awful the change there! His pleasant, careless look had disappeared, and in its stead was a dreadful expression of fixed malignity, of insane cunning and rage; the glare of a maniac's eye caught and fixed hers as she looked. Horror-stricken she drew back, but he bent forward, and said in a hissing whisper:

"I've something to show you. I've locked the door, and we can't be interrupted; no, no. Look here!" and he drew from his pocket an ordinary dinner-knife, on which the moonbeams glittered hideously.

"Beautiful, isn't it?" he muttered, as he stroked and seemed to fondle it, turning it from side to side. "True steel—the real thing! Not for you, though, not for you—for those little devils that cling round you and prevent your coming with me. I'll set you free; I'll—" and he lapsed into inarticulate murmurs, still stroking his knife. Never, in all her life, did Lizzie Stuart forget the sensations of that moment; they come back to her often in dreams, even now. She did not lose consciousness, but she could not move; her heart seemed to stand still, and her brain to reel.

"The youngest first," he whispered at last, and leaving her suddenly, he darted towards the hearth. For one second the the knife gleamed brightly in the moonlight, as he brandished it aloft; the next he had plunged it deep into the bassinet. Oh God, there was no cry!

A wild shriek rose to Lizzie's lips. Repressing it with a violent effort, she collected her senses and walked to his side.

"I must kill the others myself," she said, with an unfaltering voice; "let me do it—they would not be quiet otherwise."

The maniac turned towards her a horrible face of triumph.

"You're one of the right sort!" he exclaimed enthusiastically. "The young May moon is beaming, love. The glow-worm's lamp is gleaming, love. How sweet to rove—No, that's not it—So she kilted her gown o' green satin, and tuckit it up to her knee—Lizzie Lindsay—that's you—Lord Ronald Clan Donald—that's me. Won't we be happy? Now then!"

"Yes, I am going," she said, still speaking calmly; "wait here till I come back."

He stooped to draw the knife out of the bassinet.

"No, don't do that," she whispered, forcing herself to lay her hand upon his arm, and turning away her eyes, lest the sight that might meet them should unnerve her, "I have a fancy for doing it differently."

He stood upright again and motioned her to go, and only as she moved where the other children slept, she remembered with sick horror that there was no door between the rooms. Despair gave her courage, she quickened her pace; he did not follow her—there was a moment's respite. Softly and rapidly she threw a coverlet over the two fair sleeping heads, then she flew to the bell. A violent pull—another—and the bell-rope broke in her hand. Would any one come? The madman heard the twang of the wires, and suspected treachery. He sprang towards the room, but Lizzie was too quick for him. She sprang towards the doorway, with upraised hand.

"Walter Stone, go back," she commanded in a solemn voice. "It is all done. I forbid you to enter here."

For a moment the lunatic cowered before her, awed by the light in those gleaming eyes, then he sprang at her throat like a wild beast. An instant's struggle, an instant's agony like unto death, and with a mighty crash the door burst open, and Dr. Holford, with the exertion of his whole strength, dragged the madman from the choking girl. To hold him singly was impossible. He broke from the doctor's grasp, threw up the window, and, with a loud laugh, leapt into the garden below, where the dull thud of his fall was heard just as the assistant, whose carelessness had permitted him to secrete the knife, appeared upon the scene.

"Go down, go down," cried the doctor, pointing to the window. The assistant looked out and hurriedly disappeared, and the doctor gave all his attention to Lizzie. She had not fainted—she could not do so—not at all events with the dreadful news untold, but she was gasping for breath.

The doctor bent over her. "Lizzie, dear Lizzie, look up. I saw how it was. You were defending my children. You have saved their lives. Try to look up, and tell me you are not hurt."

But Lizzie shrunk from the tender words, and cowered miserably in her chair. She strove to compel her parched tongue to speak, and tell him that by her folly she had caused the death of his baby, but a hissing gurgle came instead of words, and ended in an hysteric shriek. The servants, and nurse among them, had come crowding in by this time, and a loud exclamation from the latter startled them all.

"Gracious powers! what is this?" and she drew forth the knife from the bassinet, and held it up in view of the rest, its polished surface still undimmed.

"Well, the Lord be praised for his mercy! It were his providence, that it were, that put into my head all of a sudden to-day, that baby were a growing too big for a bassinet, and I put her in the old cot by my bedside, and drawed my curtains around her, and there she is, the precious lamb, awake and a smiling at us all, as good as sugar."

Lizzie heard the words, or rather some dim idea of their meaning penetrated to her brain, but the relief was too sudden to be realized at once. She understood that confession was not needful, but remorse was as bitter as ever. She stood up and held out her hands imploringly.

"Can—you—for—give?" she whispered piteously, and fell forward in a dead faint upon the doctor's shoulder.

For many, many months Dr. Holford tended Lizzie through the nervous fever that followed upon her swoon. At one time he almost despaired of her recovery, but youth and a sound constitution conquered, and she rose at last from her sick bed, the shadow of what she had been.

The doctor pronounced change of air and scene to be absolutely necessary during her convelescence, and simultaneously discovered that he had been working too hard, and required a holiday and a month or two abroad. Rumor states that he imparted these conclusions to Lizzie Stuart, and made sundry other confidences to her, during one very long and earnest conversation which they had, walking slowly up and down—her feeble steps tenderly supported by his arm—under the old hawthorn, brilliant by this time with autumnal berries.

Walter Stone fractured his skull in his fall. He was insensible for many days, but at length consciousness returned, and those who watched around his bed thanked God to see that all traces of insanity had disappeared. They looked forward hopefully to the future, but his career on earth was ended. He sank gradually, and died in a few weeks. He lived long enough to be deeply thankful to have been spared from the guilt of the awful crime he had so nearly committed, and to send, through Dr. Holford, a message of gratitude and blessing up to the woman, who, by her self-command and courage, had saved him from going to the grave with blood-stained hands.

THE ORIGIN OF "MOTHER GOOSE."—One of the most curious things in Mr. Wheeler's very curious learned Dictionary of the Noted Names of Fiction is his identification of "Mother Goose"—the Mother Goose of the world-famous "Melodies"—with a real person of New England origin. According to Mr. Wheeler, she belonged to a wealthy family in Boston, where her eldest daughter, Elizabeth Goose, was married by Cotton Mather, in 1715, to an enterprising and industrious printer named Thomas Fleet, and in due time gave birth to a son. Like most mothers-in-law in our day, the importance of Mrs. Goose increased with the appearance of her grandchild, and poor Mr. Fleet, half distracted with her endless nursery ditties, finding all other means fail, tried what ridicule could effect, and actually printed a book with the title, Songs for the Nursery; or, Mother Goose's Melodies for Children. "Printed by T. Fleet, at his Printing House. Pudding Lane (now Devonshire Street,) Boston. 1719. Price ten coppers." Mr. Wheeler does not mention where a copy of this edito princeps may be seen, or its current value among New England antiquaries. His circumstantial account, which we have abridged above, is written with all the seriousness of truth, but it is certainly a remarkable coincidence that the same name should have been used in another language by Perrault, in his Contes de ma Mère Oye, (Mother Goose,) twenty years before, in 1695. The general currency of cant names and words when once adopted is very remarkable, and has never been explained. There are in works of the beginning of the last century two accounts of a noted commander of the West India merchantman, Black Eagle, Captain Fudge, called from his notorious habit of romancing Lying Fudge; and there can scarcely be a doubt that Mr. Burchell's famous exclamation "Fudge," long a part of the language, took its rise from this individual. A better known instance is the verb "to chouse;" this certainly originated with the rogueries and impositions of a foreign impostor who passed himself off as a Turkish "chiaus" or envy during the reign of Charles II., and is often referred to in the literature of the time.

WIT AND HUMOR.—May I give a few examples of humor, as I understand it, which occur to me at this moment? Washington Irving on his first visit to France writes home: "I took Paris by the tail." Charles Lamb meets a newly married lady "who marvelled that an old bachelor like him should assume to know anything about the propagation of oysters. Addison, in a sketch of the fashionable décolletées young ladies of his time, candidates for matrimony, says: "Many a man has been hindered from laying out his money on a show by seeing the principal figures of it hung out before the door"—and has been "so attentive to those objects he could see for nothing that he took no notice of the master of the show, who was continually crying out: "Pray, gentlemen, walk in!" The whole paper, by the way, is not at all out of date. And Goldsmith, in an essay on critics: "Another has written a book himself, and being condemned for a dunce, he turns a sort of king's evidence himself, and becomes the terror of every offender." This I call humor. The following I call witty—Voltaire's hint to writers: "The adjective is often the enemy of the substantive, even when they agree in gender, number, and case." Pope's: "Some solitary wretches seem to have left the rest of mankind only as Eve left Adam, to meet the devil in private." Quintillian's advice how to deal with short-witted people: "A narrow-necked bottle must be humored; pour gently, or you spill instead of fill." Coleridge's comparison of language, as ordinary men use it, to a barrel organ, "that supplies at once both instrument and tune." Mme. de Stael's criticism on the ontological system of her German friends, "that they had all the darkness which preceded the creation without the light that followed it." The Bishop of St. David's suggestion that the many insignificant names signed to a certain petition were like zeroes preceded by a decimal point, "however far the series may be prolonged, it can never rise to the value of a single unit."—"X.," in the Nation.

MR. POLLARD, who recently assaulted the Times correspondent in Richmond, was brought before the mayor on the Wednesday following. Mr. Brooks admitted that he had dressed his account of the shooting affair in the Capitol, of which he was not a witness, "to make it more acceptable" to the readers and proprietor of the newspaper which employs him; and that if spoken to Mr. Pollard's face, it would have been "grossly insulting." "Some license," however, he urged, "is allowed to newspaper correspondents in their publications." Judge Crump, the counsel for Mr. Pollard, alluding to Mr. Brooks as one of the "jackals of the press," thought he had only received a merited chastisement by "that most degrading of all weapons, the cowhide." Except that he was careful to state whom he considered degraded by it, we might have supposed the judge meant his client. Perhaps the mayor himself had this doubt. At all events he remarked with great profundity that "the opinion of the court, sitting on the bench, is not the same as if the court was not sitting on the bench;" and ordered Mr. Pollard to give bail for his appearance at the February term of the Hustings Court. So the doubt becomes a standing one.

APRIL RAIN.

I.

SHOWERS, showers, nought but showers, and it wants a week of May,
Flowers, flowers, summer flowers, are hid in the green and the grey;
Green buds and gray shoots cover their sparkling gear,
They stir beneath, they long to burst, for the May is so near, so near,
While I spin and I spin, and the fingers of the Rain
Fall patter, pitter, patter, on the pane.

II.

Showers, showers, silver showers, murmur and softly sing,
Flowers, flowers, summer flowers, are swelling and hearkening;
It wants a week of May, when John and I will be one,
The flowers will burst, the birds will sing, as we walk to church in the sun,
So patter goes my heart, in a kind of pleasant pain,
To the patter, pitter, patter of the Rain.

[Robert Buchanan.

THE MISER'S STORY.

BY M. A. DENISON.

I WAS born in England. I remember nothing but poverty—stalking crime and absolute want. The houses where I lived were all in various stages of filth and decay. Whether the old blear-eyed man who kicked and commanded me was my father, I never knew. Whether the woman who sometimes fed, and oftener beat me, was my mother, I cannot say. All I know is that I had a miserable, drag-about life of it, going round after cold victuals—knocking smaller boys down to get the contents of their broken baskets, and hunting for rags in the gutter.

I suppose I was rather a good-looking boy; they call me good-looking now, for an old man. I know I was smart, comparing myself with children as I see them. Of course I was like the rest of my class. I could fight a little, and swear a little, steal a little, and eat a good deal—that is, when I got the chance, which was seldom.

I was ignorant—didn't know one letter from another, and didn't want to. What did I care about education—I, who never saw a book from one year's end to another? And love—gratitude—hope—I could of course understand neither. Nobody loved me, therefore I loved nobody. Nobody had ever made me grateful—had ever held out hope to me.

Some strange impulse was given me one day. I waked up, sprang from my bundle of straw, and involuntarily the words came from my lips—"I'm going to do something to-day." What that something was, I had not the remotest idea, but I put on my apologies for clothes, and sallied out in my vagabond way, whistling, caring for nobody.

It was about noon, and I had not yet tasted a mouthful of food. Passing around the corner of a street, I saw a good-looking man, standing at his horse's head, gazing about him somewhat perplexed.

"Boy," he cried out, "will you take care of my horse and cart for half an hour?"

"Yes, sir," said I.

"There's a man!" he exclaimed. "I've got a lot of fruit here, and you must guard it well. Here's a couple of peaches for you; just stand here, quietly—I dare say nobody'll disturb you."

He went away, and I stood for awhile, till I was tired. Then, thought I, I'll get a hatfull of the fruit and run. But for the first time I felt an instinct of shame at the suggestion. "He trusted me—he saw I was a mean-looking fellow, too, but he trusted me, and I won't abuse his kindness."

Something like this reasoning ran in my head, and I squatted down on the kerbstone, feeling the importance of an honorable trust, as I had never felt such a thing before. Presently some of my fellows came along and hailed me. I told them to go on. They peered about the cart, and saw the sunny faces of the peaches.

"We'll have some of them," they said.

"No, you won't," said I. "I'm put in charge here, and I won't see anything stole."

With that they began a rumpus. They reached over the cart. I struck them, and used such efforts that they all rushed pell-mell upon me, and we fought till the blood came—but I vanquished them. Just then, out came the proprietor.

"What's the matter?" he cried.

"Oh, nothing, only I had to fight for your goods there," I answered.

"You did, eh? You've got a black eye for it."

"No matter," said I. "I meant them boys shouldn't steal a cursed peach, and they didn't, neither."

"Well, you've got good pluck, my boy; here's a crown for you—but don't swear."

My eyes stood out.

"A whole crown?" I exclaimed.

"Yes; do what you please with it, but I'd advise you to buy a pair of shoes."

"Thank you," said I, with a beating heart. "It pays to be good, don't it?"

He smiled a curious smile, asked me several questions, and ended by taking me home with him in his cart.

Home! I thought I was in heaven, albeit I had seldom heard of such a place. My heart beat heavily every time I dared to put my feet upon the carpet.

The next day there came a man to see me. I was washed clean, and had on a good suit of clothes. He said, "Youngster, I'm going to make a bargain with your people. I want a boy—just such a brave, clever boy as you are; and if you behave yourself, I promise you shall have as pleasant a home as you desire."

Well, that was good. I hardly cared to speak, to breathe, for fear of breaking the illusion. I never was so happy as I was that day. They gave me some light tasks to do—I wished they were more important.

From that day I was treated as one of the household. The man was a widower, and had no children; consequently, I became to him a son. He educated me handsomely, and when I was twenty-one, he died and left me seven thousand pounds.

Well, I considered myself a rich man. I gloated over my wealth: it became an idol to me. How to increase it was now my first desire. I consulted competent men, and under their counsel I put my money out at interest. I grew wealthier—my business (my benefactor had stocked me a warehouse) prospered; and I was in a fair way, I thought, to marry Lucy Manning.

Sweet Lucy Manning! the most artless, winning maiden in all the world to me. I loved her deeply, dearly. She was blue-eyed, auburn-haired—her disposition was that of an angel, and I had plighted my vows to her.

One night, I was invited to the house of a prosperous merchant: and there I met a siren in the person of his niece, a black-eyed girl, whose charms and whose fortune were equally splendid! She was an heiress in her own right—she was beautiful and accomplished. Heavens! what a voice was hers—pure, clear, sweet, and ravishing. I was charmed, and she was pleased with me. Alas! I met her too often. In her presence I forgot my gentle Lucy; she magnetized, thralled me. It was a triumph to feel that so beautiful, gifted and wealthy a woman loved me—me, who had known misery and corruption all the first years of my life.

Gradually I broke off my intimacy with Lucy. I received no token from her—she was too proud. But that cheek grew pale—that heavenly eye languid; and though I seldom met her, I knew in my heart that she was suffering, and branded myself a villain.

At last she knew with certainty that I was to marry Miss Bellair. She sent me a letter, a touching letter: not one word of upbraiding, not one regret! Oh, what a noble soul I wounded! And she could calmly wish me joy, though the effort made her heart bleed—I knew it did.

I tried, however, to forget her, but I could not. Even at the time of my magnificent wedding, when my bride stood before me radiant with glittering diamonds, the white face of poor Lucy glided in between, and made my heart throb guiltily.

Oh, how rich I grew! Year after year I added to my gold. My miserly disposition began to manifest itself soon after my marriage. I carried my gold first to banks, and then to my own safes. I put constraint upon my wife—for very generously she made over her whole fortune to me—and began to grumble at our expenses. I made our living so frugal that she remonstrated, and finally ran up large bills when and where she pleased. Against this I protested, and we had open quarrels more than once. My clothes grew shabby; I could not afford to buy new ones, although the interest on my investments was more than I could spend for rational living.

I grew finally dissatisfied with everything but my money. I neglected my wife, and grew careless of her society. Several gentlemen came to my house—among them, a would-be celebrity. He came, I thought, too often for my good name, and I ordered my wife to discontinue his company. She refused, and I locked her up in her room. How she managed to set herself free, I never knew, but in the evening, when I returned, she was gone from the house. That caused me some uneasiness, not much, for I was soon absorbed in taking account of my gains. It was, perhaps, nine in the evening. I had just managed to take up a paper for a moment, to read its business details, when the door opened, and in came my wife, dressed bewitchingly, as if just from an evening concert, followed by that moustachioed celebrity.

"Good evening, my dear," she said in the coolest way imaginable, and placed a chair for her friend.

"Stop!" I cried, my jealousy roused; "that man sits not down in my house."

"That man—a gentleman, and my friend, shall sit here if I please," said my wife firmly.

My passion was excited then as it never was before, and I collared the scoundrel. He was my match—but, heavens! my wife coolly put a dirk-knife that she drew from a cane in his hand, and he stabbed me. I fainted, and remembered nothing more, till I found myself on a bed in my own chamber, watched over by my house-keeper.

"Where—ure—they?"

"Gone," was all she said.

"It occurred to me then like a flash of lightning, that nobody was near me at the time I was wounded, that my keys were about my person, and that I had been robbed, perhaps, of all my available property. The thought threw me into an agony of fear. I ordered my clothes to be brought to me. The keys were there. Taking one of them out, I told Mrs. Hale, my house-keeper, to go to the safe and bring me the papers that were there. She returned, her face white with terror, to say there was nothing there, and all the little doors were open.

"Robbed! robbed!" I yelled, with curses and imprecations, and again my senses deserted me.

Brain fever ensued. For weeks I lay deprived of reason, literally treading on the verge of the grave. One morning, I was conscious only of a sinking, deathly feeling, as I feebly opened my eyes. Was it an angel I saw standing beside me, her soft eyes veiled with pity, looking down upon me with the most commiserating gentleness? For a moment, I thought I might be in heaven—but no—I reasoned with myself, I loved money too well. My treasure was all of the earth, earthy. Again I opened my dim eyes. The vision seemed wavering now, but oh! did it not wear the sainted beauty of sweet Lucy Manning? A quiet, unutterable peace took possession of my entire being. I forgot wealth, health, everything. My past life seemed blotted out, and I was once again innocent, untouched by the griping hand of avarice, true, loving, and loved—and Lucy Manning was my idol.

But I recovered slowly; and at last, as my strength slowly returned, I missed her. As soon as she saw I could be left with safety, she had left me, and oh, the blank—the dreadful blank!

I wandered around my rooms, now so desolate, and saw the many evidences of my miserly habits. I know not why, but towards my wife my feeling seemed to have undergone a revulsion. I fear I hated her. She had nearly beggared me, had deceived me, shattered my health, destroyed all my hopes.

Months passed before I was able to estimate the damage that had been done me. Every means that could be put forth were used for the recovery of my money, but all in vain.

One night I sat by the fire, a cheerless, disappointed, and lonely man. I had been thinking thoughts that only burned my brain, but did not purify my heart.

"If I had only married sweet Lucy," I said, again and again, "all this had not been so."

My house-keeper came in with a letter—an unusually large package it was—and, as it bore a foreign postmark, I opened it with a trembling hand. What was that? A rustling, crumpled bank-note! Another and another came forth, and there laid upon my knees twenty notes for large sums. A few trembling lines accompanied them:

"My Husband—I am dying. Forgive me, and accept this enclosed as a faint effort towards restitution. It is not much over half that we took from the safe. The rest is—I know not where. I am deserted. Farewell, forever!"

An icy chill thrilled me. It seemed as if her spectral presence was near me. I shuddered, as I rolled the notes together, and threw them across the room.

"Lie there, curse of my soul!" I cried. "Lie there till I have conquered myself—ay, if victory be not won till you are rotten."

I shut the door up, and sealed it; and for six months I toiled like a penniless man, till I partially redeemed myself. By managing cautiously, I placed my business on a successful footing, and began life again, a new man. It took many a year to wear off my old habits of parsimony; but every effort gave me a new and agreeable pleasure.

Meantime, Lucy Manning became dearer to me than she had ever been in the flush of youth. I entreated her forgiveness, humbled myself to a confession, tested myself in all ways, and convinced her at last that I was as worthy now as once I was only in seeming. On the day of my wedding, I opened the sealed door. The bank-notes lay where I had flung them. I took them up with the pride of a conqueror, and placing them in her hands, exclaimed, "They are no longer my masters; use them as you will!"

Now I am a man!—redeemed from the thraldom of covetousness. I have three blooming children; Lucy is an angel of goodness; and I can say of myself, "By the grace of heaven, I am what I am."

Hoop-skirts, like gun-barrels, are not dangerous unless they have something in them. But when the former are charged—powdered, wadded, and waterfall-capped—they should be handled with the greatest caution. In many instances it is dangerous to even look at them.

The proportion of will and power is not always reciprocal. A copious measure of will is sometimes assigned to ordinary and contracted minds; whilst the greatest faculties as frequently evaporate in indolence and languor.

It is understood that after a series of dramatic engagements, the first of which has lately been opened in New York, Miss Bateman's retirement from the stage will take place, and her marriage will be celebrated.

A NEW DISEASE; OR, PROPRIA QUÆ MARIBUS.

SAID Mr. Jonas Barcarole, looking about him at breakfast, "Has anybody seen John Misling lately?" Everybody looked at Clara.

"He has not been here in a month, sir," answered the beautiful Clara, promptly.

"Hum!" said Mr. Barcarole; "ha! the young fellow may be sick. I should think somebody had better look after him;" and buttoning up his overcoat, for it was now well on in the chilly weather, the President of the Primrose Bank went down town; but Clara's conscience staid by the breakfast-table; and it tweaked and twinged her with remembrances of the way in which she had snubbed this poor little Misling, who labored under the double disadvantage of being a cousin, and madly in love with her; and it drew such terrible pictures of the forlorn little man, lying sick and untended in his dreary lodging-house, that it spurred her up, and drove her on to her dressing-bureau, where she arrayed herself in a velvet basque, a violet hat, and the smallet buff-tinted kid gloves, into which she could squeeze a very pretty little hand; and fortified by the presence of her aunt, Mrs. Douglass, a lace handkerchief, and a vinaigrette, went to find and nurse her missing cousin.

Now John Misling was a wholly inappropriate, unfortunate, unseasonable, and absurd individual! Noisy when he should be silent, mum when he should talk; the round man in the square hole; the third person at a tete-a-tete: the man never to see the paper in which he was told to call somewhere and hear something to his advantage: to have the small-pox when you counted on him as groomsman; to break his leg if your case depended on his evidence; while his mental and physical qualities, taken together, made such an odd jumble that you might have supposed that Nature had compounded him out of the scraps and leavings of everybody's disposition and physique. For example: joined to the muscle of a young lady he had a preposterous itching for frays and adventures. He blushed and perspired in the presence of women, and was always dreadfully snubbed by them, and yet faucied himself a hero among them. He was scant five feet two inches in height, with a huge nose and a red shining face, and yet was haunted by a notion of carrying himself loftily and gracefully. He squeaked, stammered, talked fast, and without any commas, and insisted on trying to shine in society. He was the author of perhaps more rejected manuscripts than any one in the United States, and yet firmly believed in his own talents as a writer; and though utterly penuiless and ridiculous in every one's eyes but his own, was madly in love with his beautiful cousin, Clara Barcarole, the daughter of the wealthy President of the Primrose Bauk, and one of the most fascinating girls in New York.

During the month in which he had been missed from the Barcarole mansion he had written a book, and the polite publishers of the house of Sanscrit & Co. had promised it "their earliest attention." He calculated that their "earliest attention" signified three weeks, and at the end of that time intended to demand an advauce of five hundred dollars on the book. Out of the five hundred dollars he would buy a pair of new trousers, and in the trousers he would call on the beautiful Clara, and give her an opportunity of becoming Mrs. John Misling. Meantime—and there is not a more difficult operation in the world than living out a "meantime"—Misling had only a balance of twenty-five cents in his pocket, and no prospect of money from any quarter. In this dilemma he picked up a little printed bill, reading as follows:

"J. CANTRELL, Dealer in all kinds of Ladies' and Gentlemen's cast-off Clothing, Bed-clothing, Boots, Shoes, old Metal, old Umbrellas, Musical Instruments, for all of which the Subscriber will give the highest Prices. He hopes any one who reads this Bill will look up all they have; if ever so trifling, it will be purchased. J. C. returns his sincere thanks for the liberal Encouragement he has received, and hopes every Person will look up all they can.

"N. B.—The Bill and the Goods will be called for in two hours.

"WASTE NOT, WANT NOT."

Misling had no umbrellas or musical instruments to offer the accommodating Mr. Cantrell; but besides the gray mix that he was just then wearing he owned a pair of linen trousers. There would be a certain risk in the venture; for, between ink-pots and mutton-chops cooked over the gas, there was nothing left for the "gray mix" but to be washed. While they were in the hands of Mrs. O'Flaherty. Misling would be a trouserless man: and it would be like his luck for the house to take advantage of his situation and burn down; or some one might call; or Mrs. O'Flaherty might get drunk and forget him. But nothing venture, nothing have. Misling sold the linen trowsers, provisioned himself with crackers and cheese, and, with many injunctions, placed the "gray mix" in the hands of Mrs. O'Flaherty.

It was then, of all days in the year, that Clara Barcarole brought her violet-hat, her aunt, and her lace handkerchief to look after her unlucky cousin, and fluttering up the dingy steps of the dingier lodging-house, filled its onion-scented halls with wafts of Night-blooming Cereus, and the breast of its landlady with profoundest astonishment.

Misling heard them coming, the shrill voice of his landlady o unding in advance; for, as there was no waiting-room, the good woman had marshalled them up the damp stairs at once.

"This way, ladies. Take care—them steps at the top is broken. The third door on the left, ladies."

Misling heard and glanced wildly around him. There was the fire-place; but it was obstructed by a fire-board and a rusty stove, and, besides, he had never learned to climb a chimney. Closets there were none. He had no trunk, and might have hesitated about getting into it if he had. Impossible to get under the bedstead, for it was a cot, and, in his fright, it never occurred to him to lock the door; and hearing the rustle of silk and patter of boot-heels close at hand he sprang hastily into bed, covering himself up to the tip of his nose, just as Clara and Mrs. Douglass entered.

"Ah!" said Clara, looking about her compassionately; "just as I thought. Now, Cousin John, how bad of you to be ill, and never send us word, and make me come all this way to find how you were!"

"You are an angel," answered Misling, vaguely, and tingling with pleasure and pain alike; for it was so good of her to search him out, yet how dreadful to be visited by an angel when a man's trousers were in the wash!

"Have you been long ill?" asked Mrs. Douglass, kindly, her womanly sympathies thoroughly aroused by the dreary, chilly, bare little room."

"Yes—no—that is—a day or so," returned Misling, getting scarlet.

"He has a fever," said Clara, growing more and more concerned. "Look at his face, Aunt Miriam! Just think of his lying sick and alone in this—"

She was going to say miserable den, and certainly the expression did the wretched little room no more than justice; for there was no fire in the rusty stove—the carpet, in the wear and tear of years, had forgotten long ago the pattern of its youth—and the table, adorned with bowl, ewer, shaving utensils, crackers, cheese, and stationery, was of pine, as were the two hard chairs occupied by the ladies.

"What medicines have you taken?" asked Mrs. Douglass, observing that Misling shrank from every notice of his surroundings. "If you have fever I would recommend—"

"I never take drugs," cut in Misling, hastily. "Perfect quiet, light diet"—here he glanced at the crackers and cheese—"are the remedies to which I always resort."

"You are accustomed to it then. You are often ill in this way?" queried Clara.

"Yes; my attacks may be said to be periodical," said Misling, not without a secret relish of his own wit, dangerous as was his situation.

"Periodical attacks!" echoed the young lady, to whom the words conveyed a very dreadful idea indeed, and opening wide her handsome brown eyes. "And you do nothing for them at all, cousin John?"

"Well, no—not exactly. I—I—" stammering, and cornered; "the fact is," brightening—"I use hydropathic remedies. I have great faith in the virtues of water;" secret relish of his own wit again."

"No wonder you are ill; but you need not suppose you are going on in this heathenish way now, sir, that you have fallen into better hands than your own," showing symptoms of taking off her gloves. "We do not mean to leave you till we have seen you more comfortable, do we, Aunt Miriam?"

Misling burst out in a cold perspiration, and, for the first time in his life, wished his fair cousin at the antipodes.

"You must not think of such a thing! You are too good," he stammered. "I am well—that is, I shall be well soon. You really give yourselves too much trouble."

"You hear," said Clara's conscience, bounceable as ever, under the velvet basque; "he lives here, half frozen on bread and cheese, till he falls ill; and then he calls you, who snubbed him, every time he approached you. 'too good,' because you take the trouble at last to ask whether he is alive or dead. Your own cousin, Miss; and if he dies whose fault will it—" Here the conscience was cut short by a tear from Clara, which she wiped away, not on the lace handkerchief, but on a plainer one taken from her pocket, saying:

"We are not too good at all; and we are not going to be put off in that way, are we Aunt Mir?"

"If John will tell us something of his symptoms," returned Mrs. Douglass. "What do you call your illness, John?"

"Yes, what is it, Cousin John? What is the matter?" echoed Clara, turning her face, all alive with compassionate interest, toward the unhappy Misling, who experienced the agony of all rogues when they see detection approaching. Whatever he pleaded he was sure to be tripped on the symptoms, or exposed by the first doctor called in to attend him. He grew pale and red, hot and cold, by turns, as he ransacked his brains for some unheard-of disease, when suddenly he remembered, apropos of the luckless trousers, Charles Read's novelette, "Propria quæ maribus;" and also that Clara not only knew no Latin but seldom opened a book.

"The disease is constitutional. In fact it may be called hereditary," said the little wretch, his mouth twitching. "I remember that my father often suffered from the same cause. There is nothing for it, as I said before, but time, quiet, and the water-cure. It is called Propria quæ maribus."

"How strange!" exclaimed Clara, with evident horror. "It must be dreadful. Is it very painful? I never heard of such a thing: did you, Aunt Miriam?" But Mrs. Douglass had walked hastily to the window, and stood there looking out, presenting to the company only a back view of her shoulders, which for some reason twitched unaccountably.

"Aunt Miriam!" exclaimed Clara, in surprise, and vaguely alarmed; "Cousin John! Aunt Mir! what is it? Is it incurable? Is it anything like fits?" edging around to peep under her aunt's bonnet, when she saw, to her inexpressible astonishment, that lady crimson, convulsive, and choking with suppressed laughter.

"I think we might go, Clara," said Mrs. Douglass, gurgling. "I do not believe that it is very dangerous. John will be likely to get on better without us," gasping hysterically.

"Aunt! Cousin John! what is it all about," asked the astonished girl, turning toward Misling. Misling made no answer. He was trying to die. Just at this juncture a heavy step shook the boards of the little entry, and, without knocking, entered Mrs. O'Flaherty, the "gray mix" dangling from her arm.

"An' here's yer pants, Misther Misling," laying the articles in question on his bed, "though yez better not be afther puttin' them on jist yet, I'm thinkin'; maybe they be'nt dhry intirely, I hurried thim so." All the time staring hard at the lilac hat and Aunt Miriam; and coming to a dim notion that she might have been indiscreet, Mrs. O'Flaherty drew a long breath, and mended the matter thus:

"An' shure and I'd have waited ef I'd known yez had company, only yez said yez couldn't go out till I brung thim, and charged me so petiklar, ye knows."

Mrs. Douglass rushed frantically out of the room, followed by Clara, and Misling heard them on the landing.

"Aunt what is it, and what is Propria quæ maribus?"

"His trousers, child, his trousers!' It means, that which is proper for men! Did you never read the story? Oh! oh! oh!" Suppressed gigglcs, rush and rustle of skirts on the stairs, and then the jar of the front-door below. They were gone. Misling was a proper and a decorous little man, but he could not help saying, in strict confidence to the reckless "gray mix," still on the foot of his bed, "D—n it!"

Shortly after the President of the Primrose Bank gave Misling a new suit and a situation at six hundred a year; but we fear Misling could hardly have been sufficiently grateful, for he never gave the President's daughter in return that opportunity of becoming Mrs. John Misling.

BEAUTIFUL FOREVER.—The beauty of youth and fresh complexion is one of the things on which may be written "eminently perishable." Like all scarce and attractive things, it has a wonderful value; and, like all precious things, it has its imitations, more or less skilful. Beauty of feature remains long—elegant carriage can be found in women whose youth is avowedly long left behind; and beauty of expression, that highest loveliness of all, lovely because lovable, is peculiar to no age, though it is most often developed late in life. The first-mentioned beauty, however, appears to be that most coveted—and to be so just because it is most fleeting. Herrick says:

"Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old time is quickly flying."

A good many women of our own day seem determined to make time appear to fly more slowly, and so to prolong the period of rose gathering. To this end they adopt all manner of inventions as to washes and dyes, and paints and cosmetics, and "Arabian baths"—all having for object and end the attaining or retaining of the bright, fresh bloom of youth.

This is all very foolish. If a woman is no longer young—if the first youth is left behind—the advances of time will show; and nothing that can be done will restore the accompaniments of youth, beautiful in themselves, but very transient.

Some women, we acknowledge, retain their freshness and brightness of tint much longer than others; and perhaps they find it hard when these begin to fade.

There is no cosmetic which can supply the place of youth; and nothing that can prolong its charms so well as good health and good temper. To those whose youth is leaving them, we would recommend exercise in the open air, the constant use of the bath (not the "Arabian," but that of fresh water,) and the cultivation of contentment and cheerfulness.

Fretfulness and indolence, care and disease, will make sad havoc of beauty, and no nostrums in the world can get rid of the marks they make. Until the "mill which grinds people young again," can be brought into profitable operation, the inventions of restorers of charms will be of very little avail to give back beauty which nature has ordained shall be impaired.

WHEN Miss Burdett Coutts, of London, became the heiress of Mrs. Coutts, who had been Miss Mellon, the actress, her fortune was computed at thirteen tons of gold. It has been growing ever since. She cannot spend her income, nor even give it away, with all her benefactions. It employs several active secretaries to read her begging letters. S gives all she has time to give.

BULL VERSUS BEAR.

A CALIFORNIA ADVENTURE.

ON one occasion during my residence in California, in 1853, I had occasion to proceed upon business from Stockton to the mission of San José, a distance of between eighty and ninety miles. I was in the saddle betimes, as my business was of importance, and had made three or four miles before the first faint streaks of the coming day became visible in the east. The air was cold and balmy, and laden with the perfume of the flowers and herbage; whilst, as the sun arose, the dew-drops glittered everywhere upon the twigs and grass blades like diamonds. The deer, as they left their coverts to feed, gazed fearlessly on either side of the trail as I passed; and every now and then I disturbed a bevy of quail, who, after a short flight, dropped in the edge of the chapparel, or into the wild oats. The country was rolling and park-like, dotted here and there with live oaks of immense size, standing singly, or with smaller trees in clumps.

After an hour or two's ride, Mount Diablo became visible in the distance, looming up cloud-like in the thin air; whilst, upon my left, the coast-range ran along almost parallel to my route. Gradually, the breeze ceased, and the air became close and oppressive, and continued so until I stopped for my mid-day halt, to allow my horse to feed. Unusually sultry as the day had been, it became still more so, and so silent, that not even the buzzing of an insect could be heard, and the air felt as though it had been heated in a furnace. Stretched on my blankets, I had tried to smoke my pipe, but even that lacked its usual soothing effect. Presently, a low muttering sound was audible, which gradually increased; it was the moaning of the storm-wind, which came sweeping gustily along. Then came a flash of the most vivid lightning I ever saw, instantly followed by a tremendous peal of thunder, the signal-gun of the advancing storm, which rent the air, and made the earth tremble. A deep silence, for a brief interval, followed, which seemed more terrible than the previous uproar; then came the lurid flashes and crashing thunder, not in low grumbling tones, but in deafening peals; whilst the wind roared, and the rain descended in sheets of driving water. For two mortal hours did the tempest rage, and the wild winds swept by, whilst I cowered under my blankets, with bent head, and back to the blast.

At first, the thirsty and parched prairie drank greedily up the flood of water poured upon it, but soon it became completely saturated, and could contain no more, and the overflowing waters collected in great pools.

My horse, who had at first been terrified by the thunder-peals and lightning flashes, had strained upon his picket-peg, as he plunged, snorting with terror, but had failed to either break the tough raw-hide lariat, or draw the peg; and satisfied that he could not get loose, I had devoted my attention solely to sheltering myself as much as possible from the downpour.

Upon looking around when the storm had somewhat abated, what was my consternation to find that my horse, as soon as the ground had become thoroughly saturated, had pulled out the peg, and had left me on foot in the prairie. It was no use to think of pursuing my journey thus, and I sorrowfully prepared to retrace the long miles over which I had ridden in the morning. Rolling up my saddle, bridle, and tin cup, in which I had made my coffee, in my saturated blankets, and hiding them as well as I could in some stunted shrubs, I followed in the direction my horse had started, hoping to be able to trail him by his hoof-marks in the softened ground, and by the drag of his long lariat and picket-peg, which I hoped might entangle themselves around some bush or sapling, and thus bring up my runaway to a stand-still.

It was not, however, without great difficulty that I could discern the trail, for the driving rain had washed it out, save here and there occasionally; but still by keeping the line, I managed now and then to come upon traces of the fugitive. More intent upon the trail than on surrounding objects, I had proceeded four or five miles when I discovered that I had become an object of curiosity to a large herd of cattle, who were closing in upon me with no very friendly intention.

I had lived in Texas long enough to know how hostile prairie-cattle always are to footmen, though a horseman might ride close to them unregarded; I also knew how helpless I was when opposed to such a tremendous aggregation of brute-force as the three or four hundred wild cattle possessed who were now rushing bellowing towards me. The herd of cows, and steers, and yearlings was led by a fierce old bull, who occasionally stopped to tear up the earth and shake his horns; then again he would advance, the mass crowding together, switching their tails high in the air, uttering fearful bellowings, whilst they tossed their horns, staring wildly in mingled rage and wonder.

There was no time to hesitate; I had only just perceived my enemies in time. A herd of wild cattle rushing furiously at a man upon an open plain soon assist him in coming to a decision. Four or five hundred yards behind me was a tree which I had lately passed, and just behind that again some bushes along the margin of a little creek. I determined to make for the tree, and climb that if possible; if not, if I was too closely pressed by the thundering herd, I would try and gain the bushes, amongst which, or in some hole or cranny in the creek's banks, I might hope to conceal myself. Most pedestrian matches are timed; my race was not, but I have reason to believe that the same distance was never covered quicker by any mortal man. As I gained the tree, I looked back, and saw the foremost of the herd about a hundred yards from me. I never was considered an extraordinary climber when a boy at school, nor perhaps is a pair of heavy Mexican spurs an advantage in climbing, but I went up that tree like a squirrel, and had just gained a safe position, when my pursuers rushed underneath. Although I had gained safety for the moment, still there was something very fearful in my position, for I could form no idea how long the fierce beasts, who were tearing up the earth, and glaring at me with their wild fierce eyes, would keep me "treed."

A most unlooked-for adventure relieved me. For some time, most of the herd remained gazing at me; but at length, as though feeling satisfied that I could not escape, they became less stationary, and moved about, snatching pettishly at the grass, less from a desire of grazing, than from restlessness at their disappointment in failing to catch me before I could "tree."

Whilst thus sauntering aimlessly about, my especial enemy, the bull, strayed into the bushes that fringed the ravine, and suddenly there arose a fearful uproar, and it was evident that the tawny lord of the herd had got into trouble.

A hoarse bellowing and confused growling, intermixed with a crashing of the bushes, whilst the taller saplings swayed to and fro, showed that some desperate struggle was taking place on the edge of the ravine in which the bull was engaged, but what with I could not discover. Presently, the bull emerged with bloody head and huge furrows ploughed upon his shoulders, from which hung long strips of bloody skin-like ribbons. His eyes were red with rage, and it was evident he had no idea of giving up the contest, but had only retreated to gain an open space where he could fight to better advantage. Hitherto, I had only noticed the bull as a ferocious beast, who had from pure ill-nature put me in serious danger; but now, as he stood glowing with rage, I could not help noticing his admirable proportions. Long, lithe, and wiry, he stood a perfect model of strength and activity, whilst his massive shoulders proved what force he could bring to aid the thrusts of his straight, long, sharp-pointed horns. I had not more than a second or two to take in these points, when his antagonist appeared upon the scene in the shape of a hugh grizzly bear. No sooner was the bear fairly in the open, than the bull lowered his head, and charged straight and true at him, with the seeming force of a steam engine. The bear rose up upon his hind-legs to receive the attack, and catching the bull by the horns, bore down his head upon the ground by his great strength and weight, clinging to the head with his fore-legs, while he worked his hind ones, clawing with his cruel talons the sides and shoulders of the bull. The match was an equal one, as far as weight was concerned, and nearly balanced in other respects; for whilst the bear worked "teeth and toe-nails," the sharp horns and greater activity of the bull served to equalize them as to weapons; and as both antagonists possessed equal courage and determination, it was clear the duel was to be a la mort, and the victory, I could see, between such well-matched foes depended upon accident. Locked together thus in deadly strife, they remained some minutes, the bull each moment striving, as it were, to contract himself for his repeated thrusts, and the bear endeavoring to hold the bull's head to prevent their force, never intermitting for an instant raking with his claws the ribs and shoulders of the foe. For a moment or two they seemed to pause for breath by mutual consent, a lull which the bull artfully took advantage of, by a sudden backward spring, to get clear of the bear.

During the whole of the combat, the other cattle had stood around in awe-struck wonder, not attempting in any way to aid their champion. The bull, covered with gore from the gashes cut by the claws, and the head gnawed by the teeth of the bear, was a horrible sight to see, though the bear appeared as yet but little injured. As soon as the bull had gained space sufficient to give impetus to his charge, he again rushed furiously at the Grizzly, and this time succeeded in plunging one horn into the bear's belly, and, jerking his head up, brought away upon his horns some of the entrails of his foe; but the next moment he was borne back by the Grizzly, and both rolled over in another deadly struggle; and now so furiously and rapidly did they fight, whirling over and over, that only an undistinguishable mass could be seen. Again the bull fought clear of his antagonist, but he presented a far more deplorable appearance than before, for one eye had been torn from the socket, and his ears hung in shreds, whilst all the forward part of his hips was a mass of blood and mud, and his tongue, which protruded beyond his swollen lips, had been bitten through, and hung by only a piece of skin.

But the bear had evidently had the worst of this second encounter, for he lay almost motionless, his entrails wound round and round him like ory belts; and whilst in this state, the bull gored him repeatedly, till finally a long shiver passed through the bear, and he lay dead. Convinced at last that his enemy was dead, the bull raised his head in triumph, and as well as his mutilated tongue permitted, gave a roar of victory. It was dearly purchased, however, for he tottered as he bellowed, and though he set his legs wide apart, he swayed from side to side; presently his head drooped lower and lower, till at last he sunk down groaning to the ground. Then came two or three vain efforts to recover his legs, and after a few convulsive shudders, he too lay dead beside his foe. The herd sniffed round the dead bodies for a few moments, and then, wild with terror, started panic-stricken across the prairie.

Finding the coast clear, I descended from my perch, and with a due appreciation of the dangers of foot-travelling, set off in search of my horse, expecting a grizzly bear to make his appearance from every clump of bushes that I passed. After a tramp of several miles, I was fortunate enough to find my horse, whose lariat had become entangled around some shrubs near which he had stopped to feed; and mounting him bare-backed, I turned his head toward where I had left my saddle and other impedimenta; nor was I sorry, soon after sunrise the following morning, to see the long avenue of stately live oaks which line the road as you approach the Mission of San Jose.

DEADHEADS AS CRITICS.

THE trial of the suit brought by Mr. Swanborough, of the Birmingham theatre, against the comedian, Mr. Sothern, for a breach of engagement, has developed some very odious traits of human nature. The engagement was made last autumn, just before Mr. Sothern's malady of the throat obliged him to submit to an operation, and it was in consequence of the severity of the disorder that he broke the contract, and refused to appear more than five of the seventeen nights agreed upon with Mr. Swanborough. But, the first night of all, Mr. Sothern had disappointed the audience by failure to play, and the manager had to return the people their money, as well as some four or five pounds claimed by deadheads who paid nothing to come in. After this the Birmingham playgoers became very cold and critical, and Mr. Swanborough lost a good deal of money by his engagement with Mr. Sothern, although the comedian appeared in that character of "Lord Dundreary" which elsewhere had never failed to draw vast houses. The manager had recourse to the expedient of papering in order to fill his theatre, but the audiences thus admitted on free passes, though encouraging in numbers, were but lukewarm and niggardly in applause; and Mr. Sothern, speaking from a shrewd observation of human nature over the foot-lights, said that "a paper audience was not like a pay audience—there was a coldness about it—paper was never lively."

It must be confessed that there is a disagreeable analogy between the characteristics displayed by the Birmingham deadheads and those which mankind generally exhibits towards benefactors; and it need not take us long to get over the shock of surprise and indignation with which we learn that people who go into theatres for nothing are so ungenerous as to withhold applause habitually. It is known to most Christian moralists how exceedingly slow men who enjoy the bounty of Providence are to acknowledge the goodness which gives them health, riches, and station; whereas, persons who have neither are very grateful for them. Indeed, we fear that, in proportion as we are papered in this world, we are pitiless and proud. The favor seems a tribute to our merit, and it behooves benefactors to look well to the quality of their benefits if they wish to win our approval. When we pay our money for a thing, we are ourselves concerned in finding it good; but if we borrow or beg it, we judge it with unqualified severity.

This principle accounts not only for the liveliness of pay as contrasted with paper in theatres, but for a great deal of ill-nature in life. Does any one suppose, for instance, that the critics would be so savage if they had to buy the books they cut up? But having the volumes given to them by the large-hearted publishers and generous authors, how mercilessly they tear them to pieces! How the cruel rogues gloat over the destruction they occasion, and swell with scorn, and talk of "the volume of ridiculous trash before us," and "the absurd twaddler who has printed the present collection of rhyme," and so on! Of course, the people who buy the books are never guilty of this ingratitude. They put them into their libraries, and lay them on their parlor tables, and say nothing about them, and a purchased volume seldom meets with criticism except from somebody who borrows it. One of the most terrible censors of the public press of whom we ever heard was a person who took no papers but those he found in his neighbor's area. It is the same with the art critics, as they call themselves. Has any one ever heard of an art critic buying a picture or a statue? They abuse because they do not buy the artists' works, and come away from the exhibitions, where they have seen the pictures for nothing, and write terrible disquisitions on the creation of the world, and knock the poor painters about with the hard words of abstract æsthetics. The fat, good-natured purchaser of Mahlstick's "View of the Fulton Ferryboat by Starlight," never has anything to say about Fra Angelico or Bellini, but has a habit of taking his friends up to the picture, after dinner, and pointing out the merit of the smoke-stack and getting orders for Mahlstick. He has paid his money and he applauds, and even if he fancies the picture bad he says nothing, on the same principle that boys who give their money to see a calf with six legs never expose the imposture on coming out of the show, and it is left to some rogue who has stolen in under the curtain to issue forth and denounce the monster as nowise agreeing with his portrait on the posters.

The principle is of universal application. If we buy a bottle of wine to grace the dinner we give a friend, we do not cry out that it is beastly stuff, though our friend has no reserve in giving this opinion behind our backs, and making a wry face before us. Who is it creates the clamor about accidents on the best-managed railroads in the world? We fear it is the gentlemen of the press, who travel on free passes: and it is certain that if any church-goer finds a sermon dull, it is some casual hearer, invited into the pew of a member who has paid a thousand dollars for the pew, and thinks the sermon refreshing. It is universally granted that mothers love best those sickly and peevish children who cost them most pains and care, to the neglect of wholesome and amiable little ones, who never tax their patience; and it is notorious that the good humor of ill-natured people is the only good humor which has any positive value. Nay, would the fair partners of domestic joy appear such prizes as they all do if people were not at great trouble to win them? And would there not be many more divorce cases than there are now if people could be papered into matrimony?

We have had a great deal of absurd talk (from the poets chiefly) to the effect that life is hard; but it must be admitted that we should scarcely be willing to accept it, without grumbling, on better terms than the present. There are numbers of persons (the idle poets among them) who are dead-headed through life, and we see how captious and discontented they are with our poor little world. Alas! life is too easy, as any reader may learn by asking somebody who is puzzled where to sleep to-night, or some bed-ridden invalid, or say one of those Sybarites who take to the imposture of street-beggary out of mere luxurious wantonness.—The Nation.

A STRANGE AFFAIR.

BY EMERSON BENNETT.

At a wayside inn, on the old road that ran between Philadelphia and C——, in the State of Pennsylvania, a very strange and curious affair occurred in the fall of 1797. One dark, rainy, disagreeable night, a mounted traveller, well muffled up in a great-coat, with its broad cape turned up over his head like a cowl, his chin and lower part of his face buried in a bandana handkerchief, and with a broad black patch over his right eye, rode up to the tavern and called for supper and lodging. At the large fire burning in the chimney of the bar-room he sat and warmed and dried himself, while his meal was being prepared, without removing any of his garments, not even so much as his hat, and when the landlord at length announced that his repast was ready, he simply remarked:

"I have a severe pain in my face—so you must excuse my going to the table as I am."

He ate his supper in silence, showed no disposition for conversation, called for a strong glass of brandy and water, and soon after asked to be conducted to his room, adding that he was very much fatigued.

"By the way," he said to the landlord, who in person lighted him to his bed-room, "I may as well leave my pocket-book and watch in your possession till morning," at the same time handing these articles to the host, who took them with some reluctance, saying:

"I reckon they'd be quite as safe here with yourself—though I'll keep them for you if you wish me to."

"You'll oblige me by doing so," rejoined the stranger.

"Well, then," said the inn-keeper, "I must know how much money you've got here, if I've got to be responsible for it."

"Please open the pocket-book then and count for yourself," returned the stranger.

The host did so and said—

"I make it two hundred and fifteen dollars."

"Right!" rejoined the traveller, "and while I'm about it, I may as well add this purse, which contains fifty-one dollars in specie."

The landlord also counted the coin, part gold and part silver, said the amount was right, and went out bidding the other good night.

About two o'clock in the morning, a neighbor living within a stone's throw of the tavern, and who chanced to be up with a sick child, fancied he heard above the roar of the storm, which had increased in violence, a wild shriek, followed by two cries of "Help! Murder!"

He was rather a timid man, and was much alarmed. He blew out his light cautiously, opened the door, looked out, and stened. The storm beat in his face and howled around his dwelling, but he could see nothing, not even a light at the inn, and he heard nothing more that sounded like a human voice. He shut the door, fastened it, and then woke up his wife and told her all. She happened to be a woman of unusual nerve and courage, and after putting a few questions, replied with a yawn:

"Oh, Jim, it was only one of your fancies. You are always hearing something that nobody else does. Just think how many times you have hunted the house over for robbers since I've lived with you! Just tend to Mary, will you, and let me get a little sleep, for you know I didn't have any last night."

"I know it wasn't a fancy, but a real human cry," grumbled the man as he walked away, and allowed his drowsy spouse to return to her dreams.

The delicate leaden gray of morning was just beginning to dispel the inky blackness of the stormy night, when the landlord of the wayside inn was aroused by a series of thundering knocks upon the outer door of his habitation. He sprang out of bed, hastily drew on his trowsers and boots, took his waistcoat in his hand, and hurried down to wait on his supposed customers. On opening the door he found himself confronted by two rough-looking men, well muffled up against the storm, which as yet had scarcely abated its fury. Their horses panting, splashed with mud, with drooping heads, were hitched to the nearest post, and showed by their looks that they had been ridden very fast and far.

"Did a mounted traveller stop at this inn last night?" abruptly inquired one of the two.

"Yes," was the answer.

"Is he here still?"

"He is."

"Will you describe his appearance?"

"As well as I can," said the wondering host, "for I didn't see much of his face," and he not only proceeded with a description of his person, but added all that the traveller had said and done, including the affair of the money.

"I think we've got him this time!" said the one who had addressed the landlord, turning to his companion."

"It looks like it," was the reply, "but he's no doubt a desperate fellow, and we had better proceed with caution till we make all sure."

"Hark you, landlord!" said the first speaker in a low tone, "a word in your private ear. We are officers of justice from Philadelphia, in pursuit of a bank robber, and we suspect your strange guest to be the man we seek. Here is the warrant for his arrest. Now conduct us quietly to his room, and if need be, assist us in securing him."

"Certainly," said the host, turning somewhat pale, as it was afterwards remembered, and seeming not a little agitated.

"Walk in, gentlemen—this way, gentlemen."

He conducted them into the bar-room, and hurriedly struck a light, for it was yet too dark to see anything distinctly.

"I hope the fellow has not heard us," said one of the officers, drawing a pistol, while the other produced a pair of handcuffs.

"I hope it won't be necessary to shoot, gentlemen," said the host, with increased agitation.

"We will go up softly and try his door," said the officer with the pistol, "and if we find it fast perhaps it would be better for us to remain on guard and wait till he comes out himself."

The host, light in hand, led the way, though with seeming reluctance, as if not over anxious. On reaching the door, which the three parties had approached with light, stealthy steps, the landlord tried it very gently, and finding it unfastened, slowly pushed it open and went in, followed by the officers. The next moment the inn-keeper exclaimed in a tone of alarm and surprise:

"Gracious heavens! what's the meaning of this?"

The bed was tumbled, but vacant; no traveller was there—and the sheets and pillow-cases were stained with blood!

The officers looked meaningly at each other, and then at the host, who, pale and trembling, sunk half fainting upon the nearest seat. For a few moments there was a deep and ominous silence, and then one of the officers said slowly, and with pointed emphasis: "Landlord, this is very strange."

"The strangest thing I ever knew," fairly gasped the inn-keeper, glancing around him in frightened bewilderment; "where can the man have gone to?"

"And this blood, too," sternly chimed the other officer, "what does this mean, if not some foul play?"

"Oh, gentlemen," said the host, in a low, tremulous tone, "I hope you don't suspect me, for I'm as innocent as the child unborn. And now I remember, too, when I went to the door to let you in, I found it wasn't fastened, and I am right sure I fastened it myself before I went to bed."

"We certainly do suspect you, sir," said the officer, "for how can we help it, since the man is gone, as you have confessed, and you have his money in your possession."

"But he gave me the money to keep for him," cried the frightened host, "and I have got it yet."

"Undoubtedly you have; but that, you see, so far from proving you know nothing of the affair only tends to make e matter worse for you."

"Perhaps he's about yet, somewhere," suggested the inn-keeper. "If he's a bank robber and heard your knocks, he'd be quite likely to hide himself or run away, I should think."

The idea was worthy of attention, and a search for the missing man was forthwith begun. On looking under the bed blood was discovered on the floor, and the trail of this was found to lead out of the room, down stairs, and out of the front door, showing that the object of search, either living or dead, had gone out of the house. Beyond the building there were no traces, for the storm had obliterated them. The hostler was called, the only other man about the house, but he appeared to be a kind of stupid fellow, and evidently knew nothing of the matter, and a look in the barn showed the stranger's horse still there.

About an hour later the neighbor mentioned came over to the inn, in agitation and alarm, said there was a man lying by the roadside, and also stated what he had heard during the night.

Throughout that thinly-peopled section, the news spread rapidly, and before night a large number of excited spectators, including the Sheriff, Coroner, and two Magistrates, had collected at the inn. An inquest was held, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts, and though there was no direct evidence against the landlord, yet suspicion so strongly pointed at him as the murderer, that he was taken into custody and committed for trial.

In due time the trial came on, but the jury could not agree, and he was finally discharged. A second trial resulted like the first, and the inn-keeper, whose name was Williams, was kept in prison over a year.

How the affair would eventually have terminated had the mystery not been cleared up in an unexpected manner, it is impossible to say, but ere the time for the third trial arrived, a stranger appeared before the magistrate of the county, and deposed that he was the individual who had lodged at the inn on the night of the murder, and for taking whose life the landlord was still in prison.

In the course of his evidence he stated that he had been a merchant in Philadelphia, who finding himself on the eve of failure, had collected a large amount of money, run away, and that all traces of himself might be lost, and his death expected, he adopted the plan of putting a small part of his money in the hands of the inn-keeper ostensibly for safe keeping, and secretly departing in the night on foot, not supposing anything very serious would result to the landlord from this course of action. On getting up somewhere about midnight, his nose had set to bleeding, which would explain the traces of blood he had left behind him. He had made his way to Baltimore, and thence sailed to Havana, where he had been so fortunate in his speculations as to find himself in a condition to return and settle with all his creditors. On coming home and giving an account of his adventure to a friend, he for the first time learned with horror of the almost fatal consequences to the inn-keeper for his unjustifiable disappearance, and had hastened to make what reparation lay in his power. His testimony was subsequently corroborated on all important points, and the inn-keeper was honorably discharged, to the great relief and joy of his sympathizing friends. As a partial recompense for what he had suffered on his account, the merchant made him a present of the horse and money he had left with him, and two thousand dollars besides.

But the clearing up of one part of this strange affair only seemed to involve the other in deeper mystery. A murder had surely been committed, but by whom, and who was the unfortunate victim?

Even this, in the course of time, was also manifest. Some years after, a villain under sentence of death, confessed that he was a partner of the bank robber, and that having made an equal division of the spoils, they had agreed to leave the city by different routes and meet at an appointed place; that, eager to secure the whole of the booty, he had secretly taken his partner's road instead of the one agreed upon, and had waylaid and murdered him, within a few rods of the tavern kept by Williams, who, by being arrested for the crime, had drawn off all suspicion from himself.

Thus were the records of the deeds of that tempestuous night eventually brought to light, and the innocent cleared and rewarded, and the guilty detected and punished.

At a protracted meeting, recently held "out West," an ancient sister in the church arose, and said: "I see young ladies here that think more of gewgaws, furbelows, ribbons and laces, than they do of their souls' welfare. I loved them once, and adorned my hat with French artificial flowers, bright-colored ribbons, and sky-blue trimmings; but I found they were dragging me down to destruction, so I took them off—and gave them to my sister!"

A Curious Landscape.—There has seldom been a greater instance of misplaced ingenuity than the grand landscape in mosaic, made by a clerk in the French War Office. It is composed entirely of insects (of beetles alone there are more than 45,000) of nearly four thousand species, and took four years in making.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s, 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM, } Publishers.
C. H. WEBB,

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 3. 1866.

TO BE REGRETTED.

IT is very much to be regretted that a division has occurred in the Union Party. In this State, particularly, where, all through the war, an uncompromising support of the Administration was insisted upon as the only test of loyalty, now, that the war is ended, we find the loyal press almost without exception arrayed against the President. And war is waged by the press in this State with a vigor and a bitterness which is scarcely to be accounted for by "climatic influences." The Sacramento Union—decidedly the ablest and most influential journal published on this coast—struck very savagely at President Johnson on Saturday last, intimating in plainest language that he was drunk on the occasion of making his recent speech. A most ingenious color of fact was given to the accusation by the republication of a graphic description of the unpleasant scene which occurred on Inauguration Day. And that view has been adopted by nearly all the interior press, until now it is probably pretty well believed by a large portion of the population that the President was actually in his cups at the time the speech was made—which accounts for the "dead ducks."

It is suddenly discovered, too, that Secretary Seward is not only wanting in loyalty, but that he also is unworthy of confidence. Really, we had supposed that Mr. Seward's rank as a statesman was too well established to ever become an object of discussion, but the Union reveals the fact that he really is a very inferior diplomatist, and the Marysville Appeal, though giving him the credit of being the "most talented," also puts him up as the "most corrupt and ambitious man in the nation." The Brutus of the Appeal is undoubtedly an honorable man, but while arraigning the gray-haired old statesman for a grievous fault, he should remember how grievously he has answered it by years of wearing toil in the public service, to say nothing of the knife of the assassin, which so nearly closed his career while stretched upon a bed of sickness. It can scarcely be denied that Mr. Seward is entitled to some consideration, and we apprehend that if popular judgment be suspended for a while, the policy which he dictates will be vindicated in the light of subsequent events.

Johnson, also, has too clear a record to be dismissed on the first impulse of excited public feeling. Never yet has he been found wanting, and the only stain upon his character to which the hand of calumny can point is the unfortunate occurrence which attended his inauguration, and over that the veil of charity should be thrown. The cry about not wanting to be in the same party with Vallandigham and other rank traitors, is well enough for a popular watchword, but nothing could be more absurd as an argument. Because a few drenched and half-drowned rascals are attempting to get into our boat, shall we throw the helmsman overboard and capsize the whole institution?

One thing is certain. The South being conquered, nothing remains for the North but to put aside the mailed gauntlet and extend the hand of fellowship. We have very good authority for believing that while the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return; but very few converts would be made if the repentant sinner were compelled to stand shivering in the cold in an eternal penance.

But we digress from the purpose of this article. We repeat, it is very much to be regretted that a division has occurred in the Union party upon the policy which shall be adopted in the reconstruction of the States. Or rather, it is unfortunate that a division should have occurred upon a bill which in reality involves no issue at all, and which very few of the many who are so indignant over the "veto" understand or have even read. It is on political questions that the saying of the Germans, "Make haste slowly," has a direct application. In the present case all can afford to wait, and the press, especially, should instruct the people to be patient.

Bierstadt the artist, has made $120 000 with his brush in three years. He is now building a princely mansion at Irvington, on the Hudson, and drives the most stylish team in the Central Park.

"Kindly Humor"—An Item that was not Enjoyed in the "Bulletin" Office.—It is fortunately seldom that a leading journal so far forgets its dignity as to descend to personalities in its editorial columns—especially when the attack must be built upon an untruth. The following item appeared in the Evening Bulletin on Monday:

An Item that will be Enjoyed in the New York "Times" Office. "C. H. W.," once employed as a writer on the Bulletin, and now a volunteer correspondent of the New York Times, tells the following story at his own expense, for the purpose of proving that "only country papers are published" within this large city:

"When Bierstadt was out here I wrote a small paragraph for the Evening Bulletin, with which I was then connected, speaking of the sketches which he brought down from the Yosemite Valley, and prophesying what pictures they would make when completed. It was crossed out because they "didn't want to puff Bierstadt." Think of it—puffing Bierstadt!"

C. H. W. only tells half the story, but tells it correctly enough so far as he knows it. It was the late Dr. Tuthill who "crossed out" the puff, remarking at the same time in his quiet manner always full of kindly humor, "This is all well enough, but if we print it, W. will be sure to borrow $50 of Bierstadt, and I don't think he has any money to lose!"

Anything more malicious could not very well be devised. It was intended to convey a most injurious falsehood to the public in a guise which left no opportunity for appeal or disproof. Dr. Tuthill was in his grave, but no friend of his will do him the injustice to suppose that with all his "kindly humor," he ever originated the imputation which is attributed to him. The surviving editor of the Bulletin very well knows that during the connection of "C. H. W." with that paper, he never used or attempted to use its columns for any private purpose, that he filled out the term of his engagement faithfully and well, and at its expiration declined a renewal on any terms whatever. The writer of the paragraph in question knew that he was penning a wicked falsehood, which he dare not utter, and that the lips of the friend to whom he attributed his effort of "kindly humor," were silent in the grave, and could not be called upon to speak and disprove the libel. The animus was clearly shown in the first instance by publishing C. H. W. as the volunteer correspondent of an influential Eastern journal, knowing, on the contrary, he is the special correspondent of that paper. The author of the above paragraph was branded with a blow, as a slight specimen of kindly humor, to "be enjoyed in the New York Times office," where "C. H. W." needs no defence. Benton once alluded to an opponent as "a great liar and a dirty dog." A lover of sabre-cuts of Saxon speech need not look further to find a synonym for the author of the crafty libel above reproduced.

The First Steamer Pioneers.—The "first steamer pioneers"—those who came to California in the California—celebrated their seventeenth anniversary by a dinner at Gumba's on Wednesday evening. For years it has been the custom of these gentlemen to meet on each anniversary day, and over a table groaning with delicacies and suggesting the strangest contrast to their first steamship fare, journey their journey over again, and exchange experiences and kindly greetings. On the present occasion but few of the original pioneers were present. Dr. A. B. Stout, President of the Society, A. A. Austin, Esq., and H. F. Williams, Esq., constituting the whole representation. Dr. Stout presided at the head of the table, E. H. Washburn doing the honors at the foot. The regular Pioneer Society was represented by Mr. P. B. Cornwall, its President, E. H. Washburne, and A. Marius Chapelle. The usual number of invited guests filled out the vacant places, and until a late hour the flow of wine, song, story and kindly humor went uninterruptedly on. The occasion will long be remembered by all present as an eminently pleasant one.

The following compliment to a gentleman who for some time edited The Californian, appeared in the New York Weekly Review. Our readers will endorse the opinion of the Review, as regards Mr. Harte's literary ability, to the full:

"The California papers apparently cannot forgive Mr. Francis Bret Harte for being both an able and a modest man. They are just now abusing him, in the most absurd manner, for having refrained from putting any of his own poems in a collection of California poetry which he lately edited. We are acquainted with Mr. Harte only as a writer, and certainly he seems to be by far the most talented, cultivated, and refined writer that has yet appeared in California. Several of his mock novels have been copied into these columns, as a relief to graver articles, and we are glad to know that they have been received with general approbation. Our readers should not overlook Mr. Harte's account of 'A Venerable Imposter,' which appears in another column—a composition not unworthy of the pen of Charles Lamb."

The San Francisco Amateurs will give their seventh dramatic entertainment at Turn-Verein Hall on Thursday evening next. The play of the Iron Chest will be repeated by solicitation, to be followed with the usual social dance to the music of Walcott's Band. These entertainments are available to subscribers and invited guests only—and have uniformly been both social and successful.

"PRESENCE OF MIND."

INCIDENTS OF THE DOWN TRIP OF THE "AJAX."

THE Ajax, according to all accounts, had a rough passage out on her recent trip to the Sandwich Islands, and very many of the passengers for the first time in their lives began to think of their sins. "Mark Twain"—the veracious correspondent of the Territorial Enterprise, and a distinguished friend of our Police—relates the following incidents of the storm:

"The storm tore all light rigging to shreds and splinters, upset all furniture that could be upset, and spilled passengers around and knocked them hither and thither with a perfect looseness. For forty-eight hours no table could be set, and everybody had to eat as best they might under the circumstances. Most of the party went hungry, though, and attended to their praying. But there was one set of "seven-up" players who nailed a card-table to the floor and stuck to their game through thick and thin. Captain Fretz, of the Bank of California, a man of great coolness and presence of mind, was of this party. One night the storm suddenly culminated in a climax of unparalleled fury; the vessel went down on her beam ends, and everything let go with a crash; passengers, tables, cards, bottles—everything—came clattering to the floor in a chaos of disorder and confusion. In a moment fifty sore distressed and pleading voices ejaculated, "Oh, Heaven help us in our extremity!" and one voice rang out clear and sharp above the plaintive chorus and said, "Remember, boys, I played the tray for low!" It was one of the gentlemen I have mentioned who spoke. And the remark showed good presence of mind and an eye to business.

"Lewis Leland, of the Occidental, was a passenger. There were some savage grizzly bears chained in cages on deck. One night in the midst of a hurricane, which was accompanied by rain and thunder and lightning, Mr. Leland came up, on his way to bed. Just as he stepped into the pitchy darkness of the deck and reeled to the still more pitchy motion of the vessel (bad,) the captain sung out hoarsely through his speaking trumpet, "Bear a hand aft, there!" The words were sadly marred and jumbled by the roaring wind. Mr. Leland thought the captain said, "The bears are after you there!" and he "let go all holts" and went down into his boots. He murmured, "I knew how it was going to be—I just knew it from the start—I said all along that those bears would get loose some time, and now I'll be the first man that they'll snatch. Captain!—Captain!—can't hear me—storm roars so. Oh, God, what a fate! I have avoided wild beasts all my life, and now to be eaten by a grizzly bear in the middle of the ocean, a thousand miles from land! Captain! Oh, Captain!—bless my soul, there's one of them!—I've got to cut and run!" And he did cut and run, and smashed through the door of the first stateroom he came to. A gentleman and his wife were in it. The gentleman exclaimed, "Who's that?" The refugee gasped out, "Oh, great Scotland, those bears are loose, and just raising merry hell all over the ship!" and then sank down exhausted. The gentleman sprang out of bed and locked the door, and prepared for a siege. After a while, no assault being made, a reconnoissance was made from the window and a vivid flash of lightning revealed a clear deck. Mr. Leland then made a dart for his own stateroom, gained it, locked himself in, and felt that his body's salvation was accomplished, and by little less than a miracle. Now I have told this story as I heard it from a passenger, who said he would vouch for every part of it except the language, which is stronger than Mr. Leland ever indulged in. The next day the subject of this memoir, though still very feeble and nervous, had the hardihood to make a joke upon his adventure. He said that when he found himself in so tight a place (as he thought) he didn't bear it with much fortitude, and when he found himself safe at last in his stateroom, he regarded it as the nearest escape he had ever had in his life. He then went to bed and did not get up again for nine days. This unquestionably bad joke cast a gloom over the whole ship's company, and no effort was sufficient to restore their wonted cheerfulness until the vessel reached her port and other scenes erased it from their memories.

New Music.—We have received from M. Gray, 613 Clay street, "Sing Birdie, Sing," "La Poderosa," a beautiful Spanish air, and "Oh Take Me to Thy Heart Again," being Nos. 14, 15, and 16 of his series of "Vocal Beauties of England and America," now in course of publication.

The largest ice bridge for many years has been formed above Niagara Falls this season; it extends three miles down the rapids, and people cross from both sides.

Owing to the recent decease of Mrs. Secretary Seward, there will be no fashionable receptions given by the Secretary of State this season.

If a police officer is after you, the best thing you can do is to lock the door, and then bolt yourself.

[For the Californian.]

HUMAN NATURE IN SHIPS' NAMES.

WERE a tourist from one of the planets to visit San Francisco, we could assure him of receiving a lesson in human nature from no one thing sooner than the ships' names in our harbor. We would take him by the arm, if he had one, and lead him on a short excursion along the water-side from North Beach to South Park, and if he did not know something about us foreigners of Earth after that we should pronounce him impervious to ideas. Here, my dear Celestial, (we hear ourselves saying.) you behold in the first place a large number of craft which bear the names of men. Here is the "Jno. Smith;" and there is the "Jno. Doe," and yonder is the "Richard Roe." These names point directly to a certain principle which we call ambition, or love of fame,—a decided weakness in many of us who dwell upon this planet. How complete a proof of the existence of such a weakness is the naming of these vessels. Have these names been given by the men themselves? Surely if it were not pleasure to a man to hear his name repeated, he would not insure such a repetition by putting it upon a ship of the sea. Have they been given by others? As surely no man can be conceived of as giving another's name to a ship except by way of compliment to that other. The case, then, is a plain one. But let us pass on. Yet not so quick; but notice how many of these finest craft are marked with the names of cities and states and countries. Yes, you are correct—you are as quick in your mind as in your body. These names do indeed prove the existence of a sentiment called patriotism here on this planet. That sentiment is constantly manifesting itself by far prouder demonstrations than such as these before you. Once we had a hero in this country by the name of Stephen Decatur. He expressed this noble sentiment of patriotism in the words, "Our country, may she always be right,—but—right or wrong—our country!" And that hero's brother under the same noble emotion, went forth and perished before Algiers. And that hero's father gave expression to the same sentiment, when the death of his son was referred to, in the sublime words, "Our children are the property of their country." These are indeed far nobler outgivings of the passion of love for country than the naming of ships can be. But still it is the same noble affection, after all, which is expressed in each of these cases. Light is light, whether coming from the sun in full blaze, or from Mercury in a feeble and hastening flicker. But I see that your eyes are fixed upon another class of names—very natural for you to notice. Your eyes roam fondly over such pleasing names as "Jeannette," "Fanny," "Maria," "Carolina," and "Elise." Chivalry? Yes; we regard these names as a true offspring of the sentiment of chivalry,—devotion to the finer, feebler sex. That sentiment belongs here on this sphere of the universe to the lands called Christian. And in those lands it is the consequence of a great religious fact. God himself honored the woman Mary, and after her all women have been honored by the believers in that God. Beauty of the names? Yes, sir, I concede that these names are some of them beautiful in themselves, and many have been chosen partly on that account. In such cases, we may say that the choice of the name was the expression of a mixed feeling of chivalry and love of harmony. But read yonder name—"Lizzie Boggs!" That name surely is an outgrowth of the sentiment of devotion to woman. But let us attend to our proper business, and not stop to look at that file of soldiers, or listen to that ear-piercing fife. Let us see if we cannot find something among those ships' names suited to a more martial taste. Yes. Observe those names, "Carib," "Kaffir Chief," and "David Crockett." Do they not strike a chord in your bosom? I feel they do. You like vigor, strength, power, when you see it associated with goodness. But, then, you love it so well that you cannot help feeling a little leaning towards it, even when you find it in connection with a doubtful character. You are like a certain man of this sphere—Samuel Johnson by name. He once said: "I love a hearty hater." Now, this man did not love the hating; no, not he, for he was a Christian. But he loved the heartiness, the vigor, the strength, displayed by such a hater. Those names, then, touch your heart from the tinge of vigor and power there is about them. Whatever faults the Caribs may have, or the chief of Caffraria, we do not associate weakness or pusillanimity with them in any instance. These names, then, are the offspring of a certain feeling in men's hearts which we may call love of vigor, or dislike of feebleness. But what perplexes you, my dear Celestial? Those names of "Cutwater" and "Winged Racer?" Cannot trace them to their proper sentiment? cannot tell what sentiment of man they indicate? Let me venture a guess. I think those names are traceable to the principle of cupidity, or love of gain. Those names are bids for cargoes. A man who gives his vessel a name indicating strength or swiftness, does thereby say to the world, "You will do well to patronize my ship, for it is very swift and very stout." Do you accept my interpretation? Are in doubt? Well, let the subject drop, and we will both think of those names no more. Meanwhile, three other sentiments of the human heart are betrayed by the names which remain. Taste, the literary spirit, and religion—these three are expressed in such names as "Lotus," "Avon," and "St. Ann." If man had not an eye for the trait called beauty, he never would have had his attention specially called to the lotus, or discovered such a resemblance between that flower and a vessel, as to give the latter the name of the former. And "Avon!"—whom does that recall but Shakspeare, and to what does Shakspeare owe his name but to his successful catering to the literary spirit of men—their power of receiving pleasure from pure ideas of the mind. Let us close with the name "St. Ann." Whence that name? I see you know. The religious sentiment is indeed common to all planets and all nations. God made your star as well as ours. And he has left his witness of himself in your breasts as well as ours. We may differ in many other respects. Your people may have passions to which we are strangers, and ours to which yours are. But we all possess the sense of a God, and of an eternal state in which there are happiness and saints.

C. R. C.

(For the Californian.)

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

FLOWER GARDENS.

"He who would see his flowers disposed Sightly and in just order, ere he gives
The beds the trusted treasure of their seeds,
Forecasts the future whole; that when the scene
Shall break into its preconceived display,
Each for itself, and all as with one voice
Conspiring, may attest his bright design."

NOW, there are many genuine lovers of flowers who have attempted to make flower gardens—in the simplicity of their hearts believing it to be the easiest thing in the world to arrange so many beautiful annuals and perennials in "a living knot of wonder"—who have quite failed in realizing all that they conceived of and fully expected when they first set about it.

The two leading faults in all our flower gardens are the want of proper selection in the plants themselves, and a faulty arrangement of them. A flower garden deserving the name should, if possible, be as rich as a piece of embroidery. In a botanical garden, or the collection of a curious amateur, one expects to see variety of species—plants of all known forms, at the expense of everything else. But in a flower garden, properly so called, the whole object of which is to afford a continual display of beautiful colors and delicious oders, we conceive that everything should be rejected (or only most sparingly introduced) which does not combine almost perpetual blooming with neat and agreeable habit of growth.

The passion for novelty and variety among the lovers of flowers is as great as among any other enthusiasts. But, as some of the greatest of the old painters are said to owe the success of their masterpieces to the few colors they employed, so we are confident that the most beautiful flower gardens are those where but few kinds are introduced, and those only such as possess the important qualities to which we have alluded.

We would add to the effect of our selection of perpetually-blooming plants by abandoning altogether the old method of intermingling species and varieties of all colors and habits of growth, and substituting for it the opposite mode of grouping or massing colors and particular species of plants. Masses of crimson and white, of yellow and purple, and the other colors and shades, brought boldly into contrast, or disposed so as to form an agreeable harmony, will attract the eye and make a much more forcible and delightful impression than can ever be produced by a compound mixture of shades and colors, nowhere distinct enough to give any decided effect to the whole. The effect of thus collecting masses of colors in a flower garden in this way is to give it what the painters call "breadth of effect," which in the other mode is entirely frittered away and destroyed.

For carrying out this style of planting for effect the variety of plants is very numerous, and there is no one but may gratify his taste. The common flowers, and often the very weeds of the country, are beautiful in color, and are not to be despised because they are common; and they have the advantage of being hardy and acclimated.

Those who have not seen the effect produced by a proper contrast of even the most common flowers can form no idea of the beauty they present. Such a contrast is seen at the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, and the Ornamental Grounds of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham. There the beds are formed in the shape of stars, crosses, diamonds, squares, and circles; in many of them, there are only two kinds of plants used, and the effect is beautiful beyond description. Some of the plants most suitable for this style of bedding are the verbenas of the various shades and colors. Sweet alyssum, blue lobelia, miguonette, petunias, geraniums of the various kinds, roses, fuchsias, pelargoniums, tropœoluus, ivy geraniums, the ivy, portulaecas, heliotrope, and many of the variegated-foliage plants arranged with the flowering plants, form one of the most attractive features of the garden.

Why is it that we see so little taste displayed in such matters by our wealthy citizens, who endeavor to fill their rooms with objects of taste and beauty, while in their grounds and gardens there is so little evidence of it? Will not some one take the lead either in his own place or some of the public squares of the city? There is not a cottage garden or railway station in England but shows more real taste in arrangement and display than any gentleman's grounds here.

With such a climate, capable of growing even many of the tropical plants, how is it there are so few—if any—really fine gardens.

Even the florists and nurserymen exhibit but little if any taste in the arrangement of their places. If the ladies will only make use of their good taste and judgment in regard to the garden, how soon a different appearance will be presented in our city and suburbs. It is for the want of consideration on their part that such discreditable-looking places are now seen. Now is the time to think of the garden and the pleasures of it.

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

Feb. 25th. St. Walburg, Peach, (Amygdalus Persica.)
Feb. 26th. St. Victor, Lesser Periwinkle, (Vinca Minor.)
Feb. 27th. St. Leander, Lungwort, (Pulmonaria Officinalis.)
Feb. 28th. St. Proterius, Purple crocus, (Crocus Vernus.)
March 1st. St. David, Leek, (Album Porrum.)
March 2d. St. Chad, Dwarf Cerastium, (Cerastium pumilum.)
March 3d. St. Cuneguudes, Golden fig Marygold, (Mesembrianthemum Aureum.)

IRIS.

AMUSEMENTS.

MISS EMILY THORNE appeared at Maguire's Opera House on Saturday evening last, as "Hester Grazebrook" in The Unequal Match. A very good audience was in attendance. Courtaine's "Dr. Botcherby," and Mrs. Saunders' "Bessie Hobblethwait" were very good, indeed. On Monday Masks and Faces was produced. Miss Thorne, as "Peg Woffington," was excellent; and Miss Goodrich, as "Mrs. Vane," and Courtaine as "Triplet," won well deserved applause. Tuesday, Our Home Treasure and The Widows' Stratagem were produced; Wednesday, Court and Stage—Miss Thorne as "Nell Gwynne;" Thursday, The Unequal Match again; Friday, the occasion being Miss Thorne's farewell benefit, A Lesson of Love and The Swiss Cottage. This afternoon, Courtaine's noblest work—The Honest Man—will be played, a repetition of Friday's bill constituting the evening performance.

At the Metropolitan, on Saturday evening last, The Mormons, or Female Life at Salt Lake, was produced. The male parts of the play are melodramatic, the female ones very chatty—Mrs. Judah leading off in the principal character as "Chatterina Noggs." Miss Chapman followed as "Bridget Noggs," and then came a score of feminine "Noggses" of various nationalities. We have seen better plays. Monday we had The Elves and The Mormons; Tuesday The Elves without The Mormons; Wednesday The Bronze Horse was again brought out and mounted, and Thursday The Naiad Queen was enthroned. This latter piece was put upon the stage with all the gorgeousness of scenery and lavish disregard of expense which characterizes Mr. Tibbetts' management. The Buislays interspersed the piece with their wonderful feats, and all went off charmingly well. This afternoon and evening The Naiad Queen will be repeated. There is a rumor that The Bronze Horse will go galloping up to Sacramento some time during the coming week. Theatrical business at the Capital is not very lively just now, but for the sake of Sacramento we are perfectly content that Mr. Tibbetts should try the experiment.

FRESH AIR.—The New York Lancet, a weekly journa just started, remarks that every house should be thoroughly ventilated the first thing every morning, so as to allow the atmosphere of the previous night to escape. This can be done by first airing one part and then another. By doing this a house also can be more easily warmed. When there are many persons collected in a room, care should be observed to keep a few inches of the window open from the top, every one avoiding sitting close to or under it, as, after a time, when there are many collected together, the atmosphere of the room becomes impregnated with their exhalations, and the air is thus rendered impure. By perfect ventilation there is a uniform amount of oxygen, which is the vital part of the atmosphere, and which is necessary to our very existence, maintained. Who has not noticed the disagreeable feeling produced on going from the fresh air into a room with many persons, in which the ventilation is imperfect? At night, also, fresh air should be admitted into the room, for it is, if anything, more necessary that there should then be a plentiful supply of oxygen. We have been asked the ridiculous question, if enough air did not come in through the key-hole. Certainly not. That is not fresh air. Make it a rule always to sleep with part of your window open from the top, avoiding its blowing on you. Fresh air never hurt any one, for by it we live. It is the want of it that injures. Persons seem to forget that they spend one-third of their lives in their bedrooms. We frequently see a man building a house, bestowing all his attention on the plan of the parlors, while the bedrooms are, to a great extent, and in some instances entirely, neglected. It had better be vice versa.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note exceept bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50

Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband: Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed thereto, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By JAMES C. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. B. S. BROOKS,
de23-3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN COUCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.

San Francisco, January 30, 1866. L. N. THORNE, fe10 5t Att'y for Administrator.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,

AND

Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE

TO THE

CLIFF HOUSE

TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-t

---

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy

IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only by
SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fe17-3m San Fraacisco, Cal.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by
N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m Sau Francisco

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome street, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

We will continue to manufacture
THE BEST WORK THAT CAN BE MADE,
and solicit the continued patronage of our California friends, which branch of trade
WILL BE MADE A SPECIALITY.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Browster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,
NEW YORK.

PATENT APPLIED FOR.

HUNT'S
California Street Pavement.

THIS PAVEMENT IS A NEW AND NOVEL IDEA, being a combination of Redwood, Asphaltum and Gravel. The Pavement consists of Redwood blocks, six inches in diameter, turned round from the top, half way down; these blocks are laid upon either a board or gravel surface, the blocks laid so as to break joints; the openings around the blocks are then filled in with a composition af asphaltum and gravel, and the whole surface of the pavement covered with a coat of the same composition, thus making a complete asphaltum roadway. The asphaltum, confined by the redwood blocks in this manner, cannot crack, and as every one knows, will last for a long period. The redwood, being firmly secured by the asphaltum, cannot split, and the inventor claims that the redwood and asphaltum, so combined, will make a pavement that for evenness, cleanliness, durability and noiseless ness, has not yet been equalled.

A sample of this pavement has been prepared and can be seen by those interested, in front of the Windmill and Horsepower Manufactory of E. O. HUNT, de2 28 Second street, San Francisco.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24 3m

---

HAMLIN & CROSS.

GEO. HAMLIN.....F. L. CROSS.

DEALERS IN CHEAP PUBLICATIONS,

STATIONERY, BLANK BOOKS,

MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS,

611 Montgomery street, corner of Merchant.
fe24-tf

FOR GENUINE
Scotch Ginghams,
AND
CHOICE DRESS GOODS,
GO TO
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja13 tf

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.
W. HOLT,
dec9 3m 305 Montgomery street.

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church,)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.
Private Lessons at the Instituto or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30-3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House, 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., fe6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

fe25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults... fants.....	25 25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$	1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!
Secret of Beauty!
USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S
BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD,
is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
Wine of Pepsine,
OR,
RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.

For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
GLUCOLEIN,
A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF
COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.

Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.

Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.

Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by
WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms No 26 Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES!

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

FAUST CELLAR,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24-3m

---

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

A NEW BIOGRAPHY OF WASHINGTON.

BY MARK TWAIN.

THIS day, many years ago precisely, George Washington was born. How full of significance the thought! Especially to those among us who have had a similar experience, though subsequently; and still more especially to the young, who should take him for a model and faithfully try to be like him, undeterred by the frequency with which the same thing has been attempted by American youths before them and not satisfactorily accomplished. George Washington was the youngest of nine children, eight of whom were the offspring of his uncle and his aunt. As a boy he gave no promise of the greatness he was one day to achieve. He was ignorant of the commonest accomplishments of youth. He could not even lie. But then he never had any of those precious advantages which are within the reach of the humblest of the boys of the present day. Any boy can lie, now. I could lie before I could stand—yet this sort of sprightliness was so common in our family that little notice was taken of it. Young George appears to have had no sagacity whatever. It is related of him that he once chopped down his father's favorite cherry tree, and then didn't know enough to keep dark about it. He came near going to sea, once, as a midshipman; but when his mother represented to him that he must necessarily be absent when he was away from home, and that this must continue to be the case until he got back, the sad truth struck him so forcibly that he ordered his trunk ashore, and quietly but firmly refused to serve in the navy and fight the battles of his king so long as the effect of it would be to discommode his mother. The great rule of his life was, that procrastination was the thief of time, and that we should always do unto others. This is the golden rule. Therefore, he would never discommode his mother.

Young George Washington was actuated in all things, by the highest and purest principles of morality, justice and right. He was a model in every way worthy of the emulation of youth. Young George was always prompt and faithful in the discharge of every duty. It has been said of him, by the historian, that he was always on hand, like a thousand of bricks. And well deserved was this noble compliment. The aggregate of the building material specified might have been largely increased—might have been doubled—even without doing full justice to these high qualities in the subject of this sketch. Indeed, it would hardly be possible to express in bricks the exceeding promptness and fidelity of young George Washington. His was a soul whose manifold excellencies were beyond the ken and computation of mathematics, and bricks are, at the least, but an inadequate vehicle for the conveyance of a comprehension of the moral sublimity of a nature so pure as his.

Young George W. was a surveyor in early life—a surveyor of an inland port—a sort of country surveyor; and under a commission from Gov. Dinwiddie, he set out to survey his way four hundred miles through a trackless forest, infested with Indians, to procure the liberation of some English prisoners. The historian says the Indians were the most depraved of their species, and did nothing but lay for white men, whom they killed for the sake of robbing them. Considering that white men only travelled through their country at the rate of one a year, they were probably unable to do what might be termed a land-office business in their line. They did not rob young G. W.; one savage made the attempt, but failed; he fired at the subject of this sketch from behind a tree, but the subject of this sketch immediately snaked him out from behind the tree and took him prisoner.

The long journey failed of success; the French would not give up the prisoners, and Wash went sadly back home again. A regiment was raised to go and make a rescue, and he took command of it. He caught the French out in the rain and tackled them with great intrepidity. He defeated them in ten minutes, and their commander handed in his checks. This was the battle of Great Meadows.

After this, a good while, George Washington became Commander-in-Chief of the American armies, and had an exceedingly dusty time of it all through the Revolution. But every now and then he turned a jack from the bottom and surprised the enemy. He kept up his lick for seven long years, and hazed the British from Harrisburg to Halifax—and America was free! He served two terms as President, and would have been President yet if he had lived—even so did the people honor the Father of his Country. Let the youth of America take his incomparable character for a model and try it one jolt, anyhow. Success is possible—let them remember that—success is possible, though there are chances against it.

I could continue this biography, with profit to the rising generation, but I shall have to drop the subject at present, because of other matters which must be attended to.—Territorial Enterprise.

At the time of the recent explosion of a "Pharoah Serpent" manufactory in London, two customers were entering the room. One was blown out of the window, and the other was found dead in the house. Rather a warm reception.

A WORD FOR CATS.

THE Egyptians adored the cat as a divinity, and the Swiss have chosen it as the symbol of liberty. History rarely condescends to mention it, and poets in general ignore it, for, however valuable its qualities, the cat is not poetical. Yet Goldsmith has given it a place in his exquisite "Hermit:"

Around in sympathetic mirth
Its tricks the kitten tries;
The cricket chirrups in the hearth;
The crackling faggot flies.

It is a common thing enough to call men "dogs," but Volumnia in "Coriolanus" calls them "cats." In speaking of her son, he says:

'Twas you incensed the rabble:
Cats! that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

As to the "brindled cat" that mewed thrice before the three witches in Macbeth entered the cave, we can only applaud Shakspeare's good taste in giving her the precedence in that grand scene.

Many persons take pleasure in calumniating this excellent member of society, and we shall have something presently to say in its defence. For nearly a thousand years Western Christendom scarcely knew the blessing of cats; and how the rats and mice were kept down when no four-footed policeman patrolled the kitchen, is more than we can guess. In the tenth and eleventh centuries very high prices were given for good mousers. They were of Nubian origin, and descended from those domestic cats which the Egyptians certainly possessed, which exist to our own day in the form of mummies, and are represented on many of the monuments of Thebes. No one knows how they found their way into Europe, but there is reason to believe that the Romans imported them from the banks of the Nile in small numbers and at rare intervals. Our ancestors had so high a sense of the usefulness of this animal, that Howel Dha, or Howel the Good, inserted among his laws one expressly concerning it. The price of a kittling before it could see was to be a penny, and when it had killed a mouse, two pence. If its hearing or seeing was imperfect, if it had not whole claws, did not go on killing mice, or proved a bad mother, the seller was to forfeit to the buyer a third part of its value. If any one stole or killed the cat that guarded the prince's granary, the fine he had to pay was a milch ewe, with her lamb and fleece, or as much wheat as would cover the cat when held up by the tail with its head touching the floor. No reduction was to be made. The very tip of pussy's tail must be covered with the culprit's wheat. Thus the price given for cats was high, considering the value of specie at that period; and the fact of laws being made to protect the breed of an animal which multiplies so fast, shows that in the middle ages it must have been scarce in Wales.

There is no creature which relapses more easily from the domestic to the wild state than the cat. Neglect at home and the taste of wild and living food abroad often tempt it to forsake the inhospitable hearth, and, like a brigand, take to the woods. It prowls about, crouching under cover, and carefully concealing itself from public view. It breeds among thickets, makes raids upon young rabbits, and becomes one of the race of wild cats. There is as much difference between the animal in its wild and domestic state as between a cannibal in his native haunts and a civilized man surrounded with luxury and refinement. The red-furred wild cats, which are hunted through the marshes and forests, are ferocious as tigers, and of a huge size. The Indians will tell you that they live on the breath of slanderers; and when a quarrel arises in a tribe, they say, "So-and-so is breeding wild cats in his wigwam."

The cat is often charged with taking cruel delight in the sufferings of its prey. But before this charge can be established, it is needful to prove that it is conscious of its victim's pain. If not, there is no cruelty in the case. The faculty of speech was never given to an animal but once, and then it rebuked the hand that smote it thrice with a staff. It is difficult, no doubt, to say what end is answered by the prolonged agonies and terror of the mouse before it receives the coup de grace, but the cat meanwhile is only following its instinct, which is at once playful and destructive. If she had a bird between her claws instead of a small quadruped, she would bite off its head or wound it mortally at once, as if sensible of its chance of escape. Whatever detractors may say, she is capable of forming a strong attachment to those who treat her kindly. "Le chat s'attache à la maison, et le chieu á son maitre," is simply a libel; nor will we accept the compliment to the dog when it is offered at the expense of the cat. All who observe this animal's habits closely will discover in it proofs of affection. You may often see a kitten which will run to the call of one person, and one only. See how it leaps over the cabbages in the garden, makes its way among the peas, climbs up the favorite's dress, and fixes itself on the back of her neck! Here is another of the same tribe. Years ago its mistress left it with a friend, but when she returns, after ever so long an interval, she is recognized and welcomed. As soon as she is seated, it creeps round and round her, and jumps into her lap—a familiarity with which it honors no one else in the world. Did you never see a cat among the mourners when the master is dead? It is always searching about for him. The dead man's brother takes it with him on one of his circuits, and does everything he can to console it. But all in vain—the cat pines away, and literally frets itself to death. We have seen it ourselves, and this instance is only one amongst many.

As puss is not poetical, so also she is anything but musical. Mewing and caterwauling are as unlike harmony as a bagpipe, a zampogna, or that vilest of all inventions of Jubal, the eat-call, which the Spectator so humorously criticized in the days of Queen Ann. Yet we ought not to forget that to the cat we owe in part the most perfect of all instruments and the most exquisite music. Without her aid the violin-maker would be at a loss to find his strings, and Paganini would never have elicited such sweet and elaborate variations from a single chord.

SECRET OF MAGIC.—Robert Houdin concludes his memoirs with a chapter of Arab miracles, which he explains. The Aissaona eat pounded glass. Houdin powdered some for himself and ate it, and he avers that his appetite for dinner was improved by the same. They walk on red-hot iron with bare feet, and pass their tongues over white-hot plates of iron. Prof. Sementrici discovered that by rubbing into the skin a solution of alum evaporated to a spongy state, it was rendered insensible to the action of red-hot iron. He rubbed himself with soap, and found that even the hair did not burn. He rubbed the alum into his tongue, and lapped the glowing metallic surface without pain. Houdin then tried passing his hands, slightly dampened, through a stream of melted iron, and found, as others have done, that it left no scar on him. An English conjurer used to thrust a sword through his body, shove a knife up either nostril to the handle, and, thus spitted, sing a song. Houdin bought the secret of the invulnerable, and now divulges it. The performer was very thin. With a waist-belt he strapped his tender paunch down upon the vertebral colum, substituted a card-board stomach for the compressed part, covered all with flesh-colored tights; between the true and false abdomen he fastened a scabbard, covered the apertures on the sides with rosettes, placed a sponge filled with red liquid in the scabbard, and then thrust in his sword, which came out filled with bogus blood, of course. The pug-nosed mountebank enjoyed a physical conformation which permitted the delicate and frightful performance.

"THEN BLOW IT!"—A jolly party had gathered at an inn, the evening succeeding the hanging of a notorious highwayman, and growing hilarious over their cups, a challenge was given for any one in the room to go to the gallows and offer to the suspended corpse a mug of Flip. One man more courageous than his fellows, declared his willingness to do so, and having prepared the beverage started out over the desolate country in the darkness to accomplish it. His bold and fearless disposition being so well understood, it was nothing strange to his companions that he should be willing to do it, all knowing that there really was no danger in such a proceeding, but only the superstitious awe any one naturally feels upon going into the presence of death, and especially upon so sacrilegious an errand, it was immediately proposed that another of the party by a different and shorter route should reach the spot in advance, and if the thing was possible frighten him, which thought being acted upon, and the gallows reached, the party of the second part placed himself behind the corpse, and as the fellow approached lifting the cup with the salutation, "Have some Flip, old fellow?" The answer unexpectedly came in a low, sepulchral tone: "It's hot." "Then blow it, d—n you!" was the reply, and the fearless hero turned slowly upon his heel and walked away followed by the friend, who was quite willing to testify that the affair was a success.

BRIGHAM YOUNG is reported to have 185 wives, Silas Reeder 129, Jeremiah Stern 111, Job Billisen 96, Julius Hoffman 92, Habazue Croatzy 81, and Gideon Ruffian 84. Brigham's oldest wife is not over 49, and his youngest not above 14, while he is the survivor of no fewer than 28 spouses. What must be "Young's Night Thoughts!"

LITERATURE lost, last year, by death, Judge Haliburton, Professor Aytoun, Cardinal Wiseman, Leitch Ritchie, Sir Lascelles Wraxell, Wingrave Cooke, James Lowe, Dudley Costello, Mrs. Gaskell, Samuel Lucas, George Arnold, Mrs. Sigourney, and Mrs. Alice B. Haven.

LADIES will doubtless profit by the inducements held out to them in our advertising columns by Meagher, Taaffe & Co., and call and examine their new styles of spring dress goods, which will be opened for inspection on Monday next.

SEE advertisement of John Middleton & Son's Homestead Sale, in to-day's paper. The property is located within fifty yards of the Market street Railroad, and will be sold on easy terms. Title, United States Patent.

EXCITES UNIVERSAL ADMIRATION—The delicacy, fragrance, and perfection of Davidson's Circassian Bloom, for the complexion and skin. Every lady should use it. Sold by all druggists.

On the "Qui Vive."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

Concord Wagons and Harness.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

Dainty Work.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mend House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veeder,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babbittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use. J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Babbitonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.

The following card will explain itself without comment:

San Francisco, Jan. 19, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been for seven years afflicted with rheumatism, and during that time I suffered more than generally falls to the lot of any human being in a life time. My ankles at times would measure six inches in diameter; my fingers were drawn into the palms of my hands; pains the most excruciating in my extremities, my hips and back, until I almost wished for death to relieve me of my sufferings. I tried every known remedy, and spent many hundred dollars without obtaining any relief. I have been swindled so many times by miserable Quacks, that I was afraid to try your remedy. Fortunately while reading one of your bills, a friend of mine told me that he had been cured by you. I concluded to try once more, though I had little confidence in it, because my case was of so many years standing; but judge of my surprise, when, after using it two days all my pain left me, and the swelling in my ankles decreased, and I am now, after using your remedy ten days, well and able to leave for my home. God bless you, Doctor. You will be considered a benefactor. Gratefully yours, fe3 Asa Willet, Drytown, Amador county.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

f Battery and Commercial streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Sturke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Adolph Levy, 19 Second street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.

Marcus Pezold, 46 Second street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.

Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner Bush.
Mrs. Noreross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.

Wm. Brown & Co, 16 Third street.

FURNITURE.

N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pierce, 415, 417 and 419 California street
J. A. Shaber, removed to 707 Market, above Third.

GROCERS.

Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
W. H. Pillner & Hunter, Gallery 14 Second street.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Kretschman, Third and Mission.
Donahue & Phelan, 31 Second street.
Ohio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

Astrology.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of ustrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

Wanted—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. Shear, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California.

NEW BOOKS
JUST RECEIVED AT
A. ROMAN & CO.'S.

Across the Continent: A Summer's Journey to the Rocky Mountains, the Mormons, and the Pacific States, with Speaker Colfax: By Samuel Bowles, Editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
Winnifred Bertram, and the World She Lived In. By the author of "The Schonberg-Cotta Family."
Personal Reminiscences of the Life and Times of Rev Gardner Spring, D. D., with Portrait.
The Pilgrim's Wallet; or Scraps of Travel gathered in England, France and Germany. By Gilbert Haven.
A Spiuster's Story. By M. A. F.
Tales, Romances and Extravaganzas. By Thomas Hood.
A Summer in Skye. By Alexander Smith.
Winning his Way. By "Carleton"
The Letters of Mozart. Translated by Lady Wallace.
The Freedman's Book. By L. Maria Child.
A Biography of Richard Cobden: By John McGilchrist.
Herman: or Young Knighthood. By E. Foxton.
Later Lyrics. By Julia Ward Howe.
Country Love vs. City Flirtation; or Ten Chapters from the Story of a Life. Reduced to Rhyme, for Convenience Sake, by H. T. Sperry.
Fighting Joe; or, The Fortunes of a Staff Officer. By Oliver Optic.
The Privateersman. By Captain Marryat, R. N.
The Dutch Pilgrim Fathers. By Edward Hopper.
DeVane; a Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.
Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. By J. G. Holland.
The Prince of Kashna; a West Indian Story. By Richard H Kimball.

COMPLETE SETS OF
Bohn's Celebrated Libraries.

We have on hand the largest stock of Standard, Miscellaneous
AND
LIBRARY BOOKS
TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
fe2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms Montgomery street, opposite Lick House. fe3-2m

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP Establishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

de30 3m San Francisco.

HUNT'S PATENT

Circular Sweep Horse-Powers,

For running Churns, Washing Machines, Grindstones, pumping water, sawing wood, and other light machinery Price $100, at the Factory.

HUNT'S PATENT SELF-REGULATING TREAD HORSE-POWER

Is superior to any machine of the kind in the market. Price, with Governor, all complete to set at work, at the Factory, $300. Manufactured by

E. O. HUNT,

ja29-3m 28 Second street, San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,

COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

de29 3m

ADAMS'

BLOOD PURIFIER!

FOR DISEASES HAVING THEIR ORIGIN FROM THE IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD AND DERANGEMENT OF THE SYSTEM.

This Blood Purifier is a concentrated compound of Sarsaparilla, Yellow Dock, Wild Cherry, Dandelion, with Iodide of Potass, and several other of the most efficacious remedies known in the vegetable world, and will exert an immediate effect on the system, and if persisted in for a reasonable length of time, will eradicate all latent poison from the blood.

IT CONTAINS NO MERCURY OR MINERAL POISON.

Prepared only by

SAMUEL ADAMS,

AT THE UNITED STATES DRUG STORE, SAN FRANCISCO

Corner of Bush and Powell streets

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS IN THE STATE.

no18-3m

DR. C. W. MOORE'S

Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - . . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES, WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the URINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female-nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

dc16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)

SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

---

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Bahhitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,

de9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S STEAM PRINTING HOUSE, 533 CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NEW PIANOS FOR SALE AND TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

fe20-1m

MR. AND MRS. CCGILL AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL.—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

---

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

de23-3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

fe2 SAN FRANCISCO,

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

J. PEIRCE,

Furniture and Bedding

WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,

751 MARKET STREET,

(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle-aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other Important and Interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President

fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,

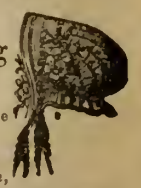
Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

MRS. WHEELER'S NEW MILLINERY AND Children's Clothing STORE,



Formerly 32 Second street, sign of the "Golden Bandbox," removed to

Popper's New Building,
Third street, near Mission,

OPENS WITH A SPLENDID AND FRESH ASSORTMENT of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Trimmings, etc. Also, Children's Clothing of the latest and most fashionable styles, and of every variety and price. Fresh assortment of FRENCH FLOWERS, just received. ja27-1m

---

JUST DIE!

OR DIGEST!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE! If you cease to digest for a certain time you must do the other thing. If your digestive organs are in good order, you can enjoy the coarsest fare, and thrive upon it. If the digestion is impaired, nothing nourishes; even a Cannibal Chief would growl after dining upon the best Missionary that ever was cooked. USE THE "EXCELLENT."

For sale in glass only, by

ja27-1m BARRY & PATTEN

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 2d of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30 3m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registratiou fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ouuces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportiou for a greater number.

Seeds, cuttiugs, roots, etc., 2 ccnts for each 4 omces or less quautity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over ½ pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged ou delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers withiu the county where priuted and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North Americau Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 ceuts. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayuent optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

Tho only Fair on the Pacific coast at which auy two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

fe10-3m

HUNT'S IMPROVED WIND-MILL.

THIS WIND-MILL IS RAPidly takiug the place of all other Mills on the Pacific Coast. These Mills are so simple in their constructiou that, when once huilt, they can be put in order hy almost auy person; and when once in order they will run for years without repairs.

Prices, from $50 to $1,000.

ROUND AND SQUARE WATER TANKS BUILT TO ORDER.

HUNT'S PUMPS

Are admitted to be the best in the Market for Wind-Mills, being built expressly for that purpose. They can he set and taken apart with a common wrench, and are easily repaired.

HUNT'S ENDLESS CHAIN

HORSE-POWER

FOR SAWING WOOD.

Also, the

SELF-REGULATING HORSE-POWER

Is so arranged as to give a steady motion, and is calculated to be used for turning Wood, Iron or Brass, also for Scroll or Circular Sawing, and is fully equally to Steam for any light Work. The above Machines are built of the best materials, and made as durahle as Wood and Iron will make them.

ALL WORK WARRANTED.

☞ For further Particulars see small circulars. ☜

E. O. HUNT,

No. 28 Scoond street, and 108 and 112 Jessie street,

ja29-3m San Francisco

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 Sacramento street, Corner of Webb,

Sol agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether hy travelling or otherwise.

Tuis Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused hy an accideut of any desciption; tbe other securing a weekly allowance in caso of injury causing total disahlement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as ahove.

Annual Premium on $2,500	$7 50
Annual Premium ou 5,000	15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000	30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation	12 50
Annual Premium ou $5,000 with $25 per week compensation	25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation	50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Includo the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Boues, Spraius, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosious, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Cnoking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within threo months of the happeuing of the injury, or of total disahility to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

☞ The rates of premiums are very low.

Tho plau is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have heen rejected hy Life Companies, in consequeucc of hereditary or otber diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtuin Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)

ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c. Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days	$1
Eight Days	2
Twelve Days	3
Tweuty Days
Thirty Days	5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disahility by reason of accideut, hy the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, Agents,

NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,

de16-3m San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at he last scssion of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,

MERCHANDISE,

FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,

No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THIS AGENCY

Euahles Country Resideuts to mako purchases in theC without troubling busy friends, or mere acquaintances.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothiug, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sportiug Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, largo or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmero; lace or leatner,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CET.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,

40 Broadway, N. Y

THE

MUTUAL

Life Insurance Company

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED 1842.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

AN EXAMPLE OF THE

DIVIDENDS OF 1866.

POLICY NO. 33,321,

FOR

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!

Issued in San Francisco, August 22, 1864.

The amount Premium paid thereon in one year was $304 40.

The Amount of Dividend for one year to August 22, 1865, was $539 62,

Being $235 22 More than am't Premium paid,

Makiug the amount of Policy on August 22, 1865,

$10,539 62!

If the Dividend is used in payment of Premium, instead of being added to the Policy, the next payment required will be

Only $88 22,

instead of $304 40.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF

Policies Issued in 1864.

Amount Policy.	Premiums paid One Year.	Dividends One Year.
$10,000	$220 80	$394 77
5,000	120 72	237 27
2,500	87 40	141 80
1,000	21 70	39 48

ALL THE PROFITS OF THE COMPANY ARE

DIVIDED ANNUALLY,

AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS,

AND

CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS, OR ADDED TO THE POLICY, AT THE OPTION OF THE ASSURED.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

LIFE POLICIES ISSUED,

PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.

AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES issued, paid up in Ten Years or otherwise.

CHILDREN'S ENDOWMENT POLICIES, Etc.

H. S. HOMANS,

General Agent for California, Oregon, and Nevada.

No. 609 Clay street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—Holders of Policies issued through this Agency in 1864 can ascertain the amount of their Dividends upon application to the General Agent, and the Amount of Dividends on Policies issued in 1865 as soon as received.

fe17-1m

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss hy Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTASCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital,	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865,	11,522,500
Annual Income,	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law,	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco,

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of hoth Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, togethor with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

au19-3m

NATIONAL

Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE,

Brannan's Express Building,

402 Montgomery street, (secoud floor.)

PERMANENT OFFICE,

(After March 1st,)

408 Montgomery street,

Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,

Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

This company is prepared to insure hrick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sueath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President.
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends delared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTIBLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.

STEPH. T. KING,

General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,

712 Montgomery street,

fe24-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE TO-DAY, SATURDAY, MARCH 3.

AT HALF PRICES, Commencing at 2 o'clock,

GRAND MATINEE:

MARCILLAC,

THE HONEST MAN.

THIS EVENING, MARCH 3,

The celebrated Vocal Comedienne,

MISS EMILY THORNE,

In the new comedy of

A Lesson of Love,

SUPPORTED BY THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY.

After which MISS EMILY THORNE will sing a new Song entitled

"I have no Brother Now."

To conclude with the musical burletta of

THE SWISS COTTAGE!

The Spectacular Extravaganza of the

Seven Sisters

Will shortly be produced.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NEW GOODS! NEW GOODS!

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

WILL OPEN

On Monday, March 5th,

EXTENSIVE INVOICES OF

NEW STYLE

SPRING DRESS GOODS!

AND WILL ALSO OFFER ALL KINDS OF

DOMESTIC GOODS,

DRESS GOODS,

LINEN GOODS,

SHEETINGS,

SHIRTINGS,

PRINTS,

ETC.,

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

See our Advertisement in Daily Papers.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

mar3 Lick House Block.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such sturtling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - C. TIBBETTS

GRAND MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half Prices,
Commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON, MARCH 4,
The Grand Spectacular Play entitled,

The Naiad Queen.

And THE BUISLAY FAMILY, in their Wonderful Acts.

THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, MARCH 4, Third Night of the Operatic Dramatic Spectacle, entitled,

THE NAIAD QUEEN!

In which the

Celebrated Buislay Family

And the FULL DRAMATIC COMPANY will appear.

The Naiad Queen.....Mrs. Sedley Brown
Idex.....Miss C. Chapman
Fluvia.....Miss A. M. Thorne
Mistress Bridget.....Mrs. Judah
The Lady Ulna.....Miss Julia Gould
Rupert.....Miss Hinckley
Baptiste.....S. W. Leach
Rudolpho.....W. H. Hamilton
Rinaldo.....F. Percy

After which, Acrobatic and Gymnastic Feats by THE BUISLAY FAMILY.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1: Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

fe19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,
San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

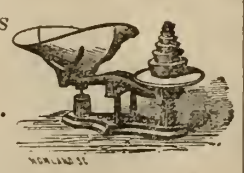
mar2-3m

NOTICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

FAIRBANK'S

STANDARD

SCALES.



Every HOUSEKEEPER should have a reliable SCALE in the PANTRY to use in testing the weight of ARTICLES purchased from the BUTCHER and GROCER.

See samples of all sizes at Salesroom.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,

mar4 1m 334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
a27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Ja27-tf between California and Pine.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

Auctioneers.

Office and Salesroom, No. 404 Montgomery street, one door from the northeast corner of California and Montgomery.

W. W. LAWTON.....Notary Public.

LARGE AND IMPORTANT

CREDIT SALE

OF

Homestead Lots at Auction!

MONDAY, - - MARCH 12, 1866,

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON,

SIXTY HOMESTEAD LOTS ON THE Market Street Railroad.

We will sell at Auction, on easy terms, 60 Homestead Lots, situate on the line of the Market street Railroad, south and west from the Willows.

The property to be sold comprises some of the most beautifully located lots in that part of the city. They command a fine view, and can be improved without any expense for grading. The Lots are within fifty yards of the Market street Railroad. The soil is good, and would make fine Gardens.

☞ Maps of this property, showing location and full particulars, are now ready at the office of the Auctioneers.

Title—United States Patent.

TERMS: One-half cash, one-half in one year at one per cent per month interest, secured by mortgage.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

mar3 Auctioneers.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING

Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgumating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.

CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!

W. D. FARRAND.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MARCH 10th, - - - - - SACRAMENTO,
Captain J. M. Cavarly.
(Connecting with COSTA RICA, Captain Maury.)

MARCH 19, - - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

MARCH 30, - - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON THURSDAY, - - - MARCH 15TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets.
Up stairs, San Francisco.

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON WEDNESDAY, - - - - MARCH 7, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

fe23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE EXCELSIOR HAT

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Paris, New York and London

STYLES FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER, 1866,

WILL BE INTRODUCED

Saturday, - - - - March 3,

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S

HAT MANUFACTORIES,
Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial street..San Francisco
No. 125 J street.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second streets.....Marysville

Our style in MOLESKIN for this season is we feel confident, the SUPERLATIVE OF ELEGANCE AND FINISH; our MERINO PINAUD and ST. CLOUD the most successful result of Parisian taste. Especial attention also deserve our Chelsea, Chester, Crescent, Newport, Derby, and Clarendon Resorts.

CALL AND SEE THEM. mar4 1m

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 15. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 10, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- Spring Flowers.—By "Iris."
- To Be Reprehended.
- "New York Opinion."
- What is a Bohemian?

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

POETRY:
- A Poet's Grave at Lone Mountain. By Ina D. Coolbrith.
- Carrie Harrie.—By W.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

SELECTED:
- Lightning Photographed.
- "If You would only Pay Father."
- The Slang of the Pacific Coast.
- Paragraphs from Paris.
- Personalities of Journalism.
- Cholera in India.
- Puffs from the Pulpit.
- A Flight in the Dark—A Thrilling Adventure.

POETRY:
- Old Master Grunsey and Goodman Dodd.
- Summer Moon.

[For the Californian.]

A POET'S GRAVE AT LONE MOUNTAIN.

So closely Nature folds her child
Unto her tender mother-breast,
Our searching eyes had scarce beguil'd
The secret of his rest.

For no remembrance man hath writ;
His grave no sculptured marbles show!
Ah me! and yet, what matters it
To him who rests below?

The sun lets fall its brightest beam;
The trees drop softest shadows down;
The bird songs in the branches seem
Wild echoes of his own:

The pallid clouds shed dewy tears;
The sea has giv'n one pluk-lipped shell
To murmur in his slumbering ear
The sound he loved so well:

The tangled tendrils of the vine
Cling close; the grasses bend and nod,—
And countless daisies, twinkling, shine
Like pearls upon the sod.

For that he, living, loved the Earth,
And voiced her praises to her face,
She pays him, dead, love's tender worth,
And clothes him with her grace.

So, hidden close from day and dark,
Kind Nature, fold him to thy breast:
Enough if One above shall mark
The Poet's place of rest!

INA D. COOLBRITH.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 10th, 1866.

THE "Artemus Ward and wife" who were suffocated by gas in New England turned out not to be the parents of "The Babes in the Wood;" but there is no mistake about the fact of another distinguished man of letters, without a wife, having been nearly asphyxiated by gas, one night during the week.

A careless fellow... one of the kind that would drop a coal into a powder-barrel by stealth, and call it fun... he retired to his humble but virtuous couch, and, according to his usual custom, read until his eyelids trembled between a sleep and wake. Then, too indolent to get up and turn off the gas at the chandelier, whose crystal prisms quivered in the centre of the room, he put forth his hand and stopped it at the "portable," which stood upon the table by his side.

Oh, that portable! More fatal it came near proving than any potable that ever before was drunk! The flexible tube that connected the portable with the burner above lay in supine coils upon the table, inert in look, but more deadly in fact than the hooded snake that lurks in tangled grasses.

I should have said more deadly than the worm of the Still, but then I love the Still... aye, indeed, I love thee, Still, and it was thy Worms, I fancy, that furnished the Diet of that celebrated convocation to which so frequent reference is made—

Deadlily, I say, lay the folds of that long, flexible gutta-percha pipe upon the table, and little did the occupant of the humble but virtuous couch, once before referred to, dream that he was to enact the part of a Laocoon in its embraces.

About the third hour of the morning he awoke, imagining that a large beam lay across his chest, against which his heaving lungs strove in vain, powerless to effect a respiration.

Assured by the sense of touch that there was no beam upon his chest, he concluded that it must be in his eye, and, though strangely uncomfortable from a buzzing in his ears and a wild throbbing of the temples, he again turned himself to the wall, and sought sleep as a duty.

In the morning when the faithful boy came with a feather-brush in one hand and a cocktail in the other, to dust the furniture and the clothes and prepare his master for his daily wrestle with the world:

There in the twilight cold and gray,
Lifeless but beautiful he lay,
While in the room gas smelled by far
Worse than petroleum or tar,
Exsmellsior!

All methods to bring the asphyxiated to, failed, until I happened into the room. Knowing the habits of my friend I hesitated not a moment. There upon the table stood the cocktail, compounded by Tim, struggling with its fragrant breath to overpower the noxious fumes that had done all the mischief. The room was already redolent of lemon peel, mingled with a sniff of Angostora.

You remember the idea which the poetess... her name escapes my treacherous memory... so beautifully embodies in verse. A wife bending over the bed whereon her husband lies stretched in the silence and immutability of death, but unwilling to believe that life has all departed, cries wildly for his harp, to awake him with his favorite air... tremblingly, wistfully, her fingers sweep the chords, but idly the sounds fall upon the dull ear of him who lies before her, and the pale eyelids do not unclose. "Hang up the harp, he'll wake no more," is then the despairing wail of the wife, for love has done all that it can do.

As already intimated, I borrowed an idea. The cocktail which the faithful hand of affection had early brought stood upon the table before me.

"Bring me that glass!" I weeping cried,
"And if one spark of life remain,
He'll waken when its spell is tried,
Or never wake again."

In accordance with my modest but firm request, it was brought me... by a strong effort of self-control and a stern immolation of natural inclination upon the shrine of friendship, I did not drink it myself.

Tenderly I neared it to his lips... they faintly quivered, as you may have seen needles when a magnet approaches. I was not rash ..for a too sudden movement might have upset the tumbler and dissipated all our hopes at once. Presently his eyelids began to twitch, and his finely chiseled nostrils dilated as though they smelt something good. The moment was auspicious, and I touched the goblet to his nose. The effect was miraculous. As though a powerful galvanic battery had suddenly been applied to his back-bone, he sprang up in bed, extended both arms, and emptied the glass at a gulp—

"Too much sugar," he moaned; and, feebly falling back, we thought that indeed his spirit had fled. But careful attention and much rubbing brought him to.

"Just one more rubber," he cried... evidently under the impression that he was playing whist, dollar points.

The first indication of convalescence was his reply to the remark: "How pale you are!"

"Yes," said he, "I'm a little bucket."

Then he turned his face to the mirror, and observed that it was no wonder he looked gas-tly.

After a long-drawn sigh he added that if he had kicked the bucket he supposed they would have published his death in the Gas-ette.

Silence ensued for five minutes or more. In a voice tremulous with emotion he then propounded a conundrum:

"Had I died and had my epitaph been written, what metre should have been used?"

Everybody knew but nobody spake. It is pleasant sometimes to lend oneself to a delusion if it pleases a friend. He smiled that pensive smile which his friends so well know: shouting...

"Gas-meter!"

He fell back exhausted. Slowly and sadly we all walked down, from his room in the uppermost story; a candle we placed on the cold hearthstone, and we left him alone in his glory.

The only person unaffected was the landlady, Signora Triphammersmith. His rent was paid in advance, she said, and in any event it was none of her funeral. Indeed, on first discovery of the accident, "To Let" had been conspicuously posted in the windows of the apartment. To the gentleman, however, who immediately applied for the eligible rooms, she explained that he could not move his trunk in until the coffin was carried out, whereat he manifested considerable chagrin and went away without concluding the negotiation.

My friend has not yet fully recovered from the effects of that nearly fatal night, and for the greater part of the week I have watched beside him. Formerly, while in vigorous health, he was watched by the Police, but now they have thrown off on him, and the performance of that duty rests wholly with me.

Of late, my reflections have been upon the instability of human life: how man that is born of woman, his days are short and full of wool.

I have also thought sadly of the terrible prices the Gas Company charges the citizens of this metropolis for the privilege of being suffocated. Incredible as the story may seem, on learning of the accident which had occurred, they sent around their agent, measured the number of cubic inches that my friend contained, and sent him in a bill for that amount of gas. Who henceforth will say that fiction is not sometimes stranger than truth?

INIGO.

AMUSEMENTS.

ON Monday night, Miss Emily Thorne made her last appearance at the Opera House, in the capital comedy, A Lesson in Love. It was excellently played. On Tuesday evening, the popular favorites, Mrs. Edwin and Charles Thorne, reappeared in The Marble Heart. We have seen this piece of marble better quarried out on several occasions. Miss Berry played "Marie" very well. She possesses the advantage of a musical voice, which she manages well. Wednesday, the wild Sears', yet wilder—Irish Mother, was produced. Thursday, The Romance of a Poor Young Man was well played to a full house. Last evening, the watchman and property man took a benefit in that piece of stone-masonry before mentioned, The Marble Heart. This afternoon and evening, The Seven Sisters—which has long been in preparation—will be brought out. It will be the feature of the coming week.

From the Metropolitan the Tibbetts management has seceded, declaring in favor of Sacramento, where a two weeks' engagement is announced. It seems to us that Mr. Tibbetts has left several elements of success behind, in the charming Hinckley, with her splendor of silver harness, the naive, pretty, and graceful Mrs. Alicia Thorne; the comical Leach, and one or two others. The Buislays have run the house two or three evenings during the week—mostly benefit occasions—accompanying wonderful acrobatic and gymnastic performances with very poor pantomime.

The San Francisco Amateurs gave an entertainment at Turn-Verein Hall on Thursday evening, Miss Olivia Rand making her debut as "Helen" in The Iron Chest. This young lady has a good stage figure and face, and an excellent voice—which in singing "Beautiful Dreamer" asserted itself beyond the power of a wretched orchestral accompaniment to drown. The débutante seemed perfectly at her ease, and if she make the stage her profession an engagement lies ready to her hands, if report may be believed. As for the other characters, as some one remarks, the Chest was the best played of all. A social dance closed the entertainment.

A FLIGHT IN THE DARK.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

MY father was an engineer before me, and gave up a tolerable business in a large provincial town to take an engagement under a railway company; and when I left school, he put me into his office, where I stayed till I was twenty.

"This sort of work won't do for you any longer, Tom," said my father to me one day. "You are getting as lanky as a clothes-prop, and round-shouldered into the bargain. We must get you out into the fresh air. Suppose you go as engine-driver for a couple of years; it will do your health good, and you will get an amount of genuine practical knowledge that way, which you could get in no other, which may some time be of great use to you in your profession. When you have had enough of that, you shall try your hand at surveying for the new branch they are talking about."

So I, by no means loth, went into the engine-shed; and, after a short experience as "cleaner," went out on the Firefly, as stoker, under old Sam Preston, one of the most experienced drivers on the line.

The life of an engine-driver, when once you have got over the disagreeableness of being, while on duty at least, in a chronic state of greasy blackness, is by no means either an unpleasant or an unhealthy one; and speaking for my own part, I certainly liked it much better than being cooped up all day in an office.

We had a week of night-duty and a week of day-duty alternately; and were always employed to run either the express or mail trains—a task for which none but the best drivers are selected. You must understand that all this took place more than twenty years ago, when the railway-system was in its infancy, and before the electric telegraph was an accomplished fact. The Firefly was running, on the week in question, between Mellingshall and Rippinghurst—the former, as you are aware, being one of the largest manufacturing towns in the northern counties, and the headquarters of the line on which I was employed. Mellingshall has two lines of railway running into it—one from the north, and one from the south-east; both of which lines meet at a junction about half a mile from the station, and run their trains between those points on rails common to the two.

The Rippinghurst mail started at eleven P. M.; that for the north, half an hour earlier; but our instructions were to have everything in readiness a quarter of an hour before the time of starting, and to run the engine from the shed on a spare line used for the purpose just outside the yard, there to await the signal-bell, which announced that the main line was clear, and then run back to the platform, and take up our train. As we drove slowly up to our waiting-place, Sam was in the habit of dropping off the engine most evenings, to have a few minutes' gossip with a friend of his, a pointsman, whose tastes, in common with Sam's, ran on large gooseberries and small dogs; and as I came back past the pointsman's box, on my way into the station, in answer to the bell, Sam would bid his friend good-night, leap blithely on to the engine, pull on his greatcoat, tie a shawl round his throat, and prepare for the long, dark journey before him. At the point where the Firefly took up her position, waiting for the signal, the line on one side was open to the fields, while on the other were several wharfs, open to an adjacent canal, beyond which lay the town of Mellingshall with its thousand lamps.

I had driven up to the waiting-place one cold autumn night, dropping Sam, as usual, at his friend the pointsman's box, and had just lighted my pipe, thinking to have a quiet smoke for ten minutes before the bell should ring, when I was startled by the sudden appearance, close to the engine, of two gentlemen—for if not gentlemen, they were dressed as such—who seemed almost as if they had sprung from the ground, so quiet had been their approach, so unexpected was their appearance. "Railway nobs, these," I muttered to myself, smuggling my pipe out of sight in hot haste. "Probably a couple of directors. Too bad of them though to come prying about a fellow's engine at this time of night, trying to find out something against him. They'll fine poor Sam if they find him off his perch." One of the strangers was stout, and the other was slim. They were both well wrapped up, for the night was chilly; and the slim one carried a small, square leather case in one hand—judging by that dim light, it might be either a dispatch box or a small portmonteau.

"You are waiting here to take out some train, young man?" said the stout gentleman interrogatively.

"Yes, sir—the mail for Rippinghurst."

"And that starts—when?"

"In twelve minutes, sir, from the platform."

"Ay, just so." He began to walk slowly round the Firefly with his hands behind him, looking at her admiringly from every point of view, and talking to me all the time. "I suppose your engine is coked and watered ready for the journey?"

"Yes, sir."

"And how far do you run before taking in fresh water?"

"We always take in water at Merryvale, thirty-eight miles from here. We have to stay there three or four minutes, on account of the letter-bags."

"But supposing you had no train behind you, how many miles could you run to-night, say at the rate of forty miles an hour, before being obliged to stop for coke or water?"

"About seventy miles, sir."

"About seventy miles! Just so. Really, these steam-monsters seem to me the most wonderful inventions of this or any previous age;" and, as he said these words, he mounted coolly on the engine. Then I felt more certain than ever that he must be a director or some great railway functionary; while the slim gentleman with the dispatch box, standing so quietly on the ground, beating his chest with one hand to keep himself warm, was probably a clerk or amanuensis.

No sooner had the stout gentleman clambered up beside me, than he commenced another rapid cross-fire of questions, and made me explain to him the method of working the engine. I showed him how to start her, how to stop her, how to put on the brake, and sound the whistle. He expressed himself as being immensely gratified; and when his list of qestions was exhausted, called to the slim gentleman to get up beside us, in order that he might explain to him some more interesting point than common.

The slim gentleman, still holding the dispatch-box carefully, had hardly complied with his request, when the bell sounded which summoned me to the station, and I at once started the engine.

"We will ride as far as the platform with you," said the stout gentleman, watching my movements attentively.

The ordinary programme of proceedings: on hearing the bell, to run the engine slowly forward to the second pointsman's box, where a man was in waiting to turn her on to the main line, after running on which for a few yards, she was reversed, and run back, tender first, in the station, taking up Sam Preston at the first pointsman's box on the way in.

On the present occasion, as soon as I heard the bell, I sounded my whistle as a notice to pointsman number two; and, on seeing his green light exhibited, ran the engine forward over his points till we were on the main line. I was just about to reverse the engine, for the purpose of running back into the station, when the stout gentleman spoke to me.

"How far is it from here to the junction where the line to Rippinghurst separates itself from the north line?"

"About half a mile, sir."

"And what means has the pointsman at that junction of distinguishing one set of trains from the other, or of knowing on to which line they ought to be turned?"

"His tables inform him at what time each train ought to arrive or depart; in addition to which, all engines going north give two distinct whistles, while those going south to Rippinghurst and other places, whistle three times before reaching the junction, and thus notify to the pointsman which route it is intended they should take."

"Just so; two whistles when you go north, and three when you go south. Le moment est arrivé! Scarcely had the stout gentleman, who was standing behind me, uttered these words, when I felt myself seized suddenly round the throat with an iron grip, while my head was wrenched violently back; and the next moment I became insensible. Had such a mode of attack been known in those days, I should certainly have said that I had been garrotted.

When I came to myself, I was lying on my back among the coke in the tender, with my overcoat put under my head by way of a pillow. I staggered to my feet, feeling very dizzy and faint, and with a choking sensation in my throat that was far from agreeable. The Firefly was tearing along at a terrific pace, with no train behind her; going, too, not south to Rippinghurst, but along the main line to the north, as I saw when I looked round, for the night was fine, and the stars shone brightly; and I was familiar with every turn and feature of the landscape. Mellingshall was ten miles away, and two stations had been passed already. I had but just time to make these observations when the stout gentleman turned to address me.

"Getting round again, I perceive," said he; "you will be all right in another quarter of an hour. Here, take a dram of this brandy; you will find it improve you wonderfully. You will, I am sure, forgive me the little rudeness I perpetrated a few minutes ago. Necessity compelled me to act as I did. You are better already, I see. And now I will yield up my post of driver to you, having every confidence in your ability to conduct me and my friend safely to our journey's end."

"And where may that be?" asked I somewhat sullenly. "This is not the road to Rippinghurst."

"Just so. It is the line to the north on which we are now travelling—I whistled twice at the junction, according to your instructions—and it is northward that I wish to go. My friend and I were too late for the mail; we could not afford to wait for the next train, which, in fact, does not start till six to-morrow morning; so were compelled, in this rude and violent fashion, to invent a special for ourselves."

Fool that I was! how egregiously had I allowed myself to be deceived! I had actually taken one of these men for that awful personage, a railway director; whereas the two of them were probably nothing better than a brace of swindlers. With what dire punishment I should be visited when I got back to Mellingshall, I durst not just then pause to contemplate. It was true that I was being carried against my will; but I had been wrong, in the first place, in allowing a stranger to get on to the engine, and so render it possible for any one to usurp the command placed temporarily in my hands. The mail would be delayed; and when it was discovered that I had absconded with the engine, they would put me down as a lunatic at once. But a few minutes more would bring us to Fallowdene station, at which place I would stop and give the two strangers into custody, and prove my innocence at the same time.

"This sort of thing may seem a pleasant game to you," I said, turning to the stout stranger; "but it's deucedly unpleasant for me. You've delayed the mail, and run away with the engine—stolen it, in fact, and laid yourselves open to an indictment for felony. But we shall be at Fallowdene in three minutes, and then you can have an opportunity of explaining to some one higher in authority than me, the meaning of your singular conduct, for I don't intend to drive you any further."

"Your naivete, my young friend, is really amusing," said the stout stranger, with a grim laugh. "Understand, once for all, that I, and not you, am master of the situation; and that it is for you to obey my orders implicitly. Refuse to do so, or attempt to play any fool's tricks with the engine, and I will scatter to the winds what little brains you possess, and scrunch your bones under the wheels of your own engine!" At the same instant, I felt the cold barrel of a pistol pressed against my temples; and I staggered back, and should have fallen from the engine, had not the stout man caught me by the collar, and dragged me back.

"There now," said he, good-humoredly, "you owe me some thanks for having saved your life. Do as I tell you, young man, and you have nothing to fear. I pledge you my word to restore you in safety to the arms of your disconsolate friends."

I saw at once that further resistance just then would be useless; I had better make up my mind to obey the orders of the mysterious stranger, keeping, meanwhile, both eyes and ears on the alert. So, with a shrill whistle, we flew past Fallowdene at full speed; and then I shovelled a lot of coke into the furnace, and poured a little oil here and there among the joints of the machinery, and went quietly about my work, as though no strangers were present, but always keenly observant of what my companions were doing.

"I am glad to find that you have come to your senses so readily," said the stout man. "Keep your engine up to the mark, and our journey will be done all the sooner." So saying, he proceeded to fasten a white woollen comforter round his throat, and to put on a travelling-cap in place of his hat; after which he lighted a cigar and turned to look at his friend.

The slim man (gentlemen I call them no longer) had taken no part in the conversation, but seated in one corner, from the first, with the dispatch-box between his knees, had seemed to take a very despondent view of his position. Him, the stout man now turned to address; but when he spoke, it was in the French language, evidently that I might not understand what was said; neither of them dreaming that the black greasy-looking stoker beside them was acquainted with more languages than his own.

"How melancholy you look to-night, my friend," said he; "one would think you were in love, so forlorn as you sit there. All our plans have succeeded; and although we missed the train, that is a matter of little moment, since, thanks to our clever coup-de-main, we shall not be above half an hour late at our destination; and Peter will surely wait that short time for us. This night, of all nights in the year, you ought to be as merry as a black bird; for now you have accomplished your revenge—that revenge for which you have been sighing, day and night, for six months past. So cheer up, my child, and be light-hearted, as I am: let the future take care of itself. Vive la bagatelle!"

"It is so cold, sitting here," replied the slim man with a shiver, "with nothing to occupy either one's fingers or one's thoughts."

"It is because your thoughts are so busily occupied, my friend, that you are so gloomy and distrait. But you said you were cold: here, drain this flask; choice cognac, I assure you; not a headache in a bucketful of it. And here, take this overcoat of mine; for myself, I can do just as well without it;" and unheeding the remonstrances of the other, the stout man slipped out of his great-coat, and inducted his friend into it; then poured a quantity of cognac into the cup of his flask, and made him swallow that; and finished up by insisting that he should try a cigar. But in spite of these friendly attentions, and the cheering words which accompanied them, the slim man remained silent and shivering, brooding over some dark secret, known only to himself and his friend. When the stout man found that all his efforts to cheer the other were unavailing, he turned away with a muttered execration, and troubled himself no further in the matter, but went on smoking his cheroots, and watching all my movements attentively, as though he feared I might play false

He asked me the name of each station that we passed, and its distance from Mellingshall; and he became temporarily excited once or twice, when the red light (the signal to stop) was exhibited at some station: at which times I had to slacken speed, and whistle till the green light took its place, when we again put on all steam, and tore on our way. The cold glitter of a pistol-barrel would meet my eye at such times, and a muttered caution would fall on my ear, to beware that I did not attempt any treachery. But the dangerous point once passed, the pistol would disappear for a while, and the stout man would go on smoking more furiously than ever, as if to make up for lost time. He took out his watch once or twice; and when he held it to the lamp to see the hour, I had for the moment a clear view of his face.

He was by no means ill-looking, and seemed to be about forty years old. He wore a thick black moustache, but the rest of his face was closely shaven; he had dark piercing eyes, that seemed to look through you; and, for the rest, was in manners and appearance as much a gentleman as nine-tenths of those who usurp that honorable title.

I kept the furnace of the Firefly well supplied with fuel, and she went along at a gallant pace, for I was determined to end this strange journey as soon as possible. Past one mile-post after another, standing whitely out against the dark embankments; with ever and anon a station, big or little, rushing madly up to us, staring at us blankly for a single second, and calling to us with a thousand iron tongues to stop, as it receded swiftly away into darkest space; under bridges innumerable, each of them a span of blackness that vanished in an instant; then into a great tunnel, wrapped and lost in its breath of steam and smoke, awakening its thousand echoes that have little time for sleep; and so out again into the fresh cool night; away—past silent farmstead, and sleeping village, and great furnaces that flare their hearts out to the unheeding stars: onward we went till Burkleigh station was reached, and sixty miles of journey had been achieved.

I gathered from the stout man's obervations that he was well acquainted with this part of the country, and that our flight in the dark was now almost ended; indeed, the Firefly, good little engine though she was, could not have held out much longer without a further supply of water.

"Half-way between Burkleigh and the next station," said the stout man, "is the point where I wish to stop. You will make your arrangements accordingly; and you will further understand, that when I leave the engine you will accompany me. I cannot afford to dispense with the pleasure of your company just yet."

Here was a new view of the case with a vengeance! and just as I was calculating how comfortably I could work my way back to Mellingshall, and reach home in time for an early breakfast.

I remonstrated, but to no purpose: he stopped me sternly, and at once. "Run your engine off the main line on to the first siding you come to," said he; "and, for the rest, hold your tongue."

I slackened speed at once; and about a mile further on we came to a small branch line leading to a colliery some distance away. Here the slim man got down and held the points open by my direction, while I ran the Firefly off the main line, and brought her to a stand. This done, I let off the steam, and raked some of the fire out of the grate, while the others stood by watching me impatiently. When all was done that was necessary, the stout man took me by the shoulder, and addressed me impressively.

"Look here, my young friend," said he, "you have acted sensibly to-night in not disputing my orders. Continue to do as I tell you, and no harm shall befall you; but attempt to deceive me, or to take French-leave, and you will have something sent after you that will silence you forever. On one point make your mind easy—I am a dead shot; I never miss my aim."

"Go ahead," said I sulkily; "you needn't talk so much about your confounded pistol."

The stout man replied with a laugh, and slinging the dispatch-box by a strap over his shoulder, led the way at a quick pace from the branch-line over a tract of rising ground, out on to a wide stretch of bleak moorland, intersected by several roads, never hesitating for a moment as to the path he ought to take, but leading the way as confidently as though he were familiar with every inch of the ground, which probably he was. I followed close behind, and with the slim man brought up the rear. After walking thus for a mile or two, we came to a plantation of firs, the edge of which skirted the road we were traversing. The stout man whistled twice in a peculiar way, and we all stood still to listen. In a moment the response came—a similar whistle, and close at hand. Next we heard the noise of wheels, and presently a carriage of some kind came out of a narrow lane, that ran by one end of the plantation, and drove slowly up to where we were standing. As well as I could make out by that light, it seemed nothing more than an ordinary hackney-coach, with perhaps a better horse than common in the shafts; while, as for the driver, he was so thoroughly muffled up, that it would have been impossible to recognize him again. He began to swear at us, as soon as he got near enough to be heard, for having kept him waiting so long; but at a few whispered words from the stout man, his objurgations lapsed into a muttered curse or two, and then died away in sulky silence. We three pedestrians, together with the dispatch-box, were quickly inside the cab; the windows were closed, and the blinds pulled down; and we were driven off at a good pace, which was kept up without break or rest for what seemed to me a very long time, till at last we rattled over the paved streets of some town, and about five minutes later came to a stand. I had some acquaintance with that part of the country, and I knew that within a radius of fifteen miles from the point where we left the engine, three country towns were situated, all of them busy, populous places. To which of these three towns had I been taken? On this point I was as helpless to form a judgment as if I had been born blind.

On alighting from the vehicle, I had only time to take one hasty glance round, and to observe that we had been driven into a small court or enclosed yard, overlooked by high gloomy buildings on every side, when a door in front of us was silently opened, and we all went in. The door seemed to close of its own accord behind us; and the next moment a light appeared at the further end of the long passage in which we were standing, carried by one of the most singular-looking beings these eyes have ever beheld. He seemed, at the first glance, more like a resuscitated corpse than anything else; he was very old, and very withered, with a wicked shrivelled-up little face—the face of a century-old ape, lighted up with two eyes, so restless, cunning, and suspicious, that they seemed to distrust everybody, himself included. He was dressed in an old red flannel dressing-robe, which fell in voluminous folds to his slippered feet, while his cadaverous jaws were bound up in a dirty white handkerchief, fastened in a huge knot on the top of his head, on which a few spiky hairs were still sparsely scattered. Holding the lamp above his head with a shaking hand, he grinned a hideous welcome to us, and addressed the stout man with the familiarity of an old friend.

"Welcome home again, Mr. William—welcome home!" he mumbled. "What luck have you had, eh—what luck? But who are these? Strangers, eh? Friends of yours, did you say? But are they safe, Mr. William—are they safe?"

Chattering thus, the old man led the way into a large but plainly-furnished room, where a table was laid ready for supper, showing that the arrival of one or more had been expected. Another plate was quickly brought, and the slatternly-looking middle-aged woman who waited upon us served up a plain substantial supper, to which we all did ample justice. The slim man seemed, if such a thing were possible, to grow more moody and despondent with every mouthful that he ate. Behind his chair stood Black Care, the terrible, the unbidden, and poisoned the contents of cup and platter with a touch of its skeleton finger. As for the old man, he mumbled and jabbered away in his apish inane fashion, unheeded by everybody, Mr. William being just then too much preoccupied with his own thoughts to pay the least attention to him.

When supper was over, Mr. William and the old man left the room together; but in a few minutes, the former came to the door, and beckoned to me to follow him. I accordingly stumbled after him up a long dark flight of stairs, and was finally ushered into a room having a small camp bedstead in one corner; while close to the brightly-blazing fire stood a large easy-chair and a small table, in the former of which the old man was already seated.

"You will have to make yourself comfortable here for the night," said the stout man, turning to me. "That bed is at your service; and here," patting the old man on the shoulder, "is one who will attend to your requirements. Good-night, and pleasant dreams."

So saying, he quitted the room, locking the door behind him; and I was left alone with the old man, who grinned and nodded his withered head at me; and pointing to a chair in the opposite corner, invited me, in a shrill quavering voice, to come and sit down by the fire, unless I felt disposed to go to bed at once. As I never felt less inclined for sleep in my life, I drew the chair up to the fire, and sat down opposite the old boy, who was busy concocting a basin of gruel for himself, he having taken no part in the supper down stairs. I tried him with a few questions, being especially desirous to know how long it was probable that I should be detained there against my will; but at each of my queries, the old rascal put on a vacant puzzled look, and replied with something altogether irrelevant to my question, so that, after one or two futile efforts to get a sensible answer, I gave up the task in despair, and watched him in gloomy silence while he took his gruel, seasoned largely with cognac.

Sitting thus, I heard from some far-off steeple the faint tones of a clock tell the hour of three, and I remembered for the first time that it was Sunday morning. It would not be daylight yet for three hours. Following close upon the striking of the clock came the rumbling of a distant cab or mail-cart, rattling over the paved streets: there was a pleasant sense of companionship in the sound that spoke warmly to my heart, and brought with it an intense longing to escape.

To escape! was such a thing possible? My heart throbbed, and the blood rushed to my face when I first asked myself the question; so that when I looked up, and saw the old man's suspicious eyes fixed intently on me, I felt as if my hidden thoughts were discovered. But I sat very still, and strove to look as unconcerned as possible; and when the old man was again busy with his gruel, I set to work to evolve quietly out of my brain some plan of deliverance. The door, as I have already said, was locked on the outside; but even had it been otherwise, to venture down through the lower parts of the house would have been a most dangerous proceeding. The window, then, was the point to be considered. This was secured inside by stout shutters, but there would be no difficulty in opening them; the only real obstacle lay in the fact of the window being so high above the ground—far too high for me to drop from. Then there was the old man to dispose of; that, indeed, was the first thing to do, for once let him give the alarm, and all my efforts would be fruitless.

I sat brooding intently for about half an hour, at the end of which time I had thought out a plan which seemed to me the only one at all feasible. There were some small pieces of wood lying on the hearth, fragments left after the fire had been lighted. I picked up one of these, and in the course of a few minutes had fashioned it with my pocket-knife into a sort of rude spatula, round which I tied a piece of stout string that I found in one of my pockets. The old man sat watching my movements attentively, apparently unsuspicious of what I was about to do.

Everything was now ready for my attempt. Occasionally I heard the faint murmurs of voices below stairs, showing that there were other inmates of the house still awake; and now and then the opening or shutting of a distant door sounded preternaturally loud at that quiet hour. I confess that now the final moment was come, my heart failed me for a minute or two, and I began to doubt my ability to carry out my plan to a successful issue. But this fit of weakness was of short duration, and gave place to an unfaltering resolution to do and dare everything to effect my escape.

I rose suddenly from my chair, stepped across the hearth in two strides, and seized the hoary rascal by the throat. "Speak, or make a noise, and I'll murder you!" I whispered sternly in his ear, and I passed the bright blade of my knife close before his eyes. Then before he had time to recover from the shock of an attack so sudden and unexpected, I had twisted the bell-rope into a large loop, far out of his reach as he sat there. "Open your mouth," I said to him, "but do not speak, or you die." He was shivering with fright, and had hardly sense enough left to understand what I said. "Mercy! mercy! good young man;" he gasped, and then the piece of wood was inserted between his teeth, and tied securely in its place, and he could say no more. I next fastened his hands behind him with my handkerchief, then drew a sheet off the bed, and cutting it with my knife into long strips, twisted these, and proceeded to tie him securely in his chair. When I had satisfied myself that he was so fastened that it would be impossible for him to release himself, and further, that he was in no danger of being choked by the gag, I turned my attention to the window; and having taken off my boots, so as to make as little noise as possible in crossing the floor, I proceeded to try the shutters, and after five minutes' patient labor, succeeded in opening them almost in silence.

The next point was the window; but I found, to my dismay, when I came to examine it, that it was composed of small diamond panes set in lead, and opened by means of a casement only, far too small to permit any hope of egress that way. My whole scheme seemed to collapse as I looked, for my intention had been to escape through the window, and reach the ground by means of a rope made out of the bed-clothes. What to do now, I knew not; and as I turned despairingly away, the old man's eyes met mine with a malignant glance of mingled rage and triumph. Suddenly a thought struck me. Although the stout man, on leaving the room, had locked the door behind him, was it not probable that the old man had in his possession another key that would open it? This was a question that I solved at once by searching him, and in one of his pockets I found a peculiar key—a master-key, I imagine it to have been, which probably fitted every door in the house; at all events, it opened the door of my prison, as I was not long in discovering. Although this was only the first step towards my escape, I could not repress the joyous bounding of my heart when the door turned on its hinges, and I stepped cautiously out on the landing, and then stood listening to the murmur of the voices below stairs. But the most difficult part of my enterprise was still before me; this was to pass without discovery the open door of the room below, and then go down the second flight of stairs to the ground-floor, and so out by the first door I could find. The attempt to succeed at all must be made at once, before the stout man came up stairs, which he probably would do ere long, to look after the safety of his prisoner.

Before venturing down in the direction of these voices, I gave one last look round my prison, and examined once more the bonds of the old man; then I blew out the candle, and locked the door, and having removed the key, began to feel my way down the stairs, one at at a time, pausing to listen between every step. Fortunately, the house was one of the old-fashioned kind, and strongly built: and not the faintest creaking of a stair betrayed my presence. At length I reached a large landing, giving access to four rooms. The door of one of these rooms was only partially closed, and through the opening shone a faint stream of light, while now and then a muttered word or two, whose tones I at once recognized, told me that there sat my captor and his friend. Their conversation was nearly over by the time I reached the landing, but they still seemed to be silently busy over something. What was the nefarious business that occupied them at such an unholy hour?

Noiseless as a shadow, I moved forward till I stood on the mat at the entrance to the room. The door was too far closed for me to see the occupants of the room, or for them to see me; but from where I stood, I could see the chimney-piece, and the large pierglass which stood on it; and in this glass I could see the reflection of the stout man and his friend—could see, too, distinctly, what they were doing, which kept them so silent and so busy.

They had got the brown leather portmanteau open between them, and were intently examining its contents, which consisted of watches, chains, rings, and pins, together with several small boxes filled, apparently, with precious stones of different kinds—all, without doubt, the proceeds of some great robbery. I stood like one fascinated, forgetting for the moment the danger of my position. At length the stout man spoke. "A very pretty little haul, Master Matthew!" said he. "As nice a stroke of business as I've done for a long time, and neatly done, too, though I say it that shouldn't. I've got two little black leather travelling-bags up stairs, which will do admirably to hold the swag. I'll go and fetch them, and then we'll make a fair division, as agreed on, and pack up, ready for a start. I must give a look to that young shaver up stairs, and see that he's all right. I'm puzzled to know what to do with him—hang me, if I ain't!"

"Stick a knife in his gizzard!" suggested the slim man with a yawn.

"No, no; we'll not do that, if we can help it," answered his companion. "That's a line of business I've never gone into yet, and I don't mean to, either. My motto is, "Dead men always do tell tales." I'd rather have a live one to deal with any day of the week. No, I must think out some plan before morning of disposing of him for a few days till we've got quietly away. Not, mind you," he added, "that I would hesitate to stick a bullet into him, if my blood was up, and I thought he was going to blow upon our little affair."

He got up and pushed back his chair. "Now, you stay here," he said, "while I run up stairs. I shall be back in five minutes, and then we'll go share and share alike."

I waited to hear no more, but hardly knowing what I did or whither I was going, sped noiselessly up stairs again. Before coming down I had noticed on the upper landing a small closet or lumber-room, in which stood a large ragged screen. Intuitively the idea came into my mind to hide for a minute or two behind this screen, and take my chance of escape in a rush down stairs, while the stout man was engaged with the first surprise of the discovery that would greet him on entering the room where I had been confined.

By the time I had reached the landing, the stout man was ascending the lower stairs; and the same instant that I crept behind the screen, he paused opposite the door to feel for his key, and the next moment the door of my prison was opened, and he went in. "Hollo! what's this? Why are you in the dark?" I heard him exclaim; and then I stole from my hiding-place, crossed the landing, and turning the key in the lock, made both him and the old man prisoners, and then rushed down the first flight of stairs at a breakneck pace. I paused for a second or two on the lower landing, noticing, with some surprise, as I did so, that the room where the two men had been conferring only a minute before was now in darkness. Why had not the slim man awaited the return of his friend, as the latter had requested him to do? That, however, was a question which just then did not concern me.

I had now the lower flight of stairs to descend, and here I was obliged to proceed more cautiously, being unacquainted with the ground. I had turned two corners in safety, and was on the top of the last short flight, when a sudden thundering at the locked door above startled me from my balance, and I stumbled headlong down the remaining stairs, bursting open a door at the foot of them, and landing in a large kitchen, at the door of which—the door leading into the street—stood the slim man, with a very white face, trying with nervous haste to unfasten the bolts, and so let himself out. On the dresser close by his side stood the candle brought from up stairs, and at his feet the portmanteau shut and partially strapped. I understood his little game at a glance, even if his ghastly tell-tale face had not proclaimed it. He had taken advantage of his comrade's brief absence to abscond with both shares of the stolen property, trusting in the darkness to get clear away, and secure the whole of the booty to himself. A look of relief shot over his face when he saw that it was not his terrible comrade come to avenge his treachery. With a snarl of range, he turned from the door, and drawing a pistol from his bosom, fired it point-blank at me just as I was rising from the ground. The wind caused by the bullet stirred my hair, but there was no further damage done, and before he had time to fire again, I had sprung at his throat, and we grappled together, and reeled from side to side of the room in a wild struggle for mastery. He was agile and wiry as a panther, and quite my equal in sheer physical strength, for you must remember that I was little more than a lad at that time; and it would perhaps have gone hard with me had I not brought to bear a little trick with the leg which I had learned among the Westmoreland wrestlers, which stole his feet from under him before he knew what was the matter, and brought him crashing to the ground, with me on the top of him. In falling, he struck his head with tremendous force against the edge of the oaken dresser, and next moment his grasp relaxed, his eyes closed, and a pallor as of death overspread his face. I thought in truth that he was killed.

All this time, the stout man was thundering at the door above stairs, making desperate efforts to get out; and as soon as I had struggled to my feet, the instinct to escape, to get away from that horrible house, came over me as strongly as before. I drew the remaining bolts, and opened the door, and felt the cool night-air blow freely over me with a feeling of thankfulness which no words of mine could express. I turned for a moment, as I crossed the threshold, for a last look at my opponent lying motionless across the hearth, and as I did so, my eye fell on the portmanteau, I seized it, and flinging it over my shoulder, closed the door behind me, and hurried away into the silent streets.

To the first constable whom I met, I gave myself and the portmanteau in charge, and was by him hurried off to the station, where I told my strange story in as few words as possible; and four constables were despatched to the house, which was at once recognized from my description, as it had long been looked on with suspicion. When they returned, it was in company of two out of the three inmates of the house; but the stout man had got clear away before their arrival. The slim man, who had recovered his wits by this time, finding the game up, volunteered a confession, the details of which were afterwards found to be correct, and the chief points of which I will now give you, as briefly as may be.

The jewelry, etc., contained in the portmanteau had been stolen from the establishment of Bellingham & Co., the great jewelers and silversmiths of Mellingshall. Mr. Bellingham's chief assistant and confidential servant was one Matthew Lamplough—he who has hitherto been designated as the slim man—a person who had gradually worked himself up from the position of shop-boy, till he had become practically the manager of the whole concern, for Mr. Bellingham was getting old, and glad to move some of the cares of business on to more youthful shoulders. But Lamplough's ambition at last overstepped his prudence, as he found to his cost, when he one day asked the old man to give him his daughter's hand in marriage—his daughter who was so handsome and so accomplished, and would some day have thirty thousand pounds to call her own. The old man's reply, as soon as amazement would let him speak, was a peremptory refusal, accompanied by some disparaging remarks on the vileness of Matthew's origin—he had gone to Bellingham & Co.'s from the workhouse—and followed up by the intimation that he, Matthew, should retain his confidential post no longer, but be put back to the position of an ordinary assistant in the establishment. Matthew vowed to be revenged, and he kept his word. It was while he was in this mood that he made the acquaintance of an individual going by the name of Captain de Vaux—the stout man of my narrative—a gay dashing fellow, of insinuating manners, who was staying for a few weeks at the best hotel in Mellingshall. De Vaux was not long before he wormed himself into Matthew's confidence, and heard from his lips the narrative of his wrongs, as he deemed them to be; and then by slow degrees he unfolded a plan by which Lamplough might both revenge and enrich himself at the same time. Matthew stared aghast at the proposal when it was first unfolded to him; but the cunning De Vaux gradually familiarized him with the idea, till at last he seized it with avidity. The first thing to do was to obtain duplicate keys of the strong boxes in which the stock of Bellingham & Co. was stored in the cellars below the shop. Wax impressions of the genuine keys were easily obtained by Matthew, from which De Vaux had real keys manufactured. After these had been tried and found to answer, the time for their enterprise was fixed, and all needful preparations made by De Vaux for its successful issue.

Mr. Bellingham always left town on Saturday evenings, to spend Sunday at his villa in the country, the premises being left in charge of Matthew and two other assistants. It was agreed that Matthew should ask for leave of absence from Saturday night till Monday morning; and that, after the departure of Mr. Bellingham, he should go down into the cellars, open the safes with his false keys, load his portmanteau with the most valuable property he could find, relock the safes and then quietly take his departure, as though he were going on his proposed journey. All this was safely accomplished. Lamplough got out of the house without being suspected by his fellow-servants, but not till half an hour past the time agreed on, so that when he and De Vaux reached the station, they found that the last north train had been gone five minutes. Their plan had been to get down by train to the station nearest De Vaux's house, then take the cab which would be in waiting for them, and so reach home about one o'clock in the morning. Here the spoil was to be divided, the necessary disguises assumed; and by six o'clock on Sunday morning, they were to be on board one of the foreign steamers which started at that hour from a neighboring port, by which means they would be safe out of England before the robbery was discovered. The rest you know.

The old man was too cunning to allow himself to be implicated in any way. Captain de Vaux was merely his lodger, he said; as to what his pursuits were, he knew nothing; and he had been requested to take care of me as being a mild lunatic, whom De Vaux was about to conduct to a private asylum. I may mention that in his younger days the old man had been known as a notorious "fence," or receiver of stolen goods.

The soi-disant Captain de Vaux was captured several years after in France, for a daring robbery committed in that country, and condemned to the travaux forcees for—I forget how many years.

"IF YOU WOULD ONLY PAY FATHER."

A YOUNG man with an olive complexion called a few days since upon one of our musical composers, who has that mirage of reputation which surrounds men constantly before the public, and which they take for fame. This composer has never, I believe, ventured on an opera; but his songs are popular and enable him, without too many secret struggles, to maintain a decent appearance in the world. The young man took his seat with a good deal of freedom, and his whole appearance was quite aristocratic. But who that is able to buy a broadcloth suit and a watch-and-chain isn't aristocratic now-a-days? The young man said to the composer: "Sir, I have heard some charming compositions from your pen. There is one of your waltzes especially which I know by heart, and which I cannot hear too often." The composer was agitated so great was the emotion which rose in his breast, and he replied: Sir, you do me a great deal of honor, and, as you give me permission, I can play some of my compositions for you." The young man bowed and said: "I should be gratified to hear you." The composer sat down at the piano and for an hour played all of his compositions, while the distinguished young man beat time in a manner which showed how thorough was his musical education. At last, and when the composer was about to begin his twentieth composition, the young man rose and showed he wished to edge a word in between all those notes. The composer and his piano were silent while the young man said: "Sir, your talents are really extraordinary, and but one thing surprises me—I am astonished that an artist of your capacity has no decoration." The composer could scarcely gasp: "Is it possible? Do you take so much interest in me?" The visitor continued: "Indeed I do, and not I only, but my whole family take the liveliest interest in you, and if any of us knew by what way we could farther your interests, I assure you we would instantly exert ourselves." The composer—who made certain the King of Portugal stood before him, and was sure that he would have at least two orders in his button-hole—gasped: "Really, really, sir, you are too kind, and if I knew by what way I could give proof of my gratitude, I would immediately demonstrate it." The aristocratic visitor replied: "It is very easy for you to do so. If you would only pay father the bill you have been owing him these twelve months. I am the son of the upholsterer to whom you have been owing $140 ever since last December. So you can easily understand the deep interest we take in your affairs and in your success." The composer nearly fell to the floor, so crushed was he by the discovery of a creditor's son, and that creditor an upholsterer, under the frock coat which he felt certain covered the King of Portugal's heart. When he recovered something of his self-possession, his first impulse was to throw the young man out of the window; but then he remembered the policeman at the corner of the street. Therefore he contented himself with bowing the "King of Portugal" out of the room without saying a word—hadn't he given him an hour of his best music?—"Spiridion," in the Boston Gazette.

We are indebted to A. Repetti, New York, for the weekly edition of Le Temps, the younger of the Paris dailies, but ranking first among the organs of the Progressive party of Europe in point of ability and influence. It is edited by M. A. Nefftzer, formerly editor-in-chief of La Presse. Among its regular contributors are E. Forcade, E. Scherer, Charles Dollfus Maurice Block, Louis Ulbach, B. Haureau, A. Laugel, A. Reville, Odilon Barrot, Ch. de Remusat, Louis Blanc, Jules Simon, Eugene Pelletan, and other celebrities. A prominent feature of the paper is its brilliant array of foreign correspondents. Its London correspondent is Louis Blanc. Le Temps was among the firmest friends and staunchest supporters that the American cause found abroad during the late war. In addition to this claim upon our recognition, it is well worthy the attention of all who desire to keep themselves au courant with foreign affairs.

PARAGRAPHS FROM PARIS.

This is the exordium of M. Alex. Dumas' first lecture at Vienna: "When I was young I had a duel. My pulse commonly beats sixty-six pulsations a minute. The physician who went with me on the field took my wrist and observed that my pulse then beat only sixty-seven pulsations, one only one more than in my normal state. Before presenting myself before you, I held out my wrist to a doctor. He counted seventy-seven pulsations. The public frightens me more than death."

M. de Lamartine has addressed the following circular to his subscribers: "Sir—I was on the eve of freeing myself completely from debt when two disagreeable obstacles again prevented me from attaining this desirable result. England, while acknowledging the justice of the debt (?) to me, has adjourned the payment. The French Government had never seemed hostile to me; I was sensible of its obliging neutrality in my financial relations with the public. Its new intentions seem at present dependent upon conditions which are not compatible with the delicacy of my position. I have nothing left but my labor to pay my creditors. I appeal to your friendship, and I beg you to be so good as to sign and return to me the promise of subscription herewith sent."

M. Philoxene Boyer was at one time a gentleman of easy circumstances of fortune; his father left him a beautiful estate in Normandy worth at least $20,000. Persuaded he was a great genius (he is a man of no inconsiderable talents,) he came up to Paris to acquire fame. Thinking knowledge of life was to be gained by riotous living, (a common error; the greatest masters of the human heart, Shakspeare and Scott, were domestic men of rural tastes,) he wasted his substance with loose men and looser women. He is now steeped in the deepest poverty. A thoughtless fellow met him a few days since, and, eying his rags, said: "My dear Boyer, you do sadly neglect your costume. Can't you at least make new button-holes to your coat?" The prodigal replied with a deep-drawn sigh: "Alas, no, for were I to do that I should next be driven to make a new coat to my button-holes." This poor fellow, though only thirty-four or thirty-five years old, has a head white as snow and a face furrowed as a grandame who had seen her one-hundredth birthday.

There is a sad story whispered in Paris. We heard last week that M. Moller, a Danish poet who had lived for the last fifteen years in Paris, had just died suddenly at Rouen. He was well known here. He was poor; he had ruined his eyes reading by the gaslights of our cafés, and writing in his chamber by candlelight, and was ordered to Normandy to rest and to breathe the country air. He was arrested in Rouen as a lunatic, and sent to a madhouse, where he died in two or three days. it is believed here as much from loss of liberty as from anything else.

M. Louis Ulbach has been repeatedly charged with being the "Abbe X———," author of Le Maudit, etc., and it was said his present name was a pseudonym; he declares: "My name is of a truth my name, and I am very happy to bear it, the only heritage left me by an honest man. I have never been in any theological seminary, and consequently have never worn or torn a cassock. I have never written, suggested, counselled, corrected in any way one single word or line of Le Maudit, etc.

M. Alex. Dumas has signed a new contract with the New Free Press of Vienna to give it a novel drawn from life in Paris for $5,000. He is now at Pesth, from thence he goes to Venice. He made himself supremely ridiculous at Pesth. He delivered his lecture in the Hungarian national costume, which excited roars of laughter.

I have heard two anecdotes about old M. Bossange, the centenarian bookseller and publisher whose death I recently recorded, which I am sure you will read with interest: It was with Bossange that Beaumarchais passed the last night of his life. They were playing chess together when Beaumarchais's body-servant entered the drawing-room and told his master that the hour he had appointed for retiring had struck. The next morning Beaumarchais had an audience with some powerful nobleman, and he told his body-servant during the day: "I want to go to bed to-night at eleven o'clock. When this hour is struck let me know it. If I refuse to go to bed drag me off." Beaumarchais was deeply absorbed in the game of chess, and paid no attention to his servant. The latter insisted. Beaumarchais would not budge. Thereupon the servant knocked over the chess-board and sent the pieces rolling in all directions about the room. Beaumarchais went to bed. When the servant went to call him the next morning, he found his master dead. (How like Thackeray's death!) Bossange was extremely proud of his title of patriarch. He delighted in being old; and in the last years of his life he made himself out older than he was. Sometimes the old woman who waited on him for the last fifty years would say: "Why, Monsieur, you add one to your age; I assure you, you are only ninety-eight." This assertion would make him very angry.

[Paris Correspondent Publishers' Circular.

[For the Californian.]

CARRIE HARRIE.

AWAKE, my muse—too long hast thou
In silent ease been sleeping;
I feel the sacred furor now
Upon my senses creeping:
Give forth thy wildest, sweetest tone,
Be sure there's no mis-carry—
I sing of Beanty's chosen one,
The charming Carrie Harrie.

O, she is "blithe and debonair,"
Of stately form and slender;
A veritable witch, I swear,
Of Shasta, not of Endor:
She witches you with eyes divine,
With looks so soft and winning,
That should you worship at her shrine
I'm sure 'twould be no sinning.

Her voice in rippling sweetness flows—
Like birds' and bees' its music—
Within this town of tender beaux,
Its tones have made a few sick:
You sit and watch her charming way,
You listen to her chatting,
While back and forth her fingers play
With that confounded tatting.

She's very fond of puppy pets,
Of "Beauty," "Floss," and "Button;"
It makes one envious to see
These things her bosom put on:
For them her best endearments go—
All human love seems missing—
For Beauty's ugly face, I vow,
I've often seen her kissing.

She sings, and plays with sweetest arts,
Guitar, piano forte;
With these, upon unwary hearts,
She makes resistless sortie:
In flats and sharps or minor keys,
In tenor or contralto,
She's equally at home in these,
And sometimes sings the Alto.

The grace with which she walks the street
Makes all the women jealous:
The men exclaim, "How very sweet!
Who is she?—pray do tell us."
But, silly men, you need not fret—
She is not "on the marry;"
I fear some graceless fellow's net
Has captured heedless Carrie

But Carrie's not a perfect one—
She's over fond of sleeping:
She seldom sees the rising sun
Within her casement peeping.
Perhaps the lunch she takes at night
Disturbs her rosy slumbers;
Or spectral hearts her soul affright,
Which she has slain in numbers.

Although to work not given much,
Yet with it she's no stranger;
She washes plates, and cups, and such,
And with the broom's "a ranger."
Now in the parlor, now the hall,
And now she sweeps the yard in;
And finally, to crown it all,
She brings up in the garden.

Then, here's to all the ladies fair,
And here's to Carrie Harrie;
Let those who husbands have be true,
And those who haven't, marry.
But all ye tender ones take heed,
For marriage is a lottery.
Where oft you find your happiness
All smashed like fragile pottery.

W.

Apropos of the Stewart libel suit, Harper's Weekly makes some very pertinent remarks concerning the gossipping proclivities of editors and correspondents, closing the article with an amusing illustration of how they might be paid off in their own coin. "An indignant gentleman was speaking of a really cultivated and eminent foreigner who had the most desirable introductions in this country, and when he returned wrote about our most conspicuous men. 'He staid with my friend X,' said the indignant gentleman, 'and in his book he spoke of his personal habits. I should like to speak of his personal habits, and I would inform the world that this prodigious critic allowed himself one shirt a week. On Sunday morning it was clean. Then his waistcoat and coat were thrown fully open. On Monday the waistcoat was closed a little. On Tuesday a little more. On Wednesday the ends of the cravat were suffered to appear over the bosom. On Thursday they quite overspread it. On Friday the waistcoat closed up entirely. On Saturday there was nothing but cravat to be seen. On Sunday there was the full effulgence of the clean shirt again, coat and waistcoat generously thrown open, and an imperceptible cravat.'"

Mr. Squarza, of San Francisco, conspicuously advertises in California papers "Ladies' Tears Punch." This must be the "luxury of woe."—Boudoir.

The Slang of the Pacific Coast.—Mr. Bowles in his new book compiles the slang of California. "Wherever" did our guest sojourn when among us to hear so much of it. Judge Rix would fine him for one word he introduces:

"The slang phrases and idioms, original and in use among the people of these States, are very odd, and some of them quite expressive. Few or none of those I noticed in Colorado are known here. Each section has a set of its own. 'You bet' is one of the most common here; it is a strong affirmation or approval, as the 'That's so' of the East. 'Get' or 'You get' is go, go along, clear out; drivers shout this to their horses. 'Get up and Git,' and 'Get up and Dust,'" are enlarged, emphasized forms of the same. 'You can't prove it by me' is also very common for doubt or disapproval or ignorance; and 'None of it in mine' is declination of proffer, and the like, and was probably borrowed from the declination to take 'bitters' or any extra fillip in one's drink. 'Bilk' stands for a humbug, an imposter, a 'poor coot.' 'On it' is a much-used, condensed, epigrammatic phrase, with varying applications. It signifies, in that line, after something especial, determined, in earnest, and the like. As applied to a woman, it generally means that she is in a wicked way. 'Weaken' and 'To weaken' are very expressive, meaning failing strength, courage or purpose. A man 'weakens' is that he is backing down or backing out. The mines furnish many new phrases: 'Pan out' for turning out or amounting to; as a man will 'pan out' good or bad, or an enterprise 'pans out' much or little. 'Peter out' is coming to nothing, failing, giving out altogether. 'Show' and 'color' come from the evidences of gold found in washing sand, and are applied to persons and things and undertakings. 'Corral,' from the Spanish word for cattle guard or high fence, is applied to catching, cornering, getting into control. Thus I heard a man in Nevada say the Montgomery street brokers had 'corralled' all the stock of a certain mine, and could, therefore, put it up or down as they pleased."

Puffs from the Pulpit.—In an article entitled "Professional Puffery," the Round Table takes the religious journals severely in hand for their delinqueucies in that direction. After arraigning the Independent for printing as its motto at the head of the paper "But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men but God, which trieth our hearts," and then indulging in "discourses" in advocacy of particular piano-forte makers' claims in its editorial columns, the Round Table remarks:

"We find a somewhat kindred illustration in connection with another religious journal, the Christian Advocate and Journal. We believe that this paper is the recognized organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country, and have understood that many of its writers are prominent Christian ministers. We do not think it has been wont to indulge in undignified puffs as have the Independent and the Observer. But it seems that not many months ago a council was held at its publication rooms to investigate charges made against Rev. Dr. Curry, alleging that he had procured an overcoat, a sewing machine, and a melodeon or cabinet organ, by writing certain commendations thereof for the columns of the Advocate and Journal. We also understand that these charges were, in part at least, sustained. It is entirely irrelevant what may have been Dr. Curry's relations to the paper in question. He may have been publisher, editor, or contributor, but that is a matter with which the public have nothing to do. In any case, as a Christian minister, he occupied a position of influence which he was bound to respect. It cannot be that any man or woman anxious for the good name of men holding such honorable posts can approve of the sale of any portion of the columns of a religious weekly to individual interests. To procure an overcoat or sewing machine in this way would hardly be called a dignified proceeding."

We take pleasure in commending the following from a city paper to the attention of our readers:

Photographs Made Perfect—What Next?—It was expected by some who knew not the men, that Bradley & Rulofson, having succeeded in taking three first premiums at the late industrial exhibition in San Francisco, would consider this glory enough, and plod along in the beaten path. Not so—other and greater triumphs were in store for them. It is to the industry and enterprise of this noted firm that San Francisco is indebted for the matchless "Sun Pearls;" and before we have quite recovered from the surprise these beautiful pictures produced, lo! what is this, a carte de visite? No; why, yes it is, but how beautiful! at the bottom is printed "Bradley & Rulofson. Patent applied for." The mystery is explained. San Francisco may well be proud that in these days, and in this land, where every effort is for gain, men can be found who can and will unlock the mysterious beauties of science to astonish and delight an appreciative public. These new pictures may be called enamelled cards, but "enamelled" does not express their beauty in any measure; they are sharper, clearer, brighter, and in every way more beautiful than any we have before seen, and are taken upon a surface having a most brilliant polish, which is at the same time almost as hard as glass, and elastic and pliable as India-rubber. They are impervious to water, yet may be washed and scrubbed without impairing their beauty or durability. No doubt is entertained in the best informed circles that these gentlemen will get all they ask for at the hands of the Patent Commissioners; meantime, we bespeak for them a lively time in furnishing their patrons with this new photographic gem.

John Middleton & Son will sell on Monday next, at 12 o'clock, sixty Homestead Lots lying just south of the Willows. With beautiful location, rich soil, perfect title, and lying easily accessible to two railroads, and right in the pathway of the city's growth, they present rare opportunities to those who wish to purchase Homesteads or invest in property. The terms are very liberal, as will be seen by refering to advertisement.

For the Complexion—That charming skin enamel, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, transparent—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists. *

For the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza. *

OLD MASTER GRUNSEY AND GOODMAN DODD.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON, A. D. 1597.

[An excellent poem is the following old English idyl by William Allingham, which has never been included in any American edition of his works. It is a rare study of Merrie England in the Olden Time:]

G. God save you, Goodman Dodd—a sight to see you!
D. Save you, good Master Grnusey! Sir, how be you?
G. Middlish, thank Heaven. Rare weather for the wheat.
D. Farms will be thirsty, after all this heat.
G. And so is we. Sit down on this here bench:
We'll drink a pot o'yale, mun. Hither, wench!
My service—ha! I'm well enough, i' fegs,
But for this plagney rheum i' both my legs.
Whiles I can't hardly get about: O dear!
D. Thou see'st, we don't get younger every year.
G. Thou'rt a young fellow yet.
D. Well-nigh three-score.
G. I be thy elder fifteen year and more.
Hast any news?
D. Not much. New-Place is sold,
And Willy Shakspeare's bought it, so I'm told.
G. What! little Willy Shakspeare bought the Place?
Lord bless us, how young folks get on apace!
Sir Hugh's great house beside the grammar-school!
This Shakspeare's (take my word upon't) no fool.
I minds him sin' he were so high's my knee;
A stirrin' little mischief chap was he;
One day I cotched him peltin' o' my geese
Below the church: "You let 'en swim in peace, Young dog!" I says, "or I shall fling thee in."
Will was on t'other bank and did but grin,
And call out, "Sir, you come across to here!"
D. I knows old John these five-and-thirty year.
In old times many a cup he made me drink;
But Willy weren't aborn then, I don't think,
Or might a' been a babe on 's mother's arm,
When I did cart 'en fleeces from our farm.
I went a coortin' then, in Avon-Lane,
And tho' bit further, I was always fain
To bring my cart thereby, upon a chance
To catch some foolish little nod or glance,
Or "meet me, Mary, won't 'ee, Charlcote way,
Or down at Clopton Bridge, next holiday?"
Health, Master Grunsey.
G. Thank'ee, friend. 'Tis hot.
We might do warse than call another pot.
Good Mistress Nan! Will Shakspeare, troth, I knew;
A nimble curly-pate, and pretty too,
About the street; he growed an idle lad,
And like enough, 'twas thought, to turn out bad:
I don't justly fairly know, but folk did say
He vexed the Lucys, and so fled away.
D. He's warth as much as Tanner Twigg to day;
And all by plays in Lunnon.
G. Folk talks big;
Will Shakspeare warth as much as Tanner Twigg—
Tut, tut! Is Will a player-man by trade?
D. O' course he is, o' course he is; and made
A wonndy heap o' money too, and bought
A play-house for himself like, out and out;
And makes up plays, beside, for 'en to act;
Tho' I can't tell thee rightly, for a fact,
If out o' books or his own head it be.
We've other work to think on, thee and me.
They say Will's doin' finely, howsomever.
G. Why, Dodd, the little chap was always clever.
I don't know nothing now o' such like toys;
New fashions plenty, mun, sin' we were boys;
We use to ha' rare mummings, puppet-shows,
And Moralties—they can't much better those.
The Death of Judas was a pretty thing,
"So-la! so-la!" the "Divil" used to sing
But time goes on, for sure, and fashion alters.
D. Up at the "Crown," last night, says young Jack Walters,
"Willy's a great man now."
G. A jolterhead!
What does it count for, when all's done and said?
Ah! who'll obey, let Will say "Come" or "Go!"
Such-like as him don't reckon much, I trow,
Sir, they shall travel first, like thee and me;
See Lunnon, to find out what great men be.
Ay, marry, must they. Saints! to see the Court
Take water down to Greenwich; there's fine sport!
Her Highness in her frills and puffs and pearls,
Barons, and lords, and chamberlains, and earls,
So thick as midges round her—look at such
An' thou wouldst talk of greatness! why the touch
Is on their stewards and lackeys, Goodman Dodd,
Who'll hardly answer Shakspeare wi' a nod,
And let him come doffed cap and bended knee.
We knows a trifle, neighbor, thee and me.
D. We may, sir. This here's grand old Stratford brew,
No better yale in Lunnon, search it through.
New-Place ben't no such bargain, when all's don
'Twas dear, I knows it.
G. Thou bought'st better, mun,
At Hoggin Fields: all ain't all alike in skill.
D. Thanks to the Lord above! I've not done ill.
No more has thee, friend Grunsey, in thy trade.
G. So-so. But here's young Will wi' money made,
And money saved; whereon I sets him down,
Say else who likes, a credit to the town;
Though some do shake their heads at player-folk.
D. A very civil man to chat and joke;
I've ofttimes had a bit o' talk wi' Will.
G. How doth old Master Shakspeare?
D. Bravely still.
And so doth madam, too, the comely dame.
G. And Willy's wife—what used to be her name?
D. Why, Hathaway, fro' down by Shottery gate,
I don't think she's so much about o' late.
Their son, thou see'st, the only son they had,
Died last year, and she took ou dreadful bad;
And so the fayther did awhile, I'm told.
This boy o' theirs was nine or ten year old.
—Willy himself may bide here now, mayhap.
G. He always was a clever little chap.
I'm glad o' his luck, an' 'twere for old John's sake.
Your arm, sweet sir. Oh, how my legs do ache!

CHOLERA IN INDIA.

ALTHOUGH I am not a medical man, and not pretending to more knowledge of medicine than is necessary to prescribe a dose of effervescent magnesia to one of my children, few persons have seen more of Asiatic cholera. My first introduction to this fearful scourge I shall never forget. I had just arrived in the north-west provinces in India to join my first regiment. Although not in the presence of an enemy, the station where we were quartered was a new one, and we were still under canvas. Much to my delight, I found among the junior cornets of the corps a young fellow who had been with me at Westminster. When I arrived, he was absent on a month's leave, shooting in the jungles. He left word, however, with a brother officer to look after my comfort, and I was asked to live with this gentleman until I could procure a tent for myself. This I did in a very few days, and, having engaged the requisite servants, began to feel myself quite at home. Early one morning, after I had been present for about a fortnight with the regiment, Johnsone came over to see me. He was a cheery, hearty young fellow; tall, of large make, and up to every kind of manly, healthy exercise. Between leaving school and entering the army, he had spent a year at Cambridge, where he had been in the first boat's crew and the crack eleven cricketers of the college. But his great passion was shooting, and to enjoy the sport of following large game, he had thrown up the prospect of being appointed to a regiment at home, and got himself gazetted to a corps serving in India. I shall never forget him as he sat by my bedside that morning—for I was not up when he arrived—and told me what glorious sport he had had, and how he had, with four other men, brought down, in the month he had been away, three royal tigers, two bears, four or five cheetahs, and "no end" of antelope and such like small deer, besides having taken several "first spears" in hog hunting. Although he had only been a year with the regiment, Johnsone was a great favorite with all his brother officers, as, indeed, a good-tempered, good-hearted young fellow, with plenty of courage, and a capital rider, is sure to be.

It was not the fashion amongst the officers of my regiment of Light Dragoons to indulge in tiffin. We took late breakfasts instead. The day that my friend arrived from his shooting trip, he insisted that I should come over to breakfast with him, both in order to talk over some mutual friends in England, and that he might introduce me to two of the party—one a young civil servant, the other an officer of a native infantry corps—who had been out in the jungle with him. We sat down eight to table, and, although perfectly temperate, a merrier party never assembled. About one o'clock we broke up, every one going to his respective employment or amusement. I remained an hour behind the rest, and smoked an extra cheroot with my old schoolfellow. He spoke of his mother and sisters far away in a pleasant rectory of Lincolnshire, and read me part of a letter he had that morning received from his father, the rector, who seemed to be, and justly so, very proud of his only boy. It is now twenty-five long years since I sat and smoked that cigar with my young friend, but I remember every incident of the hour as if it had been yesterday. I was a young man—a mere lad—just entering life, and how many milestones on the road through this world have I not passed since then? I remember how he broke off rather suddenly, saying he was very sleepy, and would like to take a snooze before evening stables. "Mind you sit next me to-night at mess, old fellow," were his parting words, "and I'll tell you all about how we killed that last boar."

I walked home to my own tent, and wishing as I went that the time would come when, being "dismissed" from riding-school and drill, I should be able to obtain leave of absence and go out on shooting expeditions as my friend Charlie Johnsone did. On reaching my tent, I pulled off coat and waistcoat and lay down, and, feeling very sleepy, told my servant not to let anybody disturb me, but to be sure to call me when the first, or warning, trumpet for stables sounded.

About five o'clock I awoke, and was surprised to see that, instead of the ordinary frock-coat, white overalls, and forage-cap, in which we went to stables every day, my full dress was laid out on a couple of chairs, and my batman, or dragoon servant—himself being clad as if for parade in the scarlet bob-tailed coatee which in those days was our full dress—busy in the verandah polishing up my sword. "What's the matter, Wilson?" said I; "why have you got your full dress on?" "Oh, sir," he said, "there's a full dress parade at six o'clock, for Mr. Johnsone's funeral." I could hardly believe my ears. "Mr. Johnsone's funeral!" I exclaimed, half asleep and half stupefied; "what do you mean?" "Oh, sir," replied the man, "poor Mr. Johnsone died this afternoon from cholera, and his funeral is ordered for six o'clock; here are the orders." As he said this, the orderly corporal of my troop brought me the order-book, in which I read: "The Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding regrets very much to announce the sudden death of Cornet Johnsone, which took place this afternoon from an attack of cholera. The regiment will parade in full dress, with side arms, at six o'clock, to escort the remains of this officer to the grave. A firing party of twenty-five men from F troop will parade, under command of Cornet Williams, at a quarter before six, and will be marched to the tent of the deceased officer."

To read the wording of the order distinctly was impossible, so utterly bewildered did I feel at this most unexpected occurrence. I had just time to dress and reach the parade-ground before the men fell into the ranks, and so had no time to speak to any of my brother-officers until the funeral was over.

It appeared that poor Johnsone had slept for about half an hour, then called his native servant and asked him to go for the doctor, as he felt very unwell. The servant saw at once what was the matter, and ran to the tent of the regimental surgeon, who in five minutes was by the patient's bedside. But although everything that could be done was tried—the surgeon had been many years in India, and had seen many hundred cases of cholera—nothing was of any avail, and in two hours this young man, in the pride of his strength, died in great agony. The heat being very great, and the body being in a terrible state immediately after death, the doctor recommended that it should be buried that evening, and his recommendation was attended to. Strange to say, there was not another case of cholera in our camp when poor Johnsone died, nor did one follow it. Upon inquiry, we found out that two or three nights previously, the poor fellow had been out in the jungles, slept in a village where there was a great deal of cholera, and that five persons had died of the scourge the very evening that he spent at their place. But he could not have slept in the house with any one that had cholera, for he had pitched his tent close to the village, and slept in it as usual. Indeed, it is most unusual in India for any European even to enter a native house, except in extraordinary circumstances, or when the owner happens to be a wealthy man, who makes a point of entertaining Englishmen. In the present instance we could not trace in any way that Johnsone had any intercourse with, or even so much as seen any native who was attacked with cholera, although at the village where he slept there certainly were several cases. But if he caught the infection, how was it that none of the others who were of the same party, and slept the same night at the same village, did not do so? There had been with him in the jungles three officers and one civilian; and what between kitmayars, bearers, masaulchies, beetsies baworchies, syces, grass-cutters, classies, shikarees, cootawallas, and others of the numerous kinds of servants without which respectable Englishmen in the Bengal Presidency are not supposed to move, there could not have been less than fifty people living in the little camp. Yet of these but one individual caught the cholera, and there was not another instance of it amongst poor Johnsone's companions, nor in our camp, where he died. If he had been only seen by some doctor inexperienced in Indian maladies, it might have been thought that the medical man had mistaken his complaint, and that the poor fellow had swallowed poison.

My friend's sudden death had a very serious effect upon me. I spent a sleepless night after it, and next day was laid up with violent fever, which ended by going to my brain. I was sent to the Himalayas on sick leave, but it was only after a sea voyage round the Cape to England, and a sojourn of some twelve months in my native air, that I was able to rejoin my regiment. From the day of poor Johnsone's death, until I was at the headquarters of the corps and fit for duty once more, a period of nearly two years elapsed.

The next experience I had of Asiatic cholera occurred about three years after I had rejoined my regiment, and is so extraordinary that I almost hesitate to tell the story. I had been sent down from one of the far north-west stations of those days to Allahabad, there to take charge of some fifty recruits that had arrived for our regiment from England. They had landed at Calcutta, and had been marched up country to Allahabad, but the officer in charge of them was taken ill, and was ordered back to the Presidency by the medical men, I being sent to relieve him. I reached Allahabad, found everything ready, and started the following morning on our march up country. We got over the regular number of miles every day, and halted every Sunday according to general orders. The weather was cool enough to be agreeable, the two young officers that had come out from England with the recruits were gentlemanly lads, and a very agreeable man, a surgeon of the Company's service who was in medical charge of the party, made up a pleasant dinner-party of four every evening. There was no lack of game—antelope, wild-duck, teal, and partridges—either along the road, or so near that we could get some shooting every day. My order of march was as follows: The reveille bugle sounded every morning at three

A. M. The native cook-boys had strict orders to prepare before that hour a large copper of good strong coffee, so that each man should have his quarter of a pint before starting, and eat a piece of biscuit as he drank it. At four the second bugle sounded, the men fell in, the roll was called, and off we marched at once. For the first hour I always walked at the head of the small column, so as to see that the pace was not too quick, and kept up about three and a half miles an hour. At the end of each hour I halted for ten minutes, and as the marches along the great Trunk Road of the north-west provinces are very seldom more than twelve miles long, I managed always to get the men well under cover of their tents by eight o'clock. At the first halt I always had prepared for the men a drink, of which three-fourths was water, and one-fourth commissariat rum. This was to prevent their drinking the water at the roadside, which is generally most unwholesome. My arrangements proved so far good, that when we arrived at Cawnpore, which is thirty marches from Allahabad, we had only one sick man, and he was laid up with a severe strain. Not wanting the recruits to break loose and get drinking amongst the regiments stationed at Cawnpore, I did not halt there, but pushed on the day after our arrival. I was very anxious to bring the whole party to headquarters without the loss of a single man, and had from previous experience learnt how very easily the most healthy recruits become ill, and how very quickly they die on their way up the country. I thought of nothing, day or night, but how to prevent illness in my detachment. All that our doctor—a most sensible, practical man, with twelve years' experience in the country—recommended I adopted, and for a long time everything went so well that I began to hope we would reach our destination without any serious sickness; but I was doomed to be disappointed.

It must have been four or five days after leaving Cawnpore, and somewhere about a third of the road between that station and Meerut, that the following extraordinary incident occurred. We made the usual halt at the end of the first hour, and whilst the cook-boys were mixing up the grog for the men, some of the latter asked leave to go to a rising ground about twelve hundred yards off, to look at an European monument which was erected there, probably the spot where some unfortunate officer, on his road up the country, had died and been buried. I gave the required leave, and some half dozen recruits started, laughing and joking with each other as they went along. When the ten minutes' halt was ended, I told the bugler to sound, so as to warn them we were about to start, and, as they did not come, I desired him to repeat the call. He did so, but still the men did not come back. I took out my glass to see whether they were there, and saw them all sitting, or lying, down near the monument. The bugler sounded again but they took no notice whatever of the call. One of them seemed to stagger to his feet, move a step or two, and then sit down again. Their conduct appeared so extraordinary, that I at once came to the conclusion that they had somehow or other got hold of liquor, and had drunk themselves stupid. Yet there was not a village, or even a house, anywhere within sight. I at once despatched a sergeant with men to see what was the matter, and a couple of litters or doolies to bring those who were too much intoxicated to walk. To my great astonishment, no sooner did the second party arrive near the monument, than they too sat down—sergeant, recruits, native dooley-bearers and all—and appeared incapable of moving, or at least of standing. I sounded the bugle again, but they made no sign whatever of coming. At last I could see with my glass one of the doolie-bearers making towards us. When he got near enough to speak, he bellowed out that every man that had gone up to the monument was lying sick, vomiting, and being purged. By this time we were all seriously alarmed for the poor fellows. The doctor wanted to go at once and see what was really the matter, but how to bring them back when the doolie-bearers appeared to be all sick, was the question. Fortunately, a party of palkee-bearers who had been carrying some travellers along the road, and were now returning to their own village, passed at this time. I stopped them, and an offer of four annas (sixpence sterling) to each of them to bring the men round the monument as far as the road, was at once accepted. They started off with me, the doctor remaining with the troops to make such arrangements as were possible for the men when we brought them back. On arriving at the monument we found every man there more or less ill, all vomiting, and all showing unmistakable signs of Asiatic cholera. I had hardly dismounted from my horse, when I felt a strong desire to retch, with violent pains about my stomach, and the peculiar sinking feeling which is a sure sign of cholera. Luckily I had with me a flask of brandy, I took a pull at it and felt better, although still unwell. The palkee-bearers at once, by my directions, seized each one a soldier, and carried them down to the rising ground, and then partly dragging, partly carrying them, got the men two or three hundred yards or so towards the road.

The whole affair did not occupy five minutes, from the time I arrived at the monument until the men were well on their way to join the detachment upon the road, and yet even in that short time several of the palkee-bearers complained of feeling ill, and showed unmistakable signs that they were so. To make a long story short, every one of the Europeans that visited the monument—about twelve in number, including myself—were seized with signs of Asiatic cholera, and of these five died before the next morning. Of the men that remained on the road, not one was seized. Those who recovered, did so very slowly, I for one remained exceedingly ill and weak for some days. The eight native doolie-bearers were taken ill, but only two died. Of the palkee-bearers not one was seriously unwell, although all were slightly indisposed.

The third instance of my experiences in cholera vagaries, if I may be allowed the expression, happened in another English cavalry regiment, also stationed in India. I did not belong to the corps, but happened at the time to be on a visit to a friend, who was a captain in it. One Sunday night the men retired as usual to their barrack-rooms, and there was no more idea of cholera in the cantonment than there is to-day of the plague in London. On the Monday morning, I happened to get up and go out into the garden of my friend's house about half an hour after dawn. I heard some person passing along the road, and, looking up, saw the regimental sergeant-major walking very quickly, and with a face that showed plainly something very serious had happened. He went up to the adjutant's house, which was next to my friend's.

I could see that, after he had awoke one of the native servants, the adjutant himself came out in his dressing-gown and spoke to the sergeant-major. In less than five minutes the two were on their way to the commanding officer's quarters, and ten minutes later I saw the hospital sergeant, with a note in his hand, go there also. I then called my friend, who was still asleep, and we went out together to inquire what was the matter. It turned out that during the night no less than thirty-eight men had been taken into the hospital—all ill with the most violent form of Asiatic cholera, and of these six were already dead. The most extraordinary part of the story is, that all the men taken ill had come from two of the barrack-rooms—of which there were sixteen in the lines—and in no other room had there been a single case of sickness.

As might naturally be expected, the colonel and most of the officers were very soon at the hospital ward where the poor fellows were lying ill with cholera. As the morning wore on, about a dozen more men, all from the same rooms, were taken ill, whilst of those already in hospital four or five died. Towards noon there was but one fresh case; but before sunset two more deaths happened. After that there was a slight improvement in those already ill, and, although two more deaths took place the next day, the scourge seemed stopped for the time. On the third day there was one fresh case, but no deaths, and from that time the cholera began to disappear. Many of those that had been taken ill were a long time before they recovered altogether, and some had eventually to be sent home. But the cholera did not attack another man, and, as I learned afterwards, for the next two years there was not a single case of it in the cantonment.

It appeared as if the destroying angel had descended upon the barracks for one night, and had cut off the inhabitants of these two rooms, and no others. From the Sunday night until the Wednesday morning, there were altogether fifty-two men taken ill with cholera, and of these fifteen or sixteen died. The cholera was of the most decided Asiatic kind, the patients turning blue almost immediately after they were taken ill, and writhing in the most intense agony. The strongest men seemed to be the most certain victims to the scourge, and those that recovered were mostly sickly-looking young fellows. As might have been expected, the panic among the men was very great so long as the sickness lasted. But a week after it had disappeared no one seemed to remember its advent.

The two barrack-rooms in which all the cases occurred, were of course emptied out, and the men lodged elsewhere for a time. The rooms were thoroughly investigated by engineers as well as by a medical commission, but nothing in or near them could be found that would in any way account for this fearful visitation. The drainage was certainly bad—or rather, as in the days I speak of, there was no drainage at all about any barracks in India—but it was no worse than that of the others fourteen; the barrack-rooms where the cholera broke out were situated in the very middle of the lines, and were not subject any more or less than the neighboring buildings to the influence of any particular wind.

One more instance of the extraordinary freaks of cholera which I have witnessed in India, and I have done. A brother of mine, then belonging to the Bengal Service, but since dead, was taken very ill with jungle fever in the north-west, and was recommended to proceed down the Indus, and so, by way of Kurrachie and Bombay, to England. I obtained leave to accompany him to the western presidency, and see him safe on board the steamer for Suez. But by the time we arrived in Bombay he felt so much better, that he resolved not to lose his Indian allowances by going home, but to try whether he could not restore himself to health by a sea voyage to China. I wrote to my regiment, and obtained leave again to go on with him to Singapore, where, if better, he would proceed to Hongkong, and I would return to Calcutta. If not recovered, he was to go round with me to the City of Palaces, and there take a passage round the Cape to Europe, as the medical men in Bombay appeared all of opinion that nothing would do him so much good as a long sea voyage. We left Bombay in a sailing vessel, an opium clipper belonging to one of the great Parsee firms. There were four or five other passengers on board, and among them a young officer who had lately exchanged from one of her Majesty's regiments in Bombay to another corps in Australia, and was on his way to China, where he hoped to find some vessel bound to Melbourne. Our ship was a very comfortable vessel, well found in everything, but all the way down the coast we had the most extraordinary light winds, and often calms, which made the voyage extremely tedious. We had been just a fortnight at sea, were out of sight of land, had not touched anywhere, nor had we communicated with any other ship, when the young officer of whom I have spoken was one night taken extremely ill, and the two medical men we had on board—one being the surgeon of the ship, the other a doctor belonging to the Madras army—at once declared him to be suffering from a very bad attack of Asiatic cholera. He lived about twenty-four hours, and then died from exhaustion. The doctors did all they could for him, but almost from the very first his case was declared by them both to be hopeless. It may be easily imagined that even the most courageous amongst us were not a little frightened at what had happened, and fully expected that others would fall victims to the same complaint. The crew of the vessel consisted of native Lascars, the captain and chief officer only being Englishmen, as is usual in ships employed on what is called "the country trade." The day after the young Englishman died, three Lascars were taken ill; of these one died and two recovered. After that, we had not a single case in the ship, and everybody on board enjoyed the most perfect health until we arrived at our destination some three weeks later.

Whilst relating these anecdotes, I have purposely omitted putting forward any theory of my own as to whether the cholera is infectious, or contagious, or both, or neither. In fact, I have no theory to put forth. What I have told in this paper are simply facts that happened in my presence, so to speak, during a prolonged service in the East, and which would almost lead to the conclusion that even of what we call Asiatic cholera there is more than one kind, and that the complaint may be brought on some times quite irrespective of bad drainage, dirty dwellings, or unhealthy food. But, as I said when I began this paper, I am not a medical man, and I leave others to draw their inferences from the instances I have related.

How to Detect Insanity.—In an article on the subject of mental derangement, and the difficulty of detecting it, inasmuch as no real madman will admit that he is insane, the Richmond Despatch relates the following: We recollect to have read several years ago, in a magazine, a review of a work upon insanity, by Sir Henry Halford, in which he treated upon the extreme difficulty of dectecting lunacy when the lunatic was determined to conceal the state of his faculties. Sir Henry had had a wide practice in cases of the kind for more than thirty years, and had seen all manner of tests applied. Among them all he says he never found but one to succeed favorably, and that one was what he calls the "Shakspeare test." It is explained in the address of Hamlet to his mother, when he is endeavoring to remove the impression under which she labored, that he was mad:

> ——"Put me to the test,
> And I the matter will re-word, which madness
> Would gambol from."

To "re-word the matter" is to repeat what he said before. Sir Henry says that no madman can do this; at least he had never seen one that could. Shakspeare, it seems, knew more about madness than all the doctors that had ever treated it. It is probable that this treatise of Sir Henry Halford may be well known to the profession here. If it be, we should think it worth while to apply this test, after reading more about it. The experiment would be curious and harmless, even though it might be productive of no good. Sir Henry Halford was a physician of great learning and skill, and was knighted by George IV. for his profession.

A paper tells the following anecdote of a college student who was distinguished for his address in evading the writing of themes, and palming off the currency of others as his "legal tender." One evening he read a theme of unusual merit; but the professor, as he sat down in the pride of conscious excellence, asked: "Is that original?" "Yes, sir," said the student. "Are you sure of it?" queried the professor, doubtingly. "Why, yes, sir," replied the student, with imperturbable gravity; "it had 'original' over it in the paper I took it from."

A wag in Wisconsin supplied a farmer with four quarts of Hungarian grass-seed last spring, from which the farmer sed about seventeen million comely mullen stalks.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crocell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s, 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 10. 1866.

"NEW YORK OPINION."

IN an article with the above heading the Sacramento Union builds up an argument against the reconstruction policy of President Johnson from the fact that the press of New York city is in favor of it. It is perfectly natural that the Union, contending as it always has for the influence of "inland domesticity" as opposed to the surge and swirl of a "cosmopolitan sea," should place a very light estimate upon the voice of any metropolis when a question of national importance is under discussion, but in this instance the Union carries its bucolic bend beyond bounds, for, ingenious as its argument is, a single, plain, sensible glance at facts dissipates it at once.

The prosperity of the nation is the prosperity of New York. To cite that all the daily journals—with the single exception of the Tribune—"including such commercial sheets as the Evening Post, The Journal of Commerce, and The Commercial Advertiser," pronounce boldly and unqualifiedly for the President's Policy, is to bring forward a fact which does not at all turn to the advantage of the Union's argument. The Tribune always has and probably always will be impracticable. Had its suggestions been followed in the first instance there would have been no war at all, for the "erring sisters" would have been suffered to depart in peace. Had its counsel been followed at a later period the Union would now be disintegrated, the South would stand apart as Independent States, and to the North would attach the crime of having fought for a chimera, of having wasted rivers of blood and millions of money for nothing tangible or obtainable. That New York, through its press, has always chosen to be conservative can scarcely be counted to its discredit. Those who have nothing to lose are proverbially radical and reckless, but the prosperity of the nation is the lifeblood of New York, and it is but natural that when great political changes are contemplated the exponents and interpreters of its opinions should consider seriously and weigh well the consequences before committing themselves irrevocably to any policy. But once decided upon, where will you find a press or a people that have stood truer in the hour of trial. When it became an established fact that war was inevitable it was the throbbing of the great popular heart in New York that caused every nerve of the North to tingle with indignation, calling forth the masses that before were sluggish and slow to move. In that great meeting in Union Square in April 1861, the fire was kindled, and the burning cross, passed from hand to hand, went forth until the remotest Western State—even our own California—was reached. It is little to the dispraise of its press that it stood by McClellan to the last, for it was very slow to endorse him in the beginning. In the country—in the happy pastoral retreats whose judgment in politics the Union so heartily approves—was begotten that clamor and enthusiasm which subsequently came to such a pitiable conclusion. Country editors thirsted for an idol, built one up, and then in a moment of displeasure insisted upon throwing it to the ground before it was fairly determined whether its feet were made of brass or clay. New York simply said, "Wait, it will be lighter by and by, and then we can see things more clearly." The same policy it pursued in reference to the late President. While pastoral throats were hoarse with eulogies of Lincoln because he was a "rail-splitter," the Metropolitan press rested calmly until his competency to his position was established upon a more reliable basis than that muscular accomplishment. Once satisfied upon that point it stood nobly and unwaveringly by him to the end. It must be remembered that it was from the clamor which arose in the country for an onward movement that our first disasters arose, and the "on to Richmond" cry of the Tribune, whose support comes from the country, whose influence is in the country, and whose policy is dictated by the country, has become a watchword and a warning in future military history.

There never yet was a question which had not two sides, and it is quite as easy to be wrong as to be right. Davy Crockett's motto is a good one for nations as well as for individuals. Many expedients were tried before the war was brought to an end, and it probably never would have been brought to an end had every wave of popular feeling been permitted to turn the course of the Administration, or had party leaders been listened to. That the rebellion is now crushed is due to the support which President Lincoln received at the hands of those who very often mistrusted his policy and would have protested against it had not the voice of moderation prevailed. Lincoln did not act alone; behind him stood the old statesman who still stands behind Johnson and to the same extent guides the national councils. Supported by the same strength, why should we not give as much confidence to Johnson as we so implicitly gave to his predecessor. The opinion of Seward, to our thinking, is worthy of some consideration, and so is the voice of the metropolis of the nation, though the Union, in its passion for the truly rural, professes to disregard both.

WHAT IS A BOHEMIAN?

OFTEN we have asked the question: "What is a Bohemian?" but never yet have we had a satisfactory answer, even from those who use the word most—and commonly as a term of reproach. Many of the interior newspapers have correspondents in this city who, when they are at a loss to know what epithet can be snatched like a brickbat from the vocabulary of vituperation, to hurl at the head of any writer with whom they have a private feud or a public quarrel, sum up the whole measure of their ill-will in one word, and call him a Bohemian.

So far as we have been enabled to trace the meaning of the word as intended by those who so frequently use it, the term is a generic one, and applies to all writers who have no regular newspaper connection. The local reporter of a daily newspaper, who conceives that the greatest achievement of literary excellence is to perpetrate a paragraph eulogistic of the cow that has given birth to a calf with two heads—not innocent of envy while he writes that another has been more liberally endorsed by nature than himself—or chronicles the growth of an unusually large pumpkin, the state of the weather, or copies with jocose comments the Police Court Calendar; who thinks that a newspaper connection which obliges him to wear a collar, and write not his own opinions and convictions, but those of his master, at a salary upon which a gentleman would starve to death—for perquisites go to the proprietors in all well-regulated newspaper offices—who imagines that the end and aim of the most exalted human life is to walk through the streets with nose in air like an active terrier, scenting out cases of petty larceny or great burglary, snapping at a case of murder, rape, incest, or any of the more revolting crimes of the calendar, as at a special boon or bone which a kind Providence has thrown in his barren pathway; happy if, in the absence of any more startling incident, he can stumble over a dead cat, or turn up a buried baby with no grave-clothes on—this is generally the individual who, from the position which his peculiar talent has enabled him to achieve, looks down upon the person so unfortunate as to be able to win a living by his pen, and yet preserve his independence of thought and action, who is not subject to be called upon to "go" and "fetch," or snap at the heels, perhaps of a benefactor, at the bidding of a master, and calls him "Bohemian."

From this stand-point, Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, all the geniuses our country ever produced, are Bohemians, for we very much question whether any one of them would have consented to occupy an inferior position upon any daily newspaper, or whether any daily newspaper would have considered their services worth having, even if offered gratuitously. Carlyle in the Alta office, McCauley in the Call office, Irving in the Flag establishment, or Hawthorne—with his kindly humor—in the Bulletin, would all of them be sadly out of place. They would be uncomfortable, and the heads of the proprietors of those journals would probably lie much more uneasily than proverbially do those that wear a crown. Yet these are or were all Bohemians. And there is very little doubt that the Avon Advertiser looked upon Shakspeare as a losel, and that the local reporter of that sheet frequently, in his correspondence for some other provincial journal, mentioned the man whom all eyes since have delighted to honor, as "only a Bohemian."

If to be the possessor of wit and genius is to be a Bohemian, there are few who will object to having the term applied to them. But, if not, if an imputation upon private character, or a reflection upon the status in society of the person alluded to, be intended, it were well enough to have it understood at once, so that all may know whether to construe the appellation as applied to themselves into an honor, or resent it as an insult. As the matter at present stands, to say that a person is a Bohemian seems to convey to the public mind, in a very indefinite way, a sort of vague idea that he is in some manner a rather disreputable member of the body politic. Judge Rix has already decided that "bilk" is an improper word, and that, applied to an individual, it furnishes sufficient ground for bringing the services of the public prosecutor into requisition, if not proper cause of private quarrel. We suggest that he next pass upon the word Bohemian, and define it by statute.

In Paris all who live by their wits—authors and artists especially—are termed Bohemians—gipsies of art. Clever and brilliant, but unreliable, they live a butterfly existence, and some day suddenly vanish from the stage. The wind may have blown them away for all that the great public know, for, though never heard from again, it would puzzle the hand that might wish to strew wild flowers upon their graves to find a grave. Accepting such a definition, Bohemianism can very well obtain in Paris, but in a work-day country like California, where all are pushing for fortunes and crushing, each man his fellow, to death in the race, it cannot very well exist. Here each individual must turn his talent to some practical account, for snatches of song or a few lines rapidly drawn with a pencil do not bring even the few francs to enable the gipsy of art to subsist for a week. And it is very much so all America over. In New York the organization of a corps was attempted, and for a time Pfaff's figured very brilliantly in the imaginations of all who had not access to its subterranean delights, but want and discontent very soon crept into the Pfaffian Paradise; it was discovered that even the literateur could not live in the city or anywhere else without work; the archway under the sidewalk was forsaken, and never again was there any attempt at the engraftment of Parisian Bohemian upon the unfavorable soil of New York. There are few places, probably, upon this continent where the ready pen finds as constant and as profitable employment as in San Francisco. The reward of literary labor is such as to encourage to industry, and we know of no one competent to write acceptably that has not more work furnished ready to his hands than he can attend to—in many cases more than he can undertake with a decent regard for his reputation. Those who write well are paid well, and those who do not are not paid at all. Without making any invidious comparisons, we venture the assertion that among the writers disconnected with any particular press, quite as much talent and cultivation will be found as can be mustered among the reporters and editors of any of the daily journals, and that the income derived from their literary labor is greater. Premising that Bohemianism cannot exist here, we suggest that reporters introduce some other phrase into their repertoire or set up some standard by which we are to know what they mean when they ventilate their favorite expression.

TO BE REPREHENDED.

TOBIN, in his Honeymoon, makes the "Duke" declare:

> The man that lays his hand upon a woman,
> Save in the way of kindness, is a wretch
> Whom 't were base flattery to name a coward.

But it is by no means clear to our mind that it is at all times justifiable for a man to lay his hand upon a woman—especially if that woman be a stranger—even "in the way of kindness."

We allude now, particularly, to the conductors of our street cars. These luminaries of the great railway system seem to take it for granted that they must examine a woman by touch, as they do the bits and quarters that are given them for change, endorsing her by a pat on the back or a rub upon the shoulder, before permitting her to pass into their car. We submit that there is no need of this. Courtesy and easy familiarity of manner are all well enough in their way, but this is "rubbing it in" literally. High as the position is, to be conductor of a street car does not give a man a carte blanche to indulge in little familiarities with the persons of ladies, which, if practiced by any other stranger, nearly as well dressed and quite as good looking, would breed some more indignant rejoinder or reminder than contempt. After the "gentlemanly conductor" has fingered the pennies of passengers who are ignorant that water can be applied for personal purposes as well as for floating ships, or taken the tickets of a dozen patients put out from or going to the Marine Hospital, it is undoubtedly very convenient for him to wipe his hands upon a lady's bodice, or mop them with her back hair; but the lady has a right to put in a protest, and this she never fails to do in an inaudible exclamation, which would not contribute to the smiling self-complacency of the conductor, could he overhear it. Especially when ladies are attended by gentlemen is this official pawing unnecessary, as well as insulting to the escort. All things considered, we think it would be well for the directors of our street railways to add to the regulations so neatly printed and so conspicuously posted in every car, an instruction to their conductors not to smooth out the wrinkles in the back of a lady's dress with their ungloved hands unless the lady especially requests it. The smoke of a good cigar may be a nuisance, but we know that ladies shrink from it less than they do from the clapper-clawing to which they are so unwarrantably subjected. Let conductors slightly change their platform in this particular, remembering that, conductors though they be, ladies are insulated by common consent from rude touch.

NEW BOOKS FROM ROMAN'S

MILLAIS is probably the best bad artist living—or, to say that he is the worst good artist, would express our meaning equally well. For the canons of art he manifests as little regard as a copper-colored Indian would for the steps of a dancing-master. But his pencil is ever busy, and "illustrations by Millais" would sell the worst prose or poetry ever published. A beautiful volume of the illustrations which he has contributed to the various periodicals of the day is before us. In this volume he is seen at his best and at his worst. His illustrations of Tennyson would damage the reputation of any artist of less renown. Other illustrations—"The Finding of Moses," for instance—would add to the reputation of any artist alive. The judgment which placed this picture first in the book is good. Pharaoh's daughter, in befitting robes, bends haughtily forward to examine the waif which the dusky maid, her shapely brown limbs bare and rounding out from the page in their fullness, holds tenderly in her arms. Around her gather the other maids of honor, curiosity in every face, as well beseems the occasion—for a prophet is not turned up in the bull-rushes every day. "The Unjust Judge" is very similarly treated, but the effect is not equal. "Mrs. Ascott's Death-bed" is a sketch carrying a tragedy in every line. "La Fille Bien Gardée" is good; but there are safer guards for young ladies than watch-dogs. Naturally enough, his illustrations of the conceptions of Trollope approach nearer to the spirit of the author than do the ones of Tennyson. Of the latter, "Cleopatra"—"the polished argent of her breast laid bare"—is best. As a specimen of book-making, the volume is all that could be desired, and an ornament to any centre-table.

Alexander Smith, of late years, seems to have laid aside his harp, betaking himself almost solely to that sober instrument, whatever it may be—a spinet, perhaps—by the aid of which prose is evoked. In Oona McQuarrie we have a conclusion to his novel of Alfred Hagart's Household. But Mr. Smith is poetic even in his prose, and a love of nature with the tenderest touches of pathos abound in his book. Alfred Hagart sits before us, a little stiff and pompous, as one of the partners in the house wherein he was so long an employée, and his son Jack works out his own destiny in its regular order. In the quaint character of Miss Kate McQuarrie, we see more and more to enlist our respect and affection, and with the death of that estimable old lady the curtain falls, the last scene being wrought up with a master hand, and inexpressibly affecting. The lover of the sensational order of novel will probably find very little in Oona McQuarrie to admire, but the reader whose taste is unvitiated will thank Alexander Smith for having written it.

We have read Herman, or Young Knighthood, attentively through from beginning to end, and can conscientiously declare that it is a good book. A brief preface by the author states that it was written some eight years since. Why it was suffered to remain so long unpublished we cannot determine. Certainly the moral which it points had better been inculcated when slavery had an existence than now when it is crushed out from the land forever. Written and printed in Boston, the story begins and ends in that city of crooked streets and winding transcendentalisms. Herman loves a young Southern girl—of course she was a great friend of his sister's—but while he is just blossoming out into a promising lawyer he is so indiscreet as to make a speech upon the Fugitive Slave Law, in the course of which he says something which, magnified by the microscopic columns of an uncertain press, Constance Aspenwall—his inamorata—construes into an insult to the South, and flies off in a jiffy. He goes West and she goes South. After fighting through the Border Ruffian imbroglio in Kansas he is wounded and carried to a hut, where the Sisters of Charity tenderly nurse him, and one of these Sisters proves to be his sister's friend and his own love, Constance. Such meetings do not often occur in real life, but writers of fiction must get their separated lovers together somehow. An explanation ensues, but instead of marrying there and then, Herman goes South; and here the second volume comes in. The evils of slavery are shown in a strong light, and after this good work is accomplished, Herman and Constance are happily married. A powerfully written book, its chief fault is its length. In one volume it would have been better. The authorship is attributed to a young lady of New England, the nom de plume of "E. Faxton" appearing on the title page.

Shakspeare's Mental Photographs is one of those little books which somebodies seem to make up every now and then, because they have nothing else to do. It is published as a game—and indeed it does make game of the Master. There are ten questions, and two hundred answers—the answers consisting of snips and shreds from the text of Shakspeare's works. It is curious that Hammond, in his essay on wakefulness, did not prescribe this amusement as a sedative. Imagine a circle of sensible persons sitting around a fireside, the question being, "What style of beauty do you admire?" to which the answer comes:

> "Her hair what color?
> Brown, madam, and her forehead is as low
> As she would wish it."

There is as little appropriateness in all the answers, so far as our observation goes, as there is wit in the questions.

In the preface to her Poems, Annie Marie Spaulding disarms criticism entirely, but the question remains, why did she publish? "To leave a tangible proof of my presence in friendly hearts and homes, when my life shall be folded away in invisibility" scarcely furnishes a sufficient explanation, for manuscript copies of the verses, or a volume printed for private circulation alone, would have accomplished that object. But, let the critics be silent as they please, there are very few of the public who would or could read the volume before us, and call it poetry.

Spenser having shown Sir Walter Raleigh his "Faerie Queen," that appreciative courtier persuaded him to come to London, and enjoy the patronage of the Queen. The poet wended his way thither, but seems to have been very glad to return to his own estate, his court patronage not benefitting him to any remarkable extent. The result he summed up in a poem entitled, "Colin Clout's Come Home Again," and this poem is explained at length by the author of Remarks on the Sonnets of Shakspeare, who also in the Colin Clout volume before us remarks upon the Amoretti Sonnets and some other of the minor poems of Spenser. We do not see the necessity for the book, and assuredly have thus far failed to discover any interest in the hermetic fountain which the author unseals.

[For the Californian.]

SPRING FLOWERS.

"SWEET SPRING! Thou com'st with all thy goodly train, Thy head with flames, thy mantle bright with flowers."

IT has been said that "a prophet has no honor in his own country," and the same may be said of a wild flower or a wild plant—whatever may be the beauty of the one or the symmetry of the other. In comparatively rude states of civilization, just as in early life among those farthest advanced, there is a sort of love of flowers, but it seems to partake of the fleeting nature of the blooms themselves. In very rude states of society, flowers appear to be wholly unheeded, and even when it is a little more advanced, the feathers of a bird are preferred to flowers as a subject of personal decoration. The Pelargoniums, the Ixias, and various other flowers of Southern Africa are almost unrivalled in the brilliancy of their colors, and the flowers of the epideudral orchidaceæ of inter-tropical America are equally remarkable for the singular shapes of all their blossoms, and the varied coloring of many of them.

But notwithstanding these, which are great attractions to the floriculturists, neither the Hottentots and other South American tribes, nor the American Indians, use these flowers for ornamental purposes, or appear to set the smallest value upon them. The fact is that the cultivation of flowers, in the way in which they are now cultivated by the more zealous and skilful growers in Great Britain and other countries where taste is the grand source of enjoyment to all but the vulgar, belongs to a very advanced state of civilization and refinement, being a branch of what are truly denominated the "fine arts;" and a true florist is an artist of a very high class—far higher, indeed, than those who arrogate to themselves more pomp and circumstance.

It is greatly to be regretted that our Spring Flowers have not been more attended to and sought after, both the wild and cultivated varieties. Their great charm consists in their being in full bloom when there is scarcely another blossom in the garden, and, if planted in morasses, whereby the full effect may be given to their beauty.

Almost all Spring flowers, though small, are pretty, and as the Spring is the time when a flower garden is most wanted, if placed in beds or large groups of the same species together they will have a very rich and imposing appearance.

They have other points of interest about them. They are all very hardy and are not injured by those vicissitudes of the Spring weather which so often injure Summer flowers, especially in the early stages of their growth. They require scarcely any attention, so that the cultivator has nothing to do but place them in appropriate situations and leave them there, and they will not fail to grow vigorously and flower well.

But one of the greatest pleasures connected with the cultivation of wild plants, or in fact any kind, is the improvement of them, in size, form, and the beauty of their colors, as well as their habits of growth. Among the many feats of floriculture, that of domesticating and improving the wild gems of the hills and the fields is one of the most satisfactory. In their native localities they are diminutive and inconspicuous, but when introduced to the garden are recipients of the attentions that their more favored rivals have had bestowed upon them, they soon become amplified in all their parts, and are striking objects of interest. The very remarkable changes which wild plants undergo when transferred to the ranks of civilized vegetation show how very versatile they are. The general form is altered, the flowers become enlarged and often doubled, the colors become more intense or entirely changed. These changes are for the most part accidental, but there are many cases in which the tints of the blossoms may be changed by art.

Invested with this power, the true florist may originate many new beauties, and so add to his own resources of pleasure, as well as to those of a like taste. Any of the readers of THE CALIFORNIAN who take a ramble over the hills and fields now, will be well repaid by finding some of the most exquisite gems of the floral world in full bloom: for example, the Dodecatheon Media, or American Cowslip. If this plant were only imported from China or Japan, and exhibited with all the usual parade of novelty, five or ten dollars for a plant would be considered "a good thing;" so with the Eritillarius, or Mountain Tulip—what more beautiful? And the many varieties of the Iris, or Fleur-de-lis, with their magnificent markings; or the golden cups of the Eschscholtzia or California Poppy; or the delicate blue and white flowers of the Nemophila, besides an endless variety of others equally beautiful.

Why is it that the Plaza and the Custom House grounds are not ornamented with some of these native gems? Would they not be appreciated by the "pent-up" city resident who rarely has an opportunity to ramble over the hills and see them in their native habitat? If the reader could see them as they are planted and cared for in the finest grounds and gardens (both public and private) in England and on the Continent, he would have a different opinion of them.

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

March 4th, St. Casimir, Chickweed, (Alsine Media.)
March 5th, St. Adrian, Green Hellebore, (Helborus Viridis.)
March 6th, St. Colette, Lent Lily, (Narcissus Multiplex.)
March 7th, St. Perpetua, Early Daffodil. (Narcissus Simplex.)
March 8th, St. Felix, Jonquil, (Narcissus Lætus.)
March 9th, St. Catherine, Petticoat Daffodil, (Narcissus Bulbocodium.)
March 10th, St. Droctavæus, Upright Chickweed, (Veronica Tryphylus.)

IRIS.

THE London Athenæum severely censures Swinburne's Chastelard. Aside from the sensuousness of the poem and the huge oaths in which the author makes all his dramatis personæ, from the Queen down, indulge, the Athenæum loudly complains of the same fault which we pointed out in a notice of the work some weeks since. To quote the Athenæum: "Although a drama be not authoritative in the sense that history is, it has great power over the emotions and prejudices of mankind. A dramatic poet, therefore, dealing with historical characters, is bound to observe some measure of justice. He will not hastily convert possibilities or floating rumors into direct accusations of the dead, however culpable they may have been, nor, for the sake of a psychological 'study,' prefer new indictments against those who can no longer plead to them." It further objects that Mr. Swinburne's portraiture of Mary Stuart gives no scope for dramatic development, and merely inspires horror, and it notes the baseness of the motive of Chastelard's self-sacrifice. "If Chastelard be remembered at all," says the Athenæum, "it will be solely for its detached beauties of expression. We hope, should we meet Mr. Swinburne again, that he will be able to exhibit Vice without painting a Monster, and to give us a higher type of knightly devotion than an infatuated libertine."

MARK TWAIN, whom the Examiner styles a "humorous comic writer," sailed for Honolulu in the steamer Ajax, on Wednesday last. It is not true that he was escorted to the wharf by an admiring delegation of our police, who wished him a pleasant trip to the Islands but said nothing about his return. A report is current in town that Mark has matrimony in his mind's eye, and that the rich if not lovely Princess Victoria is the object of his designs, but we do not not endorse its truth.

THE Free American is the title of a new weekly paper published under the auspices of George C. Gorham. The way in which it sails into the President is indeed remarkable. It is eminently fitting that this little sheet should be produced, for our city has never been without a weekly or two antagonistic to the Administration. Some were suppressed about the time of President Lincoln's assassination, but the day of arbitrary measures is done. Pitch into the President, George--gore 'im.

GEORGE E. BARNES, of the Morning Call, has gone up country to look after a lucrative mining claim in which he is interested. A few months since, he became impressed with the eternal truth that "there is a placer for the gold where they find it," and accordingly purchased into a placer mine, in Placer county. May his lines always fall in pleasant placers is the wish of his large circle of friends.

"PODGERS" has returned. How he has managed to preserve his youth and beauty so remarkably is a puzzle to his nearest relations—and they live next door to him. We are glad to see his pleasant face once more. To the rumor that he intends to repurchase THE CALIFORNIAN, we attach no importance whatever.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railwuv.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips u day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Oceau House ,8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Monntain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a dny.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroud and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martincz, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer aud stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Souoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Faralloue Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

Tbe Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wisbes to inforn his patrons aud the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated nn the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all tbe modern convenienees attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the Houso. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will findi Hotel nll the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, nnd well ndapted for tbe use nf Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with tbe nnme of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Whnrf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JO'IN KELLY, Jr., fe6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) . CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Largo Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they nre selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
my28 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretoforo.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour tbereafter until 11:30 P. M fe25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of tbe respiratory organs whicb produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from tbe most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They bave received tbe highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cnres Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cnres Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cnres Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, bliud or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cnres Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cnres Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cnres Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cnres Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cnres Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cnres General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cnres Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cnres Sufferings at change of life.....$1.	00
" 33	cnres Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cnres Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, nnd book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!

See that tbe name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 nnd 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great nbility, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For nny one of the Reviews, per nnnum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per nnnum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Repriuts immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $1 a vet, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Wulker street, New York.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
Wine of Pepsine,
OR,
RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPsia, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to tbe formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.

For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Cbronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S
GLUCOLEIN,
A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF
COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST Frencb Brown Cod Liver Oil.

Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eruptations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomacb.

Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoouful of crude oil.

Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any Europeau maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at tbe Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

HOLT'S MAP
OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by

WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

WALTER S. PIERCE,
Pianist,
AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms, No. 26 Montgomery street, opposite the Lick House. fe3-2m

---

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will he spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to tbe Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the bands of our cotemporaries of tbe Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on tbe Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

FAUST CELLAR,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24 3m

---

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
415 WASHINGTON STREET,
nearly opposite the Post Office,
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband · Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By JAMES C. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. Int. rev. stamp. } By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney.

de23-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the above-named estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice, at his residence on the west side of Guerrero street, north of and near Sixteenth street, in said city and county of San Francisco.

JOHN COUCH, Administrator of the estate of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased.

San Francisco, January 30, 1866. I. N. THORNE, fe10 5t Att'y for Administrator.

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy
IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY

will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the

MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only, by

SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fe17-3m San Francisco, Cal.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

FOR GENUINE
Scotch Ginghams,
AND
CHOICE DRESS GOODS,
GO TO
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
ja:3 tf

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24 3m

---

HAMLIN & CROSS.

GEO. HAMLIN.....F. L. CROSS.

DEALERS IN CHEAP PUBLICATIONS,
STATIONERY, BLANK BOOKS,
MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS,

611 Montgomery street, corner of Merchant.
fe24-tf

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MARCH 10th, - - - - SACRAMENTO,
Captain J. M. Cavarly.
(Connecting with COSTA RICA, Captain Maury.)

MARCH 19, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

MARCH 30, - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON THURSDAY, - - - - MARCH 15TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

STEAM COMMUNICATION
WITH THE
SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,
Two Thousand Tons Burthen,
CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON ——, - - - - APRIL —, 1866,
AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequaled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

fe23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,
54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 24 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROFESSOR MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park.
ja30 3m

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,
(Organist of Cavalry Ch'h)
TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 to 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.

Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30 3m

---

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB,
Sole Agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASE and CASKETS.
d3m

SUMMER MOON.

I.

SUMMER MOON, O Summer Moon, across the west you fly,
You gaze on half the earth at once with sweet and steadfast eye;
Summer Moon, O Summer Moon, were I aloft with thee,
I know that I could look upon my boy who sails at sea.

II.

Summer Moon, O Summer Moon, yon throw your silver showers
Upon a glassy sea that lies ronnd shores of fruit and flowers,
The blne tide trembles on the shore, with murmuring as of bees,
And the shadow of the ship lies dark near shades of orange trees.

III.

Summer Moon, O Summer Moon, now wind and storm have fled,
Your light creeps thro' a cabin pane and lights a flaxen head:
He tosses with his lips apart, lies smiling in your gleam,
For underneath his folded lids you put a geutle dream.

IV.

Summer Moon, O Summer Moon, his head is on his arm,
He stirs with balmy breath and sees the moonlight on the Farm,
He stirs and breathes his mother's name, he smiles and sees ouce more
The Moon above, the fields below, the shadow at the door.

V.

Summer Moon, O Summer Moon, across the lift you go,
Far south you gaze and see my Boy, where groves of orange grow!
Summer Moou, O Summer Moon, you turn again to me,
And seem to have the smile of him who sleeps upon the sea.

[Robert Buchanan's "Village Voices."

LIGHTNING PHOTOGRAPHED.

CŒLUM PETIMUS—SCIENTIA!

IF there be an instance where instantaneous modern art, photography, may supply us with new facts, the seizing of the flashes of lightning by the camera will be none of the least. The quickness of the flashes of lightning has been made a form of expression in almost all languages; still, art may be able to arrest and fix them permanently.

To observe, however, and to classify the flashes of atmospheric electricity, terra firma does not seem always the most eligible place of observation, as it may be that the nature and configuration of the country may influence their development. It was therefore a fortuitous occurreuce that, during a sailing in the Mediterranean, a majestic thunder-storm surprised a party of amateurs, ou a fiue summer night, when between Sicily and Malta, being probably at a distance of a hundred miles from auy land: when, therefore, the flashes of lightning arose through a uniform medium, the air and the sea.

Without entering here into a disquisition on the identity of light, electricity, and caloric, in fact, of all dynamic agencies, it is a strange observation that the first-known photographs (light-pictures) were, properly speaking, produced by lightning! The following glaring facts are derived from a late French work:

In 1689, the lightning having struck the steeple of the Church of St. Sauveur de Logny, therc was found impressed ou the cloth of the altar the text of the consecration prayer, contained in an open book which lay close by.

In 1847, at Lugano, a woman, who had been near a place truck by lightning, had impressed ou her leg the image of a bwer growing close by.

In the Bay of Zante a sailor, who was killed by lightning whe sleeping on the side of a ship, had impressed on his left bre t the number 44, which hung engraved on metal close to the ace.

In 853 there was observed in the United States. on the body a man, the imprint of a tree shattered by lightning.

Thes are curious facts, uot to be explained by any of our hitherto alvano-electric theories. Because, as there is no menstru here, except the air, we are at a loss to know by what sub ance these imprints have beeu caused! Under these circ nstances, every addition to electric meteorology will be valu le. In revertiug to observations and sketches of the flash of lightning made on the open sea, we may state first, that, b g on deck, I was at once struck with the beauty and sublimity f the phenomeuon before me, and finding that these flashes h such a variety of form, whenever one had passed away, I ent dowu iuto the cabin to make a slight temporary sketch. When these sketches were, a few days afterwards, recopied, began to have a better insight into and to classify them.

Imagining that rt of the horizon where the lightning took place, as on a larg heatrical curtain of a dark color, the simplest form of elect meteor which appeared thereon was—

A sort of light co scation, or a glore, illumining that vast portion of the horiz which was dark before. I think that, at times, the entire h on was not thus illnminated, but there remained a eircular se ent on the top of the atmosphere in its original darkness. most all the species of real flashes did not begin from the per part of the atmosphere, but all seemed to come from th surface of the sea! With a few transitions, not yet quit ear to me—as, for instance, a sort of electric rain, as it were stead of the former merely luminous coruscation—I arriv ow at what is called:

Forked (arrowed) lightning, and this presented several most characteristic and well-defined species. Some of the flashes were:

Single flash, going np nearly perpendicular.

Single flash, forming a rather flat arc, from one corner of the horizon to the other.

Single flash, ending in an arcuated involution (revolving) into itself.

Two or three distinct flashes, coming from one common centre on the surface of the sea, and taking varions directions.

The Electric Fire-works. A number of forked flashes coming from one centre, and diverging in numerous distinct flashes, all tending upwards.

The Electric Mirage. A half dim clearing up of the whole atmosphere, so as to make perceptible the sombre chaos of the mountains of Sicily, a hundred miles off. This certninly is a splended spectacle, reminding one of the words of Byron:

"Once seen becomes a part of sight."

Here, therefore, would be the beginning of a classification and philosophy of lightning which, after all, must, as every other scientific subject, be attempted and perfected. Our observations refer, of course, only to one locality, one season, one certain night and thunder-storm. From McClintock's Cape Victory, however, to the South Polar Circle, there are many intermediate localities, and we may say natures! Our observations were made during night, and exclude, therefore, the seizing images by present photography. But in reference to day-lightning, it becomes a question whether this could or can be seized. I think it may, under the following circumstances: Lightuing never takes place in glaring sunshine: and in an atmosphere the least dimmed, the electric light is so vivid, that it strikingly shows; and then, certninly, it could or cau be seized. The difficulties may be overcome in the following way:

The cases where lightning takes place in several parts of the compass are rare, and even then, the most interesting could be selected. The New Panoramic Lens includes an angle of one hundred and twenty degrees—in fact, an enormous field of view. Thus, the first difficulty, of embracing a sufficient area of electric activity, will be obviated. The next may seem still more serious—viz., to move the slide of the camera contemporaneons with the electric flash, which may occnpy, perhaps, less than a second. An observation, however, made by Goethe on Vesuvius, may smoothen the difficulty. The German philosopher observed, thnt during the eruption of the volcano which he witnessed, there was a certain well-measurable interval between the single explosions of the crater and the ejaculation of stones nnd scoriæ. In the interval between two such volcanic feverish paroxysms, Goethe went quite close to the brim of the crater. We should be much mistaken if, in the generality of cases, a similar rhythm of electric meteoricity should not take place as well. But the practical part of this qnestion we leave to professional men.

PERSONALITIES OF JOURNALISM.

[We reproduce the following article from the columns of the Round Table. Though written for New York it has excellent and direct application to San Francisco; indeed, the lesson which it inculcates is worthy of heed by the press of the whole State.]

IT cannot have escaped the notice of the readers of our daily papers that the tendency to interweave bitter personalities in controversial articles is on the increase. Not only is a correct taste offended, but often truth is disregarded to an extent that is the more reprehensible because of the means accessible to the writers for ascertaining what the truth is. We do not refer now to the too common practice of imputing unworthy motives to opponents, but to the habit of dragging in names without warrant, or pointing to certain peculiarities of persons which are nobody's business but their own. Country editors of little culture and less sense are expected to violate all the rules of decorum, since those who do so are too ignorant to know better; but for the writers on the papers in the large cities no such plea can be entered. Hardly a day passes bnt we find instances of these violations of decency in the journals of this city, as well as in those that come to us from Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and other large cities. A stranger reading the issues of these papers for a week would be slow to believe thnt their editors claimed to be gentlemen who would resent as a personal injury the slightest hint that they were not. We do not refer to the low scurrilities of the Herald about the editors of its cotemporaries, for one is not more surprised by them than he would be at hearing profanity in the Sixth Ward; but we have in mind personalities of another sort which appear in journals that circulate among and claim to represent the sentiments of the better portion of the community.

An illustration will perhaps best explain our meaning. It is the practice of most newspapers that undertake to animadvert upon the New York Tribune to attack Mr. Horace Greeley by name, instead of confining their strictures to the journal of which he happens to be the editor. This, of course, opens the way for the meanest personalities, and the public is served with criticisms upon that gentleman's peculiar style of dress, his mode of living, and, oft-times, epithets are attached to his name such as no person would use in private conversation with him. There may be those who solemnly believe that every line in the Tribune, including advertisements, is written by its chief editor, but they do not live in this city, and, least of all, are they writers for the press. One journal in particular is fond of inviting the Tribune to a calm discussion of some particular topic of public interest, yet no sooner does the Tribune accept the invitation, and venture to state in a temperate manner its reasons for differing with its cotemporary, than the latter flies at Mr. Greeley in person, and belabors him with language which, to say the least, is sadly out of place. Our readers need not infer from this reference to the Tribune that we regard it as only the victim of its rivals; on the contrary, there is scarcely a newspaper in the country that is more reprehensible for the personal animosity with which it attacks its opponents than this very journal. We merely cited it as an instance of the practice under review. In a similar way, Mr. Bryant is blamed for what appears in the Evening Post; Mr. Raymond is attacked for the utterances of the Times; criticisms on the World are frequently put into the form of diatribes against Mr. Marble; and out of the city, prominent journalists, like George D. Prentice, Charles A. Dana, and John W. Forney, are almost always selected as the targets at which the newspapers let fly their missiles, instead of the papers of which these gentlemen are the editors. Surely this is not true journalistic courtesy. It is not even decency.

The limits of criticism seem to us so plain that we are surprised that any practiced journalist should overstep them. A newspaper is a legitimate subject for comment, favorable or adverse; but not so with its editor or editors. The views advanced by an editorial writer in a journal are written as the utterances of the journal, and are given to the world as such. It is no one's business who the writer is, how he lives, what he wears, or what opinions he holds upon questions not discussed in his paper. His responsibility to the public or his cotemporaries as a journalist is confined to his journal. To go behind the impersonality of a paper is too mean a thing for any honorable man to do. For example, it is one thing for a newspaper to criticise the Observer, or to animadvert upon any article printed in it; but to go back of the paper and attack by name Messrs. Morse and Prime, or any other gentleman known to be attached to the paper, is quite a different thing. Whatever a man may write and publish over his own name, he may justly be held personally responsible for, but the press has nothing to do with him in person except in such a case as this. One paper may criticize another as scathingly as the English language may allow, and yet keep within the bounds of propriety; but it has no right to go further and assail the editor of that paper in his private character. Mr. Raymond is not the Times, nor Mr. Greeley the Tribune, nor Mr. Bryant the Post, nor Mr. Tilton the Independent. Each of these gentlemen may be legitimate objects of criticism for what they may do in public outside of their papers, but not for what they may say through the medium of those papers. And so of every editor and every journal in the country; each newspaper has a personality of its own, irrespective of its editor or editors, and no other paper claiming to act honorably will ever ignore that in order to assail its editor in person.

The same rule applies to criticism in general. The critic may say what he please of an author as an author, but no more. The style, the manner in which the work has been done, the author's fitness or unfitness for the task—these are legitimate subjects for review; but his manner of life, his views upon matters not related to the work under consideration, his private affairs—with none of these particulars has the critic any business. In a word, a man may be publicly criticized upon his relations to the public, but no further. Strictures within these limits upon an author as well as his works do not overstep propriety. They are perfectly admissible. But animadversions upon his private character, though it be anything but reputable, have no place in honorable criticism.

These views are expressed because of the very loose notions upon criticism which seem to prevail at the present time. Nothing is so spicy as personality, yet nothing is more dangerous. Young critics, especially, are prone to yield to the temptation to say a sharp thing of a person, when, in truth, they have no business to do anything of the kind. On the other hand, there is a class of persons who err in the opposite extreme, and wax indignant over the mere mention of a person's name by a journal unless by way of compliment. They, too, are wrong. Within the limits already defined the use of names is perfectly proper, but beyond those limits those names should be held sacred; and when the line of demarkation between honorable criticism and personal abuse is so clearly defined, whoever transgresses it should receive the sternest reprobation.

OUR friend the Flag, in its advertisements, says: "Address D. O. McCarthy, 528 Montgomery street." We were under the impression that the editor had changed his address lately.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.

J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomory.

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Starke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.

Marcus Pezold, 46 Second street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulvermau, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.

Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner Bush.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearuy.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third

FANCY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS.

Wm. Brown & Co, 16 Third street.

FURNITURE.

N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pierce, 415, 417 and 419 California street

GROCERS.

Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co, N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Instituto, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
W. H. Pillnor & Hunter, Gallery 14 Second street.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjuy & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Kretschman, Third and Missien.
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Sparza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hand, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent penman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

REV. P. V. VEEDER,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. PELTON,
Superinteudent Public Schools.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginniug to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the language. The Babbitonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washiugton street, near Kearny.

Read the following letter:

SAN FRANCISCO, February 12, 1866.

DR. P. HOWARD—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with Rheumatism for seven years; a great part of the time I was unable to do anything, and my ankle would swell to such an extent that I could not wear a boot. I tried every known remedy, and many Physicians who would insist on my confining myself to my room; but it was of no use: I only became worse and almost discouraged. I accidentally saw one of your bills, and although I had little confidence in your remedy, I commenced using it, and you may judge of my surprise when, after using it three days, I was able to go to work. I am now as well as ever I was in my life, and I have not lost any time while taking your remedy, except the first three days.

In order to benefit others, and to assure you of my gratitude, you may publish this if you think proper to do so.

Your friend,
R. W. MABERY, 120 Natoma street.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S MEDICAL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furuished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

MANY OF THE DISEASES which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. BENTON, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

ON THE "QUI VIVE."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. HOMBERGER & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. —Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

ASTROLOGY.—The occult sciences of the middle ages, magic, alchemy, necromancy, and star reading, are not lost to the world. The invisible and secret powers of astrography are still possessed by the chosen student in the mysteries of nature who can interpret the influence of the stars and predict by their occultations the hidden events of the future.

In affairs of Past, Present or Future, be they of Business, Matrimony, Love, or sickness, go and consult the naturally gifted Astrologer, Professor Cohen, 530 California street. Thousands have been benefitted by his knowledge. He has held over 18,000 consultations during the last five years. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 1 P. M., and from 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Consultation fee, $2; by letter, $3, with chart. Sickness treated and cured through a science unknown to others.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

NEW BOOKS
JUST RECEIVED AT
A. ROMAN & CO.'S.

Across the Continent: A Summer's Journey to the Rocky Mountains, the Mormons, and the Pacific States, with Speaker Colfax: By Samuel Bowles, Editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
Winnifred Bertram, and the World She Lived In. By the author of "The Schonberg-Cotta Family."
Personal Reminiscences of the Life and Times of Rev Gardner Spring, D. D., with Portrait.
The Pilgrim's Wallet; or Scraps of Travel gathered in England, France and Germany. By Gilbert Haven.
A Spinster's Story. By M. A. F.
Tales, Romances and Extravaganzas. By Thomas Hood.
A Summer in Skye. By Alexander Smith.
Winning his Way. By "Carleton"
The Letters of Mozart. Translated by Lady Wallace.
The Freedman's Book. By L. Maria Child.
A Biography of Richard Cobden: By John McGilchrist.
Herman: or Young Knighthood. By E. Foxton.
Later Lyrics. By Julia Ward Howe.
Country Love vs. City Flirtation; or Ten Chapters from the Story of a Life. Reduced to Rhyme, for Convenience Sake, by H. T. Sperry.
Fighting Joe; or, The Fortunes of a Staff Officer. By Oliver Optic.
The Privateersman. By Captain Marryat, R. N.
The Dutch Pilgrim Fathers. By Edward Hopper.
DeVane; a Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.
Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. By J. G. Holland.
The Prince of Kashna; a West Indian Story. By Richard H Kimball.

COMPLETE SETS OF
Bohn's Celebrated Libraries.

We have on hand the largest stock of Standard, Miscellaneous
AND
LIBRARY BOOKS
TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.
A. ROMAN & CO.,
fe2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with movable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

1866. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,

THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP ESTablishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co., PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential.

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,
de16 3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

I do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

NOTICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

FAIRBANK'S STANDARD SCALES.

Every HOUSEKEEPER should have a reliable SCALE in the PANTRY to use in testing the weight of ARTICLES purchased from the BUTCHER and GROCER.

See samples of all sizes at Salesroom.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
mar4 1m 334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3 3m

---

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

NEW TYPE.

STERETT'S STEAM PRINTING HOUSE, 533 CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NEW PIANOS FOR SALE AND TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,
AT
Kohler's Music Store,
No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.
fc20-1m

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,
CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

---

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN
Stoves and Tin Ware,
422 KEARNEY STREET
BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,
SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES
de28 3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF,

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

fe2 SAN FRANCISCO,

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

J. PEIRCE, Furniture and Bedding WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16 3m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President
fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
de30 3m San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI, COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,
(A few doors above Kearney,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

fe10-3m

THE EXCELSIOR HAT

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Paris, New York and London

STYLES FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER, 1866,

WILL BE INTRODUCED

Saturday, - - - - March 3,

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 535 and 637 Commercial street..San Francisco
No. 125 J street.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second streets.....Marysville

Our style in MOLESKIN for this season is, we feel confident, the SUPERLATIVE OF ELEGANCE AND FINISH; our MERINO PINAUD and ST. CLOUD the most successful result of Parisian taste. Especial attention also deserve our Chelsea, Chester, Crescent, Newport, Derby, and Clarendon Resorts.

CALL AND SEE THEM. mar4-1m

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,

AND

Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE

TO THE

CLIFF HOUSE

TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. ja27-t

---

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitoulan System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,

de9 3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

No. 141 Broadway, New York,

FOR INSURING AGAINST

Accidents of All Kinds!

CASH CAPITAL, - - - - - $250,000

THE BUSINESS OF THIS COMPANY is the insuring against accidents of all kinds, whether by travelling or otherwise.

This Company issues two classes of policies: one to secure the payment of a fixed sum to the event of death caused by an accident of any description; the other securing a weekly allowance in case of injury causing total disablement, and a fixed sum in case of death arising as above.

Annual Premium on $2,500.....$7 50
Annual Premium on 5,000.....15 00
Annual Premium on 10,000.....30 00
(Without compensation.)
Annual Premium on $2,500, with $12 50 per week compensation.....12 50
Annual Premium on $5,000 with $25 per week compensation.....25 00
Annual Premium on $10,000, with $50 00 per week compensation.....50 00

Other amounts at corresponding rates.
No policy to exceed $10,000.

GENERAL ACCIDENTS

Include the Traveling Risk, and also all forms of Dislocations, Broken Bones, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Gunshot Wounds, Burns and Scalds, Bites of Dogs, Assaults by Burglars, Robbers or Murderers—the Action of Lightning or Sunstroke, the Effects of Explosions, Floods, and Suffocations by Drowning or Choking; where such Accidental Injury is the cause of death within three months of the happening of the injury, or of total disability to follow his usual avocations.

INDUCEMENTS.

The rates of premiums are very low.
The plan is so simple that any one can comprehend all its workings.

No Medical Examination is Required.

Any who have been rejected by Life Companies, in consequence of hereditary or other diseases, can effect insurance in this Company at a very small cost.

IMPORTANT TO TRAVELLERS!

REMEMBER THE WASHOE, YOSEMITE, THE GOLDEN GATE AND BROTHER JONATHAN.

Persons about to visit Europe or New York can obtain Insurance against the Risks of the Voyage.

PREMIUM—Two Dollars per One Thousand Dollars.

GENERAL ACCIDENT TICKETS (Including the Travelling Risk)

ISSUED BY ALL AGENTS. $5,000 for 24 hours, 25c. Weekly Compensation, $25.

Four days.....$1
Eight Days.....2
Twelve Days.....3
Twenty Days.....
Thirty Days.....5

Covering $5,000 against death, with $25 per week in case of disability by reason of accident, by the

NEW YORK ACCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

141 Broadway, N. Y.

BIGELOW & BROTHER, AGENTS,

NORTHWEST CORNER MONTGOMERY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,

de16 3m San Francisco.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,

ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

ma12 3m

THE

MUTUAL

Life Insurance Company

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED 1842.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

AN EXAMPLE OF THE

DIVIDENDS OF 1866.

POLICY NO. 33,321,

FOR

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!

Issued in San Francisco, August 22, 1864.

The amount Premium paid thereon in one year was $304 40.

The Amount of Dividend for one year to August 22, 1865, was $539 62,

Being $235 22 More than am't Premium paid,

Making the amount of Policy on August 22, 1865,

$10,539 62!

If the Dividend is used in payment of Premium, instead of being added to the Policy, the next payment required will be

Only $88 22,

instead of $304 40.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF

Policies Issued in 1864.

Amount Policy.	Premiums paid One Year.	Dividends One Year.
$10,000	$220 80	$394 77
5,000	120 72	237 27
2,500	87 40	141 80
1,000	21 70	39 48

ALL THE PROFITS OF THE COMPANY ARE

DIVIDED ANNUALLY,

AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS,

AND

CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS, OR ADDED TO THE POLICY, AT THE OPTION OF THE ASSURED,

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

LIFE POLICIES ISSUED,

PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.

AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES issued, paid up in Ten Years or otherwise.

CHILDREN'S ENDOWMENT POLICIES, Etc.

H. S. HOMANS,

General Agent for California, Oregon, and Nevada.

No. 609 Clay street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—Holders of Policies issued through this Agency in 1864 can ascertain the amount of their Dividends upon application to the General Agent, and the Amount of Dividends on Policies issued in 1865 as soon as received.

fe17-1m

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - - $10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - - 11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - - 2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, - $75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

NATIONAL

Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE.

Brannan's Express Building,

402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)

PERMANENT OFFICE,

(After March 1st,)

408 Montgomery street,

Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,

Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends declared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTIBLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.

STEPH. T. KING,

General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,

712 Montgomery street,

fe24-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

GRAND MATINEE:
AT HALF PRICES, Commencing at 2 o'clock,

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, MARCH 10.

FIRST REPRESENTATION of the Long-Talked of and most Perfect Operatic, Spectacular, Diabolical, Terpsichorean, Farcical Burletta in Three Acts, entitled the

Seven Sisters,

produced with THE FULL STRENGTH OF THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY, and a

Grand CORPS DE BALLET of
FIFTY YOUNG LADIES AND MISSES!

In the First Act,
GRAND ZOUAVE MARCH, DRILL, AND TABLEAUX, BY THE FEMININE CORPS DE ZOUAVES.

The Second Act, catitled
THE ALLEGORY OF THE UNION,
written by W. LEMAN, at the request of Mr. Maguire, expressly for this Theatre, comprises
Ten Grand National Tableaux

The piece concludes with a
GRAND TRANSFORMATION SCENE
IN THE BOWER OF FERNS!
Forming the most Gorgeous Spectacular Representation ever produced in San Francisco.

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NEW GOODS! NEW GOODS!

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

WILL OPEN

On Monday, March 12th,

EXTENSIVE INVOICES OF
NEW STYLE
SPRING DRESS GOODS!

AND WILL ALSO OFFER ALL KINDS OF

DOMESTIC GOODS,
DRESS GOODS,
LINEN GOODS,
SHEETINGS,
SHIRTINGS,
PRINTS,
ETC.,

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

See our Advertisement in Daily Papers.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
mar10 Lick House Block.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flaage Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED,
mar10 3m SAMUEL WHITE.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
a27-tf between California and Pine.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - , - - - MARCH 3,
BY McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
fe19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

TO THE SICK AND AFFLICTED.—We can honestly recommend those who are suffering from diseases of long standing, or from the use of mercury, to call at the Electric Medical Institute. The system practiced by Dr. Howard and his associates is the most sensible we have heard advocated. If there is anything that deserves the name of humbug, it is that which claims to cure every disease with one remedy or system. It would not be more ridiculous if Dr. Howard's Rheumatic remedy was advertised as a cure-all. In diseases peculiar to females Dr. Howard has no superior; particularly in chronic irregularities he is unsurpassed by any other physician in the State. We are personally acquainted with a number of ladies who have been restored to health at the institute, notwitstanding their complaints being pronounced incurable by some of the best physicians in the city. To all who need the assistance of a physician, we would say, call at the Electric Medical Institute, 648 Washington street, before going elsewhere. In Dr. Howard you will find a gentleman who is worthy of your confidence.—S. F. Irish People.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27 tf between California and Pine.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL
Auctioneers.

Office and Salesroom, No. 404 Montgomery street, one door from the northeast corner of California and Montgomery.

W. W. LAWTON.....Notary Public.

LARGE AND IMPORTANT
CREDIT SALE
OF
Homestead Lots at Auction!

MONDAY, - - MARCH 12, 1866,
AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON,
SIXTY HOMESTEAD LOTS ON THE Market Street Railroad.

We will sell at Auction, on easy terms, 60 Homestead Lots, situate on the line of the Market street Railroad, south and west from the Willows.

The property to be sold comprises some of the most beautifully located lots in that part of the city. They command a fine view, and can be improved without any expense for grading. The Lots are within fifty yards of the Market street Railroad. The soil is good, and would make fine Gardens.

☞ Maps of this property, showing location and full particulars, are now ready at the office of the Auctioneers.

Title—United States Patent.

TERMS: One-half cash, one-half in one year at one per cent per month interest, secured by mortgage.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,
mar3 Auctioneers.

FOR GENUINE
Scotch Ginghams,
AND
CHOICE DRESS GOODS,
GO TO
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
fe23 tf

CHARLES F. RIEHN,
OF Riehn, Hemme & Co.,
ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5 3m

---

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.—We call the particular attention of our readers to the advertisement of Dr. P. Howard, in another column. It gives us pleasure to recommend to those who need the assistance of a physician, the valuable services of Dr. P. Howard and his associates. In a city like San Francisco, where there are so many disreputable concerns, it is gratifying to find one worthy of the confidence and patronage of the people. At the Electric Medical and Surgical Institute, 648 Washington street, the gentlemen conducting it are eminently qualified, and the system they practice is based on sound and philosophical principles, comprising within itself the Hydropathic and Electropathic systems, and the Electric practice of medicines. To the ladies we can recommend the Electric system as particularly adapted to their delicate constitutions. The rooms are fitted up in splendid style, and the Bathroom is large and convenient. Their Electropathic instrument is one of the best we have ever seen, having six different currents of great power, yet so well controlled and regulated that it can be applied to the most delicate. The numerous patients throaging the Institute, and their happy faces, speak volumes in its favor. The best surgical skill is also to be found at the Institute. In fact, we are satisfied that there is more scientific attainment than at any other Institute in the State. Dr. P. Howard was, in former years, the proprietor of the Electropathic Institute, and established for it a reputation second only to the Eclectic Institute. Being compelled to visit Mexico on business, the Institute passed into other hands. Dr. P. Howard has been long and favorably known, and to those who are in need of the services of a physician we recommend him as in every way worthy of their confidence.—S. F. Irish News.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. INGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE
Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

HEREAFTER, 15TH OF EVERY MONTH.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA.

ON THURSDAY, - - - - MARCH 15TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No. 16. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 17, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- A Slight Mistake.—By Inigo.
- Two Poets Discussed.—By "Pro and Con."
- Raising Plants from Seeds.—By "Iris."
- A Voice from Yuba.
- Howe Long? Howe Long?

POETRY:
- Eatin' of the Green—A Parody.

NEW BOOKS:
- A Review of Recent Publications.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

SELECTED:
- Aboard the "Promised Land." The Barrister and the Murdress.
- The Confessions of Puff—A Parisian Journalist on "complimentary" Advertising.
- Hints About Horses, their Traits, their Preferences, and how they should be Treated.—By O'Dowd

POETRY:
- Earl Halden's Daughter.—By Chas Kingsley.
- Noble Sisters.—By C. Rossetti.

"THE EATIN' OF THE GREEN."

[THE author having had numerous requests for copies of the following parody upon "Wearin' of the Green," adopts publication as the easiest way of complying with the wishes of his friends. And this being St. Patrick's Day, the verses may not be inappropriate to the occasion. Unfortunately, however, Dan Setchell's irresistibly droll singing of the parody cannot be published.]

OH, Paddy dear, and did you hear, the news is goin' round?
The dandelion's forbid, bedad, to grow upon the ground.
For with the boys you see, forbye, it isn't all serene—
They've had a wholesome warnin' 'gin Eatin' of the Green.
I met wid Doctor Murphy, and he tuk me by the fist,
And he said, How's your ould stomach? and I said, Hould your whist!
She's the most distressful stomach that ever was foreseen,
And they're doctorin' people everywhere for Eatin' of the Green.

Then since the victual we must eat is England's bloody beef,
They can't do less than give us quills to pick our blarsted teeth;
We'd much prefer for diet, tail duck and broiled sea bass,
Boned turkey—faith, we'd bone it—and a patty fois de grass;
Then we'd take the praties from the pot and feed 'em to the pig,
And he would root among 'em, and think he'd something big,
But still in out new diet objection would be seen:
In that same grass they'd say we were still Eatin' of the Green.

But if at last the doctors will not feed us as we please,
We'll pack our duds and dudiheens, and go beyond the seas.
I've heard of California, where people never die,
And earthquakes are not dangerous—unless the papers lie;
Where the pigs are fed on chestnuts, and the sheep are fed on hay,
And the beans to go along wid 'em is just as cheap as they;
Where the bloody Beef of England gives place to pork and beans,
And where folks live until they die still Eatin' of the Greens.

[From C. H. Webb's Burlesque of "Arrah-na-Poke.

THE new toy called Pharaoh's serpents seems to be a dangerous customer. According to a report read by Dr. Macadam before the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, they are composed of a highly dangerous and poisonous substance called the sulpho-cyanide of mercury. The material is a double-headed poisoned arrow, for it contains two poisonous ingredients, namely, mercury and sulpho-cyanic acid, either of which will kill. Experiments having been made upon the lower animals, it has been found that one-half of a sixpenny Pharoah's serpent is sufficient to poison a large-sized rabbit in an hour and three-quarters. A less dose also destroys life, but takes longer to do so. The toy, therefore, is much too deadly to be regarded as merely amusing; and seeing that it can be purchased by every school-boy, and brought home to the nursery, it is rather alarming to think that there is enough of poison in one of the serpents to destroy the life of several children; and the more so that the so-called Pharaoh's serpent is covered with bright tinfoil, and much resembles in outward appearance a piece of chocolate or a comfit.

ACCORDING to a supplement to the Copyright Act, authors and artists must now send copies of their works to the Library of Congress in order to make the copyright valid. Formerly, to place the title-page on record was enough, but in the present Congressional muddle probably the members can no longer "read their titles clear." A cheaper way of filling their Library, Congress could not well devise.

[For the Californian.]

RAISING PLANTS FROM SEEDS.

THERE are two ways in general of enjoying flowers. Some persons delight in having them merely for their beauty, others for a real love of them, liking to take care of them and delighting to see them grow. The first taste is soon satisfied by buying a few plants now and then. The second is still more inexpensive, but in gratifying it we give time and pains to our floral pets, and, by noting as we learn to do, the plants that accord, those that are easily grown, and those that we mostly care for, our enjoyment becomes vastly greater. The poorest and darkest room can thus find some plants to lighten it, and the gayest and gaudiest drawing-room can find some to tone it down and touch it with their refinement.

There is something extremely charming to the mind of the amateur in being able to point to some special plant and declare that he grew it. There is no need to go over all the arguments to prove that it is possible to grow flowers without a range of gardens. There are not now many houses in which some plants do not find shelter, and every year the variegated plant stands, and the flower-filled windows and balconies become more numerous. It is a noteworthy fact that tastes, as well as rules, simplify. Every year in which we grow plants, our stands and beds of flowers become more self-tinted. More than one or two colors are perfectly lost for ornament, just as the loveliest trees bear masses of one tint only. In plant treatment as in many other things in life, we learn much more by a little experience than by any amount of hearsay. The absolute advantage of watering with warm water, which makes us come at last to regard cold as sheer poison, the scorching and burning tendency of sunshine on frost-touched leaves, and the equal blasting of tender green leaves in cold draughts, the wonders of proper drainage, the benefits of moist air, and at the same time its harm and danger when applied to plants like the geranium, which absolutely require such dryness as will allow their leaves to respire freely—these things all dawn upon one, and become solid capital.

To the true lover of floriculture, there is no branch of it so interesting and fascinating as the raising of new kinds and varieties from the seed. Take a packet of seed of the verbenas, petunias, portulaccas, pansies, carnations, or anything of that kind, and watch the results of its products.

As soon as they begin to appear above the surface of the ground, each plant is examined and compared with others to see if there is any difference in their habit of growth; and then, when the blooms begin to open, with what interest each unfolding flower is scanned, every shade, and tint, and marking is criticized. Is it not pleasing to watch the growth of some handsome plant from the time it just peeps above the ground till it arrives at full maturity, and do not its beautifully colored and elegantly-formed flowers amply repay one for all trouble?

Again, what can afford a more interesting recreation and relief from the duties of the day than the care and attention bestowed on some favorite plants. The study and culture of flowers is instructive. Who can look upon a flower, examine its curious construction, and notice minutely its various parts, without being filled with admiration and being convinced that "it is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes" We are told that "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these," and yet they were not sent for man's actual want, but simply to render his sojourn here more pleasant than it would otherwise have been.

"Shall I sing of happy hours Numbered by opening and closing flowers?"

Everything connected with flowers imparts gracefulness to the mind, delicacy to the thought, elegance and refinement to the imagination, and to these advantages we may add goodness and benevolence to the heart. The late A. J. Downing, in writing on this subject, asks, "What is the reason American ladies do not love to work in their gardens?" It is of no use whatever that some fifty or a hundred of our fair readers say, "we do." We have carefully studied the matter, until convinced beyond all contradiction that they do not. They may love to "potter" a little. Three or four times a year, in the spring, they take a fancy to examine the color of the soil a few inches below the surface; they sow a few seeds and plant a few roots, and it is all over.

Love flowers with all their hearts they certainly do. Few things are more enchanting to them than a fine garden; and bouquets on their centre tables are positive necessities with every lady; but our wives and daughters only love gardens as the French love them—for the results. They love to walk through them, they enjoy the beauty and perfume of their products, but only as amateurs. They know no more of the intense enjoyment of her who plans, creates, and daily watches the growth of those gardens or flowers—no more of that absolute, living enjoyment which the English have in out-door pursuits—than a mere amateur who goes through a fine gallery of pictures knows of the intensified emotions which the painters of those pictures experienced in their souls when they gazed on the gradual growth and perfect splendor of their finest masterpieces. We would convince them that only to pluck the full bloom flower is like a first introduction to it, compared with the life-long friendship of its mistress, who has nursed it from its first two leaves, and that the real zest of our enjoyment of nature, even in a garden, lies in our looking at her, not like a spectator who admires, but like a dear and intimate friend who loves. After long intimacy she reveals sweets wholly hidden from those who only come to her in full dress and in the attitude of formal visitors. If any wish to know how completely and intensely English women enter into the spirit of gardening, they have only to watch the wife of the most humble artisan, who settles in any of our cities. She not only has a stand of flowers, but her yard is a perfect curiosity-shop of botanical rarities. She is never done with training and watering and caring for them. Comparing them with the neglected and weak specimens in the gardens of her neighbors, one might be tempted to believe that they had been magnetized by the charm of the personal fondness of their mistress into a life and beauty not common to other plants:

"Each blossom that blooms in her garden bowers,
On its leaves a mystic language bears."

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

March 11th. St. Eulogius, Cornish Heath, (Erica vagans.)
March 12th. St. Gregory, channelled Ixia, (Ixia Bulbocodium.)
March 13th. St. Euphrasia, Heart's-ease, (Viola Tri-color.)
March 14th. St. Maud, Mountain Soldanel, Soldanel, (Sold. Alpina.)
March 15th. St. Zachery, Colt's-foot, (Tussillago Farfala.)
March 16th. St. Julian, Nodding Daffodil, (Narcissus nutans.)
March 17th. St. Patrick, Shamrock, (Trifolium repens.)

THE SHAMROCK.

The botanical name of the Shamrock, like that of the Scotch Thistle, is a matter of dispute. Mr. Bishens, in an amusing paper read before the Linnean Society, has with great ingenuity endeavored to show that the Wood Sorrel, (Oxalis acetosella,) is the true Shamrock; while Dr. Withering and Professor Rennie point out the White Clover (Trifolium repens.) and Mr. Loudon marks the Black Medick, (Medicago Lupulina,) as the genuine national emblem of Ireland. Anciently the inscription of the Order of the Bath was "Tri numina junsta in uno," taken from the Holy Trinity. At the coronation of James I., numina was omitted, and the motto is now looked upon as an allusion to the union of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the word Regna being understood.

Oh Shamrock! pride of Erin, thou dost claim
Not for her sons alone the rapture warm;
Each Christian heart should kindle at the name,
Fated the stubborn Pagan to disarm.

Then, Shamrock, whilst the poet of thine isle
Thy praise shall sing, as "prized of bard and chief,"
Be ours to greet with gratitude, the while,
The holier story of thy simple leaf. IRIS.

FOR PALESTINE.—A Maine paper states that a colony of fifty families, principally from that State, is to embark for Palestine in July next. They propose to settle at Jaffa, the ancient Joppa. Building lots have been purchased, and they will carry out with them Yankee implements, with a view to resuscitate the great and long slumbering resources of that once splendid land.

[For the Californian.]

TWO POETS DISCUSSED.

WITH the publication of that much-abused volume—Outcroppings—a question sprang up which has not yet been definitely answered. I refer to the question as to whom we shall grant the precedence of California poets. The critic of THE CALIFORNIAN stated that this precedence belongs to Charles Warren Stoddard. This opinion was the subject of extended remarks in the Leader by "The Mufti," making four consecutive "Leader Papers."

The "Leader Papers" having attracted some attention as critical productions, it is only fair to criticise them in turn. In the first place the reader shall have a brief synopsis of them, together with an exposition of their just demands and inconsistencies.

The Mufti's avowed aim is "the demolishing of an acknowledged critic." Let us see, if, as the common expression is, in trying to distinguish, he has not extinguished himself.

His papers may be divided into two parts. In the first, he demands reasons for the important decision rendered by the "critic of THE CALIFORNIAN" with reference to the relative position that Charles Warren Stoddard occupies in the scale of poets, and supports his demand by arguments; in the second, he endeavors to define the "school of poetry" to which that critic belongs.

Under the first head he states several truisms: vide this—"The true critic never praises or condemns, except on some principle which he is prepared to state and justify." He shows that THE CALIFORNIAN has not fulfilled this requirement. He is therefore right in throwing the burden of proof upon one who made so important a statement. But I will cite another truism which The Mufti overlooked. The practice of the true critic is always consistent with his theory. The Mufti is, then, far from being a true critic; for, in almost the same breath that he imputes a fault to another, he commits the same himself. Without even specifying the grounds of his opinion, as the other had done, he repeatedly asserts that "The Chandos Picture" is a far greater poem than "At Anchor," charging him who would say otherwise with "a singular idiosyncrasy." In doing thus does he not, besides violating his own precept, draw the burden of proof upon himself? If he oppose an already asserted opinion with another, surely he should first show the falsity of the opposite conclusion. Truly the homely saying, "The pot calls the kettle black," never was more aptly illustrated.

Under the second head he says: "I intend to advocate what I infer to be the real spirit and tendency of the principles upon which the poetical criticism of THE CALIFORNIAN is founded." Should any one desire to know accurately what The Mufti intends to do, the word advocate, referred to Webster, will give him the key. But, to save time, one can "presume what is meant."

This is his argument. Because another person prefers "At Anchor" to "The Chandos Picture," and because of similar preferences, it is inferred that he must belong to the "Exquisite School. The Exquisite School prefers "a certain vague and dreamy luxuriance of thought" to those ideas that "are never shrouded in a haze of words, through which some uncertain half-meaning is discernible." Ergo, the one who prefers "At Anchor" to "Chandos Picture" prefers a vague and dreamy thought, shrouded in a haze of words, etc., to the opposite of this. But if we compare the two poems, these characteristics do not immediately disclose themselves. Therefore, if The Mufti would have us rely on his keen perception of the motives which actuate others, he should show wherein these characteristics lie. He says that, according to the critical principles of THE CALIFORNIAN, Byron, Scott, Campbell, etc., cannot be poets. So bold an assertion as this should have something in its support.

What weight can the opinions of such an inconsistent critic have with the observing reader? The faults of his papers are dogmatism, inconsistency, prolixity and ostentation of knowledge. Viewed as a whole, the articles are worthless. Parts being separated, there is one just demand which has been referred to, i. e., give the reasons why Charles Warren Stoddard should be placed in a higher rank than Edward Pollock.

The original question has therefore been narrowed down to a very small compass, and within this compass only shall I discuss it.

A full definition of poetry and poetic principles, would, if given here, suggest that too much ignorance was presumed on the part of the reading public; for this reason, and also for the sake of brevity, poetic principles will only be brought forward when called for to support any opinion.

Let us first criticise Edward Pollock's "Chandos Picture."

The conception of the poem is as follows: All the dead heroes whom Shakspeare's "song has named" have been born anew into an immortal life. Therefore the spirits of those whose names have been forgotten are filled with lamentation. They gather around the spirit of the dead though immortal bard, moaning and shrieking, "forgot—forgot!" This conception is bold and natural, and glows with genuine poetry. The theme is great and most suggestive, and therefore one would expect to see it expanded into more than an ordinary poem.

After the conception had been formed, the first question which arose in the mind of Pollock must have been this: assuming that spirits may be represented to the senses, where would they most likely be found? Would not the answer be—in that place where we, in our superstition, suppose ghosts are to be seen? And would not this be at the grave? Why should spirits hover about an empty picture? Living men might do so, but not disembodied spirits. However, de gustibus non est disputandum.

Pollock has pictured a person watching at midnight in the chamber where hangs the famed Chandos Picture, and telling, in the form of soliloquy, what he sees and feels. A soliloquy is an expression of thoughts as they naturally arise in the mind, arranged in their natural order. Any violation whatever of this rule materially injures a composition. Moreover, if any unnatural words are introduced, they especially detract from the worth of a poem. The reason why a soliloquy exerts so powerful an effect upon the feelings is the fact that the reader is, in imagination, made to go through all that the speaker is suffering, in a most vivid manner. Therefore, the poet entirely fails of his aim in this respect, if a natural order is broken up and words are introduced which no one in the position of the speaker would utter. This we find to be the great fault of Pollock. He commences aright, by placing the reader in the position of the speaker in respect to time; but he mixes up the rest in such confusion, that one cannot understand the subject until he has read all at least twice through, and has adjusted the various parts properly in his own mind. After he has done the work which it was the poet's business to do, he considers the poem a fine production.

The order in which the various elements of the poem should be placed will be represented briefly as follows: time, place, attendant circumstances in the order of dependency, and, lastly, the thoughts suggested by what precedes.

It is needless for me to show, in their respective orders, how Pollock so mixes up irrelative ideas, and causes the speaker to make such statements concerning himself, that, for the sake of perspicuity, he is compelled to put into his reluctant mouth the forced and prosy question—"And wherefore watch I fearless?" How unpoetical to ask and answer a question, in order to extricate himself from a difficulty. The MS. of this poem should have been sent back to the writer with the injunction given to the careless student—"A very good idea, but badly expressed: write it over again."

In order to be assured that this criticism is not unfounded, let the stanzas be read in the order indicated by the following figures: 1, 3, 4, 9, 10, 13, 5, 6, 7, 2, 12, 11, 14, 15, etc. Stanza number eight would be thus dispensed with. Every one will mark the improvement; yet a remodelling of the whole is needed.

We will find that this want of artistic finish pervades the language as well as the arrangement of the poem. There is evident a frequent extravagance in metaphor sometimes verging into hyperbole and sometimes into untruth and self-contradiction. I will notice several instances:

——"In the dark
The sounds have lost their way and wander slowly."

This metaphor plainly shows that the poet was not one to notice and remember accurately the relations in nature. Every one knows that, in a still, enchanted midnight, sounds seem to travel on the wings of electricity, startling the hearer with their distinctness.

In the fourth stanza we find "in mist;" but in the next, "all night long the stars, etc."

The first line of this conplet,

"And the low ring of their unvarying song
I hear without amazement."

is a bold, and very pleasing idea; but the second destroys its effect, by treating that which is a fancy as if it were a fact. It is also unnecessary, for no one would be amazed at a mere fancy.

Sprites should be substituted for "things" in the eighth stanza. In the seventeenth hero's would be more appropriate than "angel's."

These remarks, however, refer only to the rhetoric and logic, as it were, of the poem; but as these are the principle elements they will suffice for this brief essay. Yet it is but just to add, in order not to appear to undervalue the "Chandos Picture," that it is, in both conception and language the embryo of a most beautiful poem. But as Horace says, Infelix operis summa, quia ponere totum nesciet. The vividness with which separate images are presented is rarely surpassed. The extravagance being seen in thought rather than in words, the language may be said to be most concise.

It would be well now to ask the question, what is the office of a poet? in order to determine whether Pollock has fulfilled this office. It is not merely to conceive great and fanciful thoughts. It is chiefly to express in poetry a conceived thought. Therefore, although a perfect conception is necessary to a perfect poem, yet the manner in which a conception is expressed is of primary importance in criticizing a poem. If this were not so, then, many who cannot write a line of poetry should be given the precedence of our great poets. What would Milton's fame be if his masterpiece were treated thus? Would not his conception of heavenly discord, of infinite beings standing on finite spots fighting with the weapons of mortals, invented to destroy human life, be far inferior to those of lesser poets?

Shall I do wrong then, if I assign a poem whose conception is perhaps considered less grand—though expressed in perfect poetry—a higher place than one almost the sole merit of which is the conception? None will hesitate in answering that the swoop of the "eagle" with a broken wing is less pleasing than the perfect flight of the swallow: that a perfect violet is more acceptable than an ill-formed rose. Therefore, on the ground of instrinsic worth, I will compare "the beautiful trifle, 'At Anchor,'" with "so grand and majestic a piece as 'The Chandos Picture.'"

The main thought of the poem now to be considered may be expressed in this manner: A sailor has been drifting over the seas of time and space, has seen the brightness of the sun, the fertility of the soil, and the rich treasures in tropic climes, and at last has returned to spend his last hours in his own humble cot. Although he has seen in other lands a brighter sky, more verdant groves, and richer gems than his eyes see now, yet he is filled with a quiet contentment and subdued joy. Sitting "by the green home-shore," and singing "the songs he sang of yore," he contemplates, "with a full joy ne'er felt before," his "quiet home," ancestral grove, and the mound concealing love's most precious jewel, while his swelling heart bursts forth in love for "each rock and stream and dell," rendered sacred by holy associations. What though there are fragrant shadows in "the groves of spice beyond the sea;"

"'Tis here he only cares to dwell,
'Tis here he ever longs to rest."

What a touching illustration of the words, "Home, sweet home!"

But, as to the manner in which this thought is expressed, no comment is needed. What can be more poetic and appropriate than the subject, "At Anchor?" How can the style of writing be made more suitable to its sentiments? Observe how delicately the antithesis of now and then is expressed in the first stanza: of a humble home and the luxuriance of the isles, in the second; of a jewel enhanced by love, and another by avarice, in the fourth; of remembering affection and careless pleasure, in the last. Notice the natural sequence of thought. Is anything redundant, anything lacking, to make the ideas complete? Nothing.

What breadth of thought is shown in the manner in which the reader is enabled to grasp and retain in a moment a clear conception of far separated antitheses. What artistic finish is evinced in the perfect appropriateness of the subject, the subdued tone, and the choice of words and images, to the thought, and in the sequence of ideas. What melody is perceived in both rhythm and metre. And, as a beautiful form is the result of a perfect adjustment of perfect and well proportioned parts, so do we breathe in a true poetic atmosphere when we read this poem, the parts of which are artistically made and arranged, and intrinsically poetical.

For these reasons, I do not hesitate in giving the simple, chaste poem of Stoddard a place before the imperfect extravaganza of Pollock.

The comparison between the two poets has been mainly based on these two poems; but when we go further and compare Pollock's "Evening" with even the weakest of Stoddard's poems published in Outcroppings, what a large balance is there in favor of the latter. In "Evening" we perceive the characteristic originality and boldness of conception which belongs to the writer; but also, as a destructive offset, the lack of true poetic sensitiveness and artistic finish is painfully evident.

As before, we have in this poem a soliloquy. The faults are not of exactly the same kind as in the "Chandos Picture;" yet much worse, as they evince not only a careless writing, but also a want of the delicate perception needed by the poet. Any one possessed of a small amount of poetic feeling, though not even professing to be a poet, will be jarred unpleasantly by the uncalled-for and inappropriate change from soliloquy to address in the lines commencing

"How many an hour have you and I,"

and ending with the line,

"In such ships of mist as I see now."

Also by the sudden transition from poetic figure to prose fact, for which the reader is not prepared, but which the last division of the poem forces him to undergo.

Consider also the inapplicability of the illustration contained in the address to "Sweet friend." Pollock endeavors by it to illustrate the feeling which one experiences in gazing upon these "phantom ships." But he utterly fails; for the illustration represents "remorse" on account of actual disappointment, while the "phantom ships" are merely ominous and fill the mind with anxious forebodings of evil.

Then again notice this inconsistency. The speaker has been represented as filled with superstitious fear. These clouds seem "Phantom ships." In the last part he becomes inspired with a hope which, though strong, cannot entirely dispel the weight which his "heart in vain resists." Therefore the clouds must still seem, notwithstanding the hope, phantom ships bringing evil news. But instead of keeping up the figure of speech, which a soliloquy especially demands, the clouds are again called "mists."

On what principle can the simile, "like souls forgiven," be justified in retaining the position and relation it holds? The writer desires to say that the coming morn will cause these clouds to vanish before its rays of sunlight as the dismal phantoms of superstition are dispelled by the light of truth. But in the first place these clouds are represented as active, and then in the same breath passive with respect to the same action. First, he says, at the coming morn,

"These mists
Will brighten and shine and soar to Heaven;"

and afterwards that the day will shine them away.

The faults of Pollock are, to sum up—a great lack of artistic finish and of an accurate and delicate sense of the appropriate. Therefore, since parts are ill-adjusted and incongruous, a fragrant mist surrounds the poem, instead of the pure, bright, poetic atmosphere for which it is sometimes mistaken. As an offset to this I might fairly bring forward the beautiful piece entitled "Through the Shadows," and show by it how the style of Stoddard's writing varies most appropriately with the subject chosen in both choice of words, metaphor and rhythm. I could show also, in each of the four pieces published in Outcroppings, the artistic skill of the poet and the delicacy of the conceptions.

But further remarks are unnecessary when it can plainly be seen that what is good in Pollock is the sound core of a decaying apple, while Stoddard may be sliced throughout and yet no very imperfect spots will be found. And what is more in his favor, he is yet a mere youth. If then at his inexperienced age he produces only beautiful trifles, provided they be perfect, may we not place him, for his future promise only, in the front of those who attempt and fail in grand and majestic efforts?

PRO AND CON.

ABOARD THE "PROMISED LAND."

THE "good ship" Promised Land really deserved that praise. She was new, had made only one voyage, in a remarkably short space of time, was copper-fastened, two hundred tons burden, was of course registered A 1 at Lloyd's, and was now loading at the St. Winifred's Docks. Many had read the enticing and almost appetizing advertisement, which had been in the Times for many days, under the heading of "Steam to the Brazils," of the "spacious poop and after-decks," the "airy and well-ventilated saloons," and the decks "flush from end to end, and offering an agreeable and unobstructed promenade," of the surgeon, who was "experienced," of the "fire-annihilator," which was infallible, of the "water-condensing apparatus," and, above all, of that "Favorite," Captain Robert Magregor, who was "so well known on the American station." This collection of nautical blessings irresistibly induced me, when appointed engineer for surveying a new line of railway in the Brazils, to choose the new "barque-rigged liner," the Promised Land, and her Favorite Captain, Robert Magregor.

It was a long time, however, before the loading was done, and the ship ready to drop down the river. Meanwhile, the collected inducements had had a favorable impression on others besides myself, and on making some last inquiries at the office before sailing, I found that nearly all the berths had been taken up, and that we were to sail with a full complement of passengers and cargo. This was a very agreeable prospect; for to a good sailor, and before the novelty has worn off, a voyage is one of the pleasantest incidents in life. At last a sort of intimidating notice appeared, quite different from the alluring tone of previous invitations: all must be on board by a certain Thursday, and by a certain hour, otherwise deposit, passage-money, everything, would be forfeited. When I punctually obeyed this mandate, sailors were getting in casks of water, putting last touches to the rigging, and shipping new sails that looked like nautical table-linen. The sun was shining, and there were Lascars and foreign sailors in red jackets. The chatter of tongues was very loud, and the whole had a Neapolitan air. Above, on the paddle-box, was Captain Magregor, that Favorite Captain, a surprisingly young man for a Favorite Captain, but of a stout bluff build, with sandy hair, and large fair face, and a very Scotch accent, in which he gave his orders. He seemed a good man of business. We knew nothing of his seamanship then. Firm, steady, and with a practical roughness, by his exertions everybody and everything were got on board; and by ten o'clock, a passenger, who had already become nautical, came into the saloon to announce that we were going to "haul out" of dock. In half an hour we had hauled out and were going down the river.

That was rather a dismal first meeting of all the passengers in the saloon. There was an air of trouble on most faces, and every one was coming in and out uneasily of the little cellars, which were called state-rooms, "blocking" their hats as they did so. The lamps were lighted, and looked yellow and sickly enough, and were already swinging and "turning" as the vessel moved. I looked round and saw a good many of the passengers. There was a Spanish-looking actress, a wife or two of a consul, two or three commercial travellers, a couple of officers and their wives, some Frenchmen, some Germans—with, in fact, the almost unvarying elements which make up the complement of a packet bound on a long voyage. One gentleman I particularly noticed, who was taking supper with great relish by himself. He had come on board early, had established himself early in one of the best cabins, and had put everything he wanted in its "proper place." When nearly every one was like a moody and troubled spirit, going up on deck and coming down again, and poking into wrong cabins, and lurching over unseen trunks and packages, he was perfectly and calmly at home. By eleven o'clock he had finished his supper, had read the evening paper through by a wax-candle, as he would have done at his club, and had gone comfortably to bed. This gentleman's name I was curious enough to inquire, and found it was Colter, a chancery barrister in fair practice, who had been ordered a long sea voyage to strengthen his chest, and enable him the better to direct his voice at their "L'dships."

I was a fair sailor, too, and had done many long voyages; but was not so much at home as the chancery barrister. I was painfully sensible of the discomforts of this way of travelling from the first, and awoke several times; once indeed by the vessel's stopping, and by that pattering of feet which follows on a vessel stopping, and with some shouting. After a few minutes, however, we moved on again, and I fell asleep.

In the morning we were tossing about in the Channel. The sea was like melted aluminium, dull and angry, and the "barque-rigged liner" rode heaving and lurching. Already the bulk of the passengers were in their misery, to the music of the "hish" of the waters, and the straining and creaking of the inside timbers. It was a dark day, too, was raining on deck, and only a bare half-dozen appeared at breakfast. Captain Robert Magregor came down himself, and sat at the head. "Stiff bit of weather to begin with," he said, cheerfully; "always the better, though, for my passengers; they get into it at once, and have it all over. I wish we had a good storm at once, to try this vessel. She'd stand anything, sir. Go anywhere. Built under my own eye."

The chancery barrister was of course there, picking out the best bits of broiled ham and eggs with his fork. I saw him well. Tall, thin, with a yellowish face, and "thin hair he-sprinkled spare." "Captain," he said, abruptly, "what was the stoppage last night? It awoke me. Somewhere off Gravesend, eh?"

"Yes," said the captain, "off Gravesend it was—a small hooker came alongside with two passengers. We nearly ran 'em down; serve 'em right, too. Pretty thing, stopping a vessel in her course! And only the agent would have been making a row, and talking of the company, and perhaps stop the passage-money out of my salary, I'd have let him shout till they were hoarse."

"And now, captain," said the barrister, buttering toast, with a rasping, crackling sound, "what were they like—men, women, or children?"

"A woman, sir—a lady, I suppose we must call her," the captain said, with disgust. "Nice thing, isn't it, ladies coming out in hookers to stop mail-packets on the high seas?"

"And where is she now?" said the barrister, eating a fresh egg. "Breakfast in berth, eh?"

"I suppose so," said Captain Magregor, angrily. "Of course, she's sick. By Jove, the wind's freshening again," he said, rising; "this is the style of thing. It looks like a good storm before night."

I was left with Mr. Colter, who said: "What we would call, in an address to a jury, a rude son of Neptune, a hardy son of Ocean, eh, sir?"

"That man," I said, "doesn't care for a single thing else in the world but his profession—a true mariner."

"I don't know all that. I want him to contradict me. I should say he is undeveloped—that he has not had an opportunity. For he is surprisingly young, you remark, though built upon old lines. The fact is, we can't say that he might not break out in any new direction, if the opening came. Now for a cigar upon deck."

All that day the weather freshened; by dinner-time it was almost a storm, and we had less company at the table than even at breakfast. Captain Magregor was in great delight. His eye kindled. "After all," he said, "what is there in the world to the sea! It is everything to me: father, mother, wife, and lover. Here's her health, gentlemen! Would you say as much for your professions?"

"Certainly not," said Mr. Colter, shortly. "Even if I felt it, I would not."

This all went on for a couple of days, when things began to mend. The storm abated altogether; and one morning we arose to the smoothest and most lovely weather that could be conceived. The sea was blue and smooth as the Mediterranean at Genoa. The passengers came crawling out of their burrows, with miserable faces, but with some hope. They plucked up wonderfully, as some one remarked. In fact, at the breakfast-table, all but some children were assembled. The captain was at the head, a little down at the loss of his stormy weather, and I and Mr. Colter near him.

"We are all here?" said the barrister; "a difference to the first day, eh? By the way, where's the Gravesend lady? She that woke us up out of our sleep—eh, captain?"

The captain answered gruffly that he did not know.

"You should have all your passengers here, captain. No excuse such a morning as this. No breakfasting in bed—in berth, I mean: it's bad for the morale of the ship."

The Scotch captain shook himself at this.

"We'll have none o' that aboard. No favor or exceptions. Here, steward! You're not to take in breakfast to any one—d' ye hear?"

"No, sir. Only that lady in No. 20."

"Has she been ill?"

"No, sir, the stewardess says. She had dinner yesterday there, and tea and breakfast ever since she came aboard."

The captain almost leaped up with anger.

"This is outrageous, My orders defied by any woman. Lady or woman, it's all one. I'll have the same discipline for all. That's logic, Mr. Colter."

"And good logic, too," said that gentleman.

"Ay, ay. The ship before everything. And see, steward. Tell that lady—what's her name?—"

"Mrs. Arlington, sir."

Mr. Colter, at hearing this name, started.

"Arlington!" he said. "Are you sure?"

"Why," said the captain, "what's there in it?"

Mr. Colter seemed to be ashamed of having started or shown surprise.

"Nothing," he said. "There's a leading case, you know—Arlington and Hooker; very nearly the same point as the rule in Shelley's case, but cut down a good deal, you know.

"Well, tell Mrs. Arlington she must be here for dinner or go without any. That's blunt; but it's the fact and truth."

The captain went on deck.

"Now," said Mr. Colter to me, "why should that lady, who has come on board in an exceptional manner, and who has not been in the least ill (as, indeed, I found out in a very odd way, for I saw her reflected in the little skylight of my berth, and reading and working all through the storm)—why shouldn't she come in and take her meals with us—eh?"

"Well, I never thought of it in that way," I said.

At dinner that day—the fine weather still continuing—all the passengers were assembled, except one. Just as the covers were taken off, a little rustle was heard, and a tall, graceful lady stood at the door, looking down the long table as if for a place. She was very neatly cut out of the great human material—slight—was in a purple silk—had a very small face and features—soft hair, with a tiny cap. She seemed almost as shy as a girl, and about two-and-thirty years of age. The lawyer got up, and, with much hustle, caused room to be made for her opposite—near the captain—who shook himself angrily like a Newfoundland dog.

"Expect every one to be in time on board the Promised Land," he said, roughly. "Can't allow any eating and drinking in the cabins. So I hope, in future, ma'am—"

She was quite composed, and answered him with a soft voice: "I beg pardon, indeed, Captain Magregor. I did not know the rules—indeed, no. But in future you will find me the most obedient of all your passengers."

"Well, I hope so," he said. "Get this lady some soup."

The barrister, who had his eye on her all this time, said to her graciously, "Hope you have not suffered during the rough weather."

She answered softly, and with an expression of pain, "I always suffer. I am almost always a martyr."

"Why," said the Scotch captain, "we know that you weren't ill during the storm; for you had your meals in regularly, and this gentleman here saw you sitting up, reflected in some way on his skylight, reading away when it was blowing great guns. Now?"

She raised her eyes from her plate, and turned them steadily on the barrister. He helped himself to wine—very coolly.

"You are determined to be hard on poor me, Captain Magregor," she said. "I did not say that I was sick, but that I was almost always sick. I will even appeal to that gentleman who used reflectors to see how I employed my time."

The barrister laughed. "That's putting it very strongly against me. But if I had had such a reflector the other night when our vessel was stopped, and mysterious passengers came on board, that would be worth something. What do you say, captain?"

"I say it was a thing I wouldn't do again, for this lady or for any lady."

Again her eyes were studying the barrister very carefully. Then she turned to the captain:

"Must I beg pardon again? My offences seem to be increasing every moment. I was always told that ladies on board were turned into goddesses—could rule and dictate—and that gallant seamen were only too proud to put their heads at their feet. When we made a voyage from India, in a Que s ship, we found it so. But I suppose there is a difference in the service. The captain was like a knight of King Arthur's, and yet one of the bravest and best seamen in the navy."

Our captain colored up, but could not say anything. The barrister said, suddenly, as if putting a question: "You were coming home from foreign service—you and your husband?"

She almost started, looked at him, then answered steadily with her wonderful eyes on him: "Well, yes; supposing we were?"

"O, certainly," said he, with great politeness; "I have no right to put inquisitive questions."

"No more," she said, with a firm smile, "than you have to construct those reflectors of yours. Even my enemy here, Captain Magregor, wouldn't resort to that."

The captain was moody.

"You should say, ma'am, a captain of a Queen's ship; which, thank God, this is not. We have our own ways here; we don't want to take pattern by Queen's ships. A Queen's ship, ma'am, I can tell you, would not stop as I was fool enough to do the other night."

"No, indeed," said she, softly; "such kindness could not be expected every day."

"It must have been very perilous," continued the barrister, addressing her, "that coming on board in an open boat on a rough night. It required great courage," he said, looking round with a smile, "or great pressure and necessity. From Gravesend, I think you said," he repeated.

"Suppose it were Gravesend," she answered, with a smile which was not a smile of pleasure. "Would you like to hear," she went on, calmly, "my birthplace, names of relations, age next birthday, and other particulars according to a census paper?"

The barrister put up his hands to his face.

"Serve me right," he said; "a capital hit—well sent home, too."

"Ah!" said she, laughing, "I wish to hit nobody, provided they do not hit me."

"At any rate," said the barrister, "I have got a lesson."

But I don't think he had. For at tea that night he came up to the table laughing. "Look here," he said, "I am incorrigible. I belong to the law. So that is my excuse. You know the challenge you gave me about a census paper? Well, I have been working my head ever since, as I should do at a brief for the Vice-Chancellor to-morrow morning. May I tell you what I have found, provided I tell you how?"

The faintest flush of uneasiness passed over that piquant face, but she hid it by setting back the little cap. "Do as you please," she said, with a smile. "You know I am helpless. Captain Magregor here, who I thought would be my protector, is turned against me; so everybody is privileged."

"No, no," said he, vaguely. "It is you who went against me about the Queen's ship."

"The dirtiest, ugliest thing that ever sailed," she said; "badly managed—badly handled, I think you call it."

"Yes," said he, "that's the word. Not kept so clean as this, I'll swear."

"No, no, indeed," she said.

"Well, that's something," he said. "Now, what are this gentleman's discoveries?"

"First," said Mr. Colter, "you are married, madam, or were married, and your husband's name is Charles H. Arlington—a captain in her Majesty's 90th Regiment of Foot, now stationed at Chatham."

She almost started out of her seat, a strange wildness came into her eyes, with a dash of fury, as she bent over to the barrister.

"What do you mean?" she said, in a thick voice. Every one had been listening, and now turned to each other with surprise and wonder. In a moment her face had changed. She had burst into tears, and with her handkerchief to her face, she just uttered the words, "He is dead! how unkind!" and floated away out of the saloon.

Many reproachful eyes were turned on the barrister.

"Come, I say, Mr. Colter," said the captain, who had looked after her with much compassion, "this is going a little too far, I think. A helpless woman is no match for a clever lawyer. It ain't equal, you know. Poor soul!"

"'Pon my word," said the eager barrister, "I meant nothing—I really did not. It was a mere chance shot. I knew her name was Arlington. So I looked in an Army List."

The next morning when the wind had again freshened, I went very early upon deck. It was a cool, delicious morning, and the vessel was bending through the waves with a sharp breezy decision that is always very acceptable. It was about seven, and I was sure I should have the deck all to myself; but, to my surprise, there was the captain leaning against the mainmast, with a lady in a little hood talking to him. I knew both hood and lady. Presently they began to walk about, and the captain pointed out this "stay" and that rope. In all these things she seemed to take an eager interest, and, I could see, was asking all sorts of questions, which he answered very readily, and with great alacrity and pleasure. Then he came towards me and explained the compasses, and then she went to the very end of the vessel, where she stood up on the forecastle in the breeze, and looked down on the hissing waters with more courage than, perhaps, I could have done, and looked like a statue. I was leaning on the side of the vessel, looking at her in this attitude, when I heard a voice close at my ear: "A fine morning." It was Mr. Colter, the barrister.

"I thought we should have the deck nearly to ourselves," he said, and walked down towards the pair at the end. When the lady saw him coming, she jumped down. She said nothing to him beyond "Good morning;" but that was said with an air of defiance.

That day the luggage "wanted on the voyage" was to be got up—a grand ceremonial of unpacking for passengers, and a remarkably busy and amusing scene. Every one got up his trunk, and got out things which he could not or would not want. Still it was an amusement, and even playthings are welcome upon a voyage. Every one was unlocking and unpacking, even the great Chancery barrister, Mr. Colter, Q. C.

At dinner we were all in great spirits. The captain had given champagne, which was much enjoyed by the lady who sat near him. Her eyes began to sparkle, and she talked very pleasantly and with great animation. I noticed that Captain Magregor listened with extraordinary attention to everything she said, spoke very little himself, not even a word about his beloved ship.

"We deserve this," said the barrister, gayly, "after our hard work to-day. Excellent wine it is."

"You should drink, Mr. Colter, to our full and perfect reconciliation; and promise, over Captain Magregor's capital champagne, so kindly given, never to offend me any more. You must get rid of your animosity to me. Will you promise?"

"Certainly," he answered, merrily, "with all my heart. I am deeply penitent. I feel as if I had committed contempt of court, and had been told to attend at the sitting of his lordship to-morrow. Indeed, how could I feel anything but cordial good-will to a person about whom I am beginning gradually to know everything?"

"Know everything?" she said, a frown coming on her forehead. "You are beginning again. Now, I warn you!"

"Yes," said he, "but we have not drunk our champagne together yet. It is really the oddest thing. There must be some mysterious relation between us, for these things force themselves on me. Now, to-day, at the luggage, I found out your house and street!"

"Champagne, ma'am?" said the waiter.

"No," she said, fiercely, "I'll not drink with you. I'll have no reconciliation."

"Pray hear me first," he said. "Stay a moment, waiter; I saw a portmanteau swung up rather roughly (by the way, captain, a hint to your fellows would be no harm, they are only too willing,) when the side grazed against the hold, and half tore off a card. I saw it wouldn't stay on a minute, and really with the best intentions, though you won't credit it, took it off. On the face was your name, Mrs. Arlington, written in a very pretty hand. On the back was, 'To be left at Captain Arlington's, Grove Villa, Chatham. Seven and sixpence to pay. 11 | 6 | 63.' (You know the odd way they write that.) The very day before our vessel sailed. Obviously the trunk-maker's bill for a lock or repairs."

She almost ground her teeth, and the wine shook in her hand.

"You will not stop till you get a lesson," she said, grimly. "I am not a woman to let myself be persecuted. I can do nothing myself; but if I ask other gentlemen"—and she looked at Captain Magregor—"I am sure they will help me. Perhaps the next thing you will tell us at dinner, that you have opened my little trunk, and searched it."

"I think," said Captain Magregor, who had been appealed to, "you might let this lady's affairs alone. If we have barristers aboard, I don't see why we need have barristers' ways. In fact, now, as captain of this craft, I tell you plainly, Mr. Colter, I won't have it. I have authority here, and I must require you to give over prying into this lady's business, or looking into her trunks and that sort of thing."

He looked to her, whose eyes turned to him with speechless gratitude. There was a silence. Half the table heard that speech. Mr. Colter drank a little wine, then called in a clear voice to a gentleman a few places from him—

"Mr. Wilson! you were next me to-day when a portmanteau came out of the hold with a card hanging to it. Would that card have dropped off at a touch?"

"At a touch," said Mr. Wilson.

"Did I save it from dropping back into the hold?"

"You did," said Mr. Wilson.

"Who was it first perceived that there was writing on the back?"

"I did, certainly," said Mr. Wilson. "In fact, I remarked it as the trunk came up."

"There!" said Mr. Colter, calmly. "So much for looking into this lady's trunks. As for my remark yesterday about the husband of this lady, I looked, out of the merest idle curiosity, to see his rank and regiment, in an Army List—"

"An Army List!" she repeated, starting.

"Yes," he went on. "An Army List of the present month, and this is only the seventeenth, and I found him there. But that, of course, must be a printer's error (these things are edited so carelessly,) for I think we understood you to say your husband is not alive?"

"Never," she answered excitedly. "I said I was afraid he might be dead or dying, as I left him very ill."

"Then I mistook," he went on. "Now I put it to our captain, a brave man, and one of the best seamen going, whether he has not been a little rough with me to-day."

The captain colored.

"Well," said he, "perhaps I spoke too strongly, and perhaps you are right, Mr. Colter. You know I have great responsibility."

The look of anger and contempt the lady gave him was beyond description. She rose at once.

"I see you have deserted me," she said, in a whisper to the captain. "Well, so be it. I shall go on deck, and make the wind and the sea my friends. They, indeed, are faithful."

And she passed out. In about ten minutes the captain followed her.

The next thing we heard was that the captain had given up his own private cabin to the strange lady. She had come on board late, and had to put up with the worst accommodation. This inflamed all the ladies still more, but more particularly Mr. Colter, who said it was "an instance of singular partiality." That very day we saw an English brig bearing down on us with a signal of distress flying. This was welcome news to the passengers, and brought every one up from below with glasses, to share in the excitement. We slackened speed and let her come near. It turned out, after all, that she was only "short of water," which created quite an ill feeling against the brig, and sent down most of the passengers in disgust. The captain came aboard our vessel in his long-boat, and was presently surrounded by a group asking him all manner of questions, which provided a great subject of discussion at dinner that day. After dinner, Mr. Colter said in his gay way, "While you were all talking to the captain, I got hold of the steward and secured a couple of English newspapers. What do you say to that? I suppose no one ever thought of that: though there is not much news, except—except—indeed—" and he kept looking up and down the columns, searching for his bit of news, "one of the usual dreadful murders," he said. "Where is it?"

As he spoke, I was made to look up by an angry and impatient rustle opposite, and there saw the eyes of the lady fixed on him with such an expression of mixed terror and agony, that I was really startled.

"At Chatham, I think it was," he said; "near to your part of the world. So you had a lucky escape, Mrs. Arlington."

She was growing pale and red by turns, her hands were grasping the table with a clutch, and she half rose to go.

"Ah, here it is!"

"What do you mean by this?" she said.

He did not affect to see her, but I saw him steal a look at her.

"Why, you are not well," said Captain Magregor. "Take my arm, and come on deck."

"You won't wait to hear the exciting details?" said Mr. Colter. "Why, I declare, it's not at Chatham, after all. It was at Portsmouth. Yes, at Portsmouth. How stupid of me."

A curious expression of relief came into her face. "It was only for a moment," she said. "You know my poor husband is lying ill there, and these things happen so often."

"Ah, I see," said the captain.

"Was the murderer a sergeant—one Ridley?" asked a passenger.

"Yes! God bless me, yes!" said Mr. Colter. "How did you find that out?"

"Why, that all happened before we left England. I read it in the Times a week before. The fellow must be hanged by this time."

"Well, well," said Mr. Colter, laying down his paper, "after that, I give it all up. I am getting stupid. I may retire from the profession."

The correcting passenger laughed and received a step in rank on the spot, in respect, from his fellow passengers.

Meanwhile our captain never abated his attentions to the lady, though he grew more gloomy and moody every day. He had lost all his enthusiasm for his ship, and never talked of her in a boastful and affectionate way.

The next day a great dark steamer, homeward bound, came in sight, which the captain, eagerly getting his glass, and making the lady who stood near look at, pronounced to be one of the Cunard vessels. As it drew near, all the passengers got out their letters, which, after a short parley, were sent on board; and it steamed away out of sight. This was a real incident, and was talked over eagerly and noisily at dinner, Mr. Colter, to whom the captain was very cool and yet very submissive since their little discussion, quite taking the lead. "Such a mail as went on board," he said; "all of us writing home to our fathers and mothers, daughters, wives and husbands. By the way," he went on gayly, and with his eye on the lady, "I didn't see you give a contribution, not a line, to that poor husband in the barracks at home, sitting in his bare room, coming back from their dull mess."

She colored. and again that fierce contortion of impatience came into her face. "How do you know?" she said, "Is the next thing to be that I am to show you all my letters before I post them?"

"God forbid," he answered laughing, "if I had to read or look at ladies' long letters. No, no, Mrs. Arlington, only, as I always tell you, you are quite a study to me." He laughed again. "But, come now," he went on, half addressing those near him, "I did remark that Mrs. Arlington missed the post, or did not know there was a mail going, and thus lost such an opportunity of writing to her husband. It was very unlucky."

Some of the passengers looked one at the other, for, by this time—and really in part owing to these hints of the barrister—a sort of mystery of suspicion began to get among them about this lady. A little passage that took place between them a couple of mornings later "intrigued" us all yet more.

"I am hungry this morning," he began, addressing the company as usual, "and do you know who is the reason? No one would guess, I am sure. Mrs. Arlington, you are the reason I am hungry. What is this, fried collops? Yes, Mrs. A. is the reason." Again she was in great confusion.

The ladies' eyes were upon her. "Now for the explanation. Mrs. Arlington spilt some of my chocolate this morning. I think you did it on purpose. The steward was carrying it in (I always have it at home, and I must say the lad makes it nearly as well as my own man,) and Mrs. Arlington here ran against him, spilt some of it, and the poor boy brought it in afterwards to my cabin, and wanted to know if he should make more. Of course, I said no. But I didn't even take what was left."

The public were a little disappointed at this story, which they could not follow. The only thing they enjoyed was her really helpless state of confusion and terror. And after that morning the impression still more evidently prevailed that there was something very odd about the strange lady. Later we all knew the signification of this chocolate story.

Meanwhile, her conversations with the captain increased. That Scotch young seaman seemed to be losing gradually all his heartiness. To Mr. Colter he was civil, but moody and distant. It was remarked that the lady used to get up early now, and was sometimes found by a curious passenger sitting, at perhaps seven in the morning, with the captain.

The Promised Land had now been some seven or eight days out, and with fair weather. We were all getting tolerably well shaken down into the ship, as Mr. Colter said. This eighth day was remarkably fine, with a bright sun out, and the one or two always sick passengers came creeping out of their berths to get a little fresh air and sun. Poor souls! Every one was happy, but the only curious thing was the behavior of the captain, who all the day long had his powerful double-glasses to his eyes searching the horizon far and near. This at first was not attended to; but, as he continued anxiously at this all the day, even sending men to the masthead, and keeping a little boy there till he nearly fell off, people began to wonder, and then to ask. The first to take notice was Mr. Colter: "Not looking for land, surely?" he said, with a smile. "I made up a reckoning with the mate, and we are in latitude so and so."

The captain answered him roughly: "I can look through my glasses, I suppose, without having to give an account of myself, Mr. Colter? We leave our witness-boxes at home on board this ship." And walked away down to the cabin to the lady; then came up and spoke to the man at the wheel. It was now about five o'clock, and time for dinner. Mr. Colter, who was very friendly with the mate, and talked a good deal about the ship and her handling, now walked over to take a look at the binnacle before going down. "Why, look here, Cobbett," he said, "we're taking a bend out of our course. Eh? What d'ye say?"

"Yes, we are, sir," said the mate. "What's this, Jim?"

"Cap'en bid me keep a quarter-point or so to nor'ard," said the steersman.

"Very odd," said Mr. Colter.

"I don't know what's coming over the cap'en," said Cobbett, thoughtfully. "I think," he added cautiously, "he's now after one of the Haver liners (so he pronounced it) for New York, which we should meet about here. That's what's at the bottom of it, sir. I suspect he wants news or something."

"O, indeed," said Mr. Colter, and went down to dinner. At this meal the captain and lady were both restless, and spoke little. Mr. Colter was cheerful. When it was nearly done, a steward's boy came in, and whispered to the captain, who got up hastily, and went on deck. This motion excited curiosity. What could it be?

After dessert had been put on, Mr. Colter, wiping his mouth with his napkin, said gayly, "I really must see what it is all about."

"Ah, you may see and see again," said Mrs. Arlington, with extraordinary fierceness, "but you will not find out much, or be able to interfere much now."

"I?" said he, good-humoredly. "Not I, indeed. But a little walk on deck can do no harm." He went up, and presently many followed, for curiosity is stronger than wine.

The evening and the half darkness had come on. The skylights over the saloon looked like gorgeous illuminated globes. The sea was fresh, and cool, and blue, and the moon, seeming to be out a little before its time, was shining. Many faces were looking out to the one point where there was a black patch, and a twinkling red and green light growing larger every moment. Many fingers pointed it out to each other. "See the Haver packet!" said Cobbett, coming up to Mr. Colter; "we're out of our course by three hours. Nigh on forty mile! Only think! Of course it's his affair, and he'll see what the owners will say."

The captain was on his paddle-box, giving orders.

"We're going at full speed, you see," said the mate. "She's a faster boat, and won't lie by for us. The French skipper knows his dooty to his company."

"O, I see," said Mr. Colter. "Where's Mrs. Arlington?"

She was in her cabin. By and by some boxes were coming up from the hold. Presently she herself came up, dressed in her shawls and cloaks, and with all her baskets and packages. "I see," said Mr. Colter again.

"Perhaps you do," she said; "but not for much longer. I am going at last to be set free from your insolent and unmanly persecutions. This kind captain is going to put me on board that vessel which is bound for New York."

By this time a knot of leading passengers had gathered round, listening with wonder. We were gradually drawing nearer to the vessel. The captain was coming down from his paddle-box with triumph.

"We shall overhaul her yet," he said. "They have seen our signals. They are getting out the boat so as to have it ready. They have stopped at last."

He was turning to go, when Mr. Colter, suddenly changing his habitual jocular manner, said: "Just a word with you, captain, before you move in this matter."

He took him by the arm, and led him away down to the end of the vessel, the captain going sulkily. Mrs. Arlington was very restless during this interview; but she looked very often towards the dark French ship.

In a moment they both came back. The captain was very excited.

"I'll not listen to you, sir. You should be ashamed of yourself. I shan't move in the business, or listen to such calumnies."

"Brave and gallant protector," she said, taking the captain's hand. "I knew I had a friend who would stand by me."

"Then you force me to appeal to the passengers; and to them I shall appeal."

"You would not be so cowardly—so cruel," she said, half imploringly.

"I shall tell them what I know and can prove, as soon as we touch land. I shall tell them that this woman—"

"Tell what you like," said the captain, doggedly. "Here's the vessel, and go on board she shall."

In fact we were now drifting up beside the great black figure of the French steamer, breathing and blowing off the steam like a tired horse. The men were in the boat, and the trunks were about being swung over the side.

"Well, then," said Mr. Colter, "if you won't listen to reason, I shall go too. New York will be very pleasant, and we have an extradition treaty with that country."

There was a pause. The two stood looking at each other, the lady trembling and breathing hard. The voice of the French captain was heard through a speaking-trumpet.

"Well, then," said she, with a sort of dreadful smile; "since you are so positive in the matter, I suppose you must have your way. I am very sorry to have given these foreign gentlemen all this trouble; but it is better to submit than to have a scene. I shall never be able, Mr. Colter, to repay you for all your intrusive kindness."

She hurried down again to her cabin, but her last look at the barrister was one no one could forget.

The vessel was put on her old course.

For some days more the voyage continued. Still the lady did not come into the cabin for meals. "I have given her leave," said the captain, ferociously. "I suppose I have that power aboard my own ship, and I'd like to see the man that will dispute it."

"So should I," said Mr. Colter, smiling. "Poor Jack would be laid in irons, and properly so. The law gives you full power, cap'en, to a certain extent. We must all support the law, cap'en. The legal theory is, that the deck of every English vessel is a portion of the British soil."

The captain answered nothing. It was the last day. We were to be off the coast by evening. By evening we were off the coast, near a tongue of land and a lighthouse. But it was nearly dark. Passengers were all in excitement. A splash of oars was heard alongside, and the Customs officers, one green-looking men in brigand hats, came on board. They went through the usual business. To our surprise we heard Mr. Colter talking, in what was apparently excellent Spanish, with the leader of the party. The leader was very obsequious, and touched his hat often. Mr. Colter gave him a letter as the boat went away—two were left behind in charge of the vessel.

Colter was now regarded as a being of mysterious power.

About nine that night (we were all to land in the morning) another boat was heard coming alongside, and a gentleman came up the side, who in English asked the captain to see Mr. Colter. The captain asked his business a little gruffly. "I am the consul here," said the other.

Mr. Colter, who was smoking, came up. The consul took off his hat. "I hope Lord Boxminster is well," he said, obsequiously. "His lordship wrote to me by the last mail. We shall do everything we can for you, Mr. Colter. Would you like to come ashore to-night and sleep on dry land—at an hotel? I can manage that."

"Well then, do you know, I should," said Mr. Colter, gayly. "I have, however, a few little things to put together first."

"Hope you enjoyed the voyage," said the consul.

"Well I did, since you ask me," he answered. "It has really been like Westminster Hall all the way. I suppose you can give me half an hour?"

Half an hour after that he came into the saloon muffled up to go. I and the captain were the only people there. "Good by," said Mr. Colter, good-humoredly, "for the present. It seems a little invidious my being the only one allowed to go ashore, but I shall be back in the morning. Good by."

"And what legacy do you leave behind?" said a woman's voice close by. We looked up, and saw flashing eyes, and distorted features, and a quivering lip.

"Good gracious!" said Mr. Colter.

"What legacy? I say," she repeated; "a noble, manly, and chivalrous one! You a gentleman? No; I will tell you what you are—a miserable spy, a common detective! God forgive you."

"What strange language!" said Mr. Colter, looking round.

"If I was a low creature I would curse you," she went on, in a fury; "I would pray—as I will pray to-night—that the boat which takes you to shore may open, and sink to the bottom. You mean, unworthy spy, you! You mouchard, you! You crawling, creeping, sneaking spy; this is th dirty work you love! Curse you, I say!"

"What language!" said Mr. Colter, not in the least disturbed.

"What have I done to you? Why did you fasten on me from the beginning of the voyage—a poor woman that did you no harm—tell me that, eh?"

Mr. Colter suddenly became grave. (It was a curious and most exciting scene; the yellow oil lamps of the saloon playing on her face.)

"Since you ask me," he said, "I shall tell you—something, at least. Young William Arlington, your husband—that was—"

"Was?" she repeated, faltering.

"—was the son of a very dear friend of mine. I knew something of his history—how the foolish boy had been entrapped into a marriage at Boulogne with a sort of half French woman, that no one knew anything of, and about whom there were strange rumors. Now, Mrs. Arlington?"

"False, false—every word of it," she said, furiously.

"We shall see," he said, gathering up his coats and shawls. "I shall not appear much more in this business. Others will look after it. Sorry no one else is allowed on shore. Good night all."

She gave a half shriek, and shook her hand at him. May that boat of yours sink you, sink you, sink—"

She stopped herself, and rushed back into her cabin: for stray passengers were looking out in wonder. I could not for a long while get rid of the dreadful idea of her appearance as I saw her then.

In the morning—a beautiful bright morning—we saw the fine, gorgeous coast quite clear. But to my astonishment there were police in the Spanish dress on the deck, talking with the captain, who was very excited. And the English consul was there too. The passengers were all gathered on the deck, and whispering.

At last the captain went down, and two of the officers. He came up in a moment, with a wild, scared face.

She was in her cabin; but it was fast locked. No one had seen her. No one could see her, or ever did see her again. That deadly look given to Mr. Colter proved to be the last look she gave to mortal man. When the anxious captain had at last her cabin door forced, she was found lying in her berth quite dead and cold; and the ship's doctor pronounced that she had died of poison.

When the English newspapers got out to the Brazils, we all heard of the dreadful Chatham murder of a young officer who had married a half French milliner against the wishes of his family.

The murderess, the papers said, had got away—it was believed in a Brazilian packet;—but hoped, according to their favorite phrase, that "the officers of justice would soon be on her track."

Mr. Colter made the return voyage successfully, and much improved in his health, and is now the well-known Sergeant Colter, who stands next for Solicitor-General.

NOBLE SISTERS.

"NOW did you mark a falcon,
Sister dear, sister dear,
Flying toward my window
In the morning cool and clear?
With jingling bells about her neck,
But what beneath her wing?
It may have been a ribbon,
Or it may have been a ring."
"I marked a falcon swooping
At the break of day:
And for your love, my sister dove,
I 'frayed the thief away."

"Or did you spy a ruddy hound,
Sister fair and tall,
Went snuffing round my garden bound,
Or crouched by my bower wall?
With a silken leash about his neck;
But in his mouth may be
A chain of gold and silver links,
Or a letter writ to me."
"I heard a hound, highborn sister,
Stood baying at the moon:
I rose and drove him from your wall,
Lest you should wake too soon."

"Or did you meet a pretty page
Sat swinging on the gate:
Sat whistling whistling like a bird,
Or maybe slept too late:
With eaglets broidered on his cap,
And eaglets on his glove?
If you had turned his pockets out,
You had found some pledge of love."
"I met him at this daybreak,
Scarce the east was red:
Lest the creaking gate should anger you,
I packed him home to bed."

"Oh patience, sister. Did you see
A young man tall and strong,
Swift-footed to uphold the right,
And to uproot the wrong,
Come home across the desolate sea
To woo me for his wife?
And in his heart my heart is locked,
And in his life my life"
"I met a nameless man, sister,
Hard by your chamber door:
I said: her husband loves her much,
And yet she loves him more."

"Fie, sister, fie, a wicked lie,
A lie, a wicked lie,
I have none other love but him,
Nor will have till I die.
And you have turned him from our door,
And staboed him with a lie:
I will go seek him through the world
In sorrow till I die."
"Go seek in sorrow, sister,
And find in sorrow too:
If thus you shame our father's name,
My curse go forth with you!"

[Christina Rossetti.

HINTS ABOUT HORSES.

THE following article by Cornelius O'Dowd appears in one of the English magazines. It is a review of a work entitled The Handy Horse-Book—written by a cavalry officer—which is certainly worthy of an American reprint.

OF the things on which all people imagine they can talk, and yet of which the number who really know anything is very small, the horse is most conspicuous.

It has been said that every man in England "thinks he can drive a gig," and the misfortune is, that the delusion is not merely the error of an excessive conceit, but is part and parcel of that intense snobbery which runs through the national character, making a man estimate the possession and the management of a horse as an evidence of a certain social status, and advancing his familiarity with equine matters as the surest test of his rank and condition.

This pretension would be laughable if it had not its grave aspect in the fearful catalogue of accidents it has led to. Of these we read in almost every newspaper, fearful records as they are of gross ignorance and grosser self-sufficiency. Strange as it may seem, there is no country in Europe in which the taste for horsemanship is stronger than in England, and yet in which the horse as an animal is less studied and understood.

One of the most popular errors is to attribute too much to the rider's own skill—that is, to place more to the account of the man than of the horse, and to ascribe the brilliant display of a successful run to the horseman, and not to the animal he bestrode. Now I am very far from disparaging judgment or "hand"—probably my error would be to accord them more than their due; but I think our tendency is generally to ascribe far too much to the man, and too little to his horse. In cross-country riding, the horse that knows his work will always do it best with the least interference. When men talk of sparing their horse here, and making play there, they are simply usurping the credit of that judgment the horse himself will employ. You may choose the part of the fence you wish your horse to take, but he'll take it himself in his own way far better than any suggestion of yours could intimate to him. The horse too, will "take off" before his leap with far greater accuracy if left in a measure to himself; and in the measure of his stride, as he nears his fence, the animal will be guided by the amount of effort he is called on to make. I speak of course of a well-trained horse—a hunter; not of those fiery reckless animals that breast their walls and flounder into their double ditches, and to ride which is a harebrained a feat as a man can well perform.

The great test of good riding is the "consent"—the spirit of union established between the horse and his rider—the intuitive knowledge of what your horse can do being joined to your own power of conveying your wish to the animal. That attained, there is no more to be gained. This is not every man's gift, still rarer is it every woman's. To have it a man must live much with his horse—know when he is good-humored, when angry, when his amour propre—and has he not amour propre?—is flattered, and when his pride is wounded. I have know a horse "shut up" from an ungenerous stroke of the whip, and refuse to go on. He must know when there is something wrong with his horse—when some passing derangement of health has occurred, or some inconvenience of a severe bit or over-tight girth has chafed him. What misery have I not seen a horse suffer, and what imputations on his temper have I not heard pronounced, because his bit had got beneath his tongue, or a nail in the pad of his saddle punctured his back?

I have seen a horse lie down and roll over to rid himself of the torture of a tight girth; and many a horse has been made a rearer by a coarse bad hand and a hasty temper. Nothing, however, more palpably displays the popular ignorance about the horse than the descriptions we read in our novels of horses and horsemanship. It would seem as if the writers not merely never rode themselves, but never had a friend or acquaintance who did ride.

People are fond of citing the old maid's husband as the type of all that is wildly imaginary and unreal; for my own part, I think I know of another type far nearer to everything that is out of nature. It is the horse that we find in Fiction!

Of all the creatures maligned, ridiculed, and calumniated of men, I do not believe that there exists anything to compare with this unlucky animal. His mad freaks, his wild exploits, his recklessness, his fury, his ungovernable passion, are stock themes, though, to be sure, they are occasionally balanced by his fidelity, his fondness, his love and his sagacity. He is made to do the most harebrained of actions at one time, and at another he is represented as calculating the cost of an exploit with the skill of an actuary and the craft of an Old Bailey lawyer. He can go for days and nights unceasingly, and at full speed, and never evinces weariness till the last moment, when he drops down suddenly dead. He has that general acquaintance with the characters of the tale that he is able to show his sympathy with the heroine, and his detestation of the wretch that persecutes her. If he never wants food, he is always ready to accept the most incongruous rations from the hands of his master or mistress; and by his general state of preparedness he suggests a secret suspicion in the reader's mind, that he knows how to saddle and bridle, and even shoe himself. Whyte Melville certainly understands a horse, and writes of him like a man who does so. Equally, too, Mr. Surtees, the author of Soapy Sponge, and other works of that order; he hits off the salient points of each particular style of horse in a way that no mere conventional knowledge could supply. You see that the man has ridden; but the majority of fiction-writers display the sort of ignorance that would set a group of stable-boys in a convulsion of laughter. The fact is, the author is not usually a horseman, or rather the horseman is not usually a writer. Your man of letters may bestride his stout fourteen-hand cob, and jog over the Downs at Brighton, or perhaps may steal along Rotten Row on a daisy-cutting canterer with a good character not to "shy;" but to mount a strong-boned, square-jointed three-quarter bred, with a light head and a powerful quarter, fully equal to fourteen stone, and fast in any country, and do him credit over a five-and-forty minutes "fast thing," you'll not hear of him at the Garrick, take my word for it. You'll find some gardeners, a stray cricketer, now and then a very tolerable boating man, amongst the writers; but there is a combination of qualities in the rider—I mean here the real horseman—not akin to the daily life and habits of the penman. Let no one quote Byron to me—he was a down-right bad rider; he rode mere hacks, highly trained, and he rode them without judgment, and ill. Scott sauntered about on a Highland pony and never pretended to ride. I forbear to talk of my contemporaries; but what a list of incapables could I give if I only threw off my reserve!

To find such a book as that whose title I have placed at the head of this paper is really a boon. It is the work of a man who knows his subject and likes it. He tells us, in his few words of preface, that it was from the frequent occasion he was called upon to answer questions and give advice to his friends on horse matters he was induced to commit himself to print. It is not often that the insistance of a man's acquaintance results so profitably for the public. In the present case, we have every reason to be thankful for the persecution. It is all that such a book should be—brief, intelligible, replete with sound sense, and a thorough understanding of what it treats.

His few words of counsel to buyers are excellent. But so long as the code of horse-selling honor is built upon the maxim of caveat emptor in every animal of price, no man should think of relying on his own judgment, for not merely are the diseases of the horse very numerous, but the ingenious devices to mask and conceal them are just as many; and "shoving off a screw," as it is jocularly called, seems such a venial offence, that there are many would do it with their best friends. In some regiments there is occasionally an understanding against this—in others I have known a free-trade in such rogueries encouraged. I remember poor old A. of the Queen's Bays, on a memorable election riot in Dublin, when the mob lighted large fires across College Green to arrest the advance of cavalry. A. alone dashed through the blaze in full swing of his gallop, while the whole leading file turned and bolted. "Splendidly done!" cried the Major. "What will you take for that horse? I never saw a horse face fire like him." "A hundred and fifty, Major," was the answer. "It took five years before I brought him to that." The bargain was made, and the secret of the five years' training only discovered in the morning—the horse was stone blind!

As to blindness, there are various diseases of the eye most difficult of detection—some, amaurosis for instance, not at all discoverable by any examination of the organ.

There is, too, an affection of the sight which renders the horse timid with respect to shadows on the ground, and which has no organic change in the eye by which it can be detected. The Germans call this "Bodheusheu." This curious affection belongs to certain breeds, especially Hungarian and Polish horses.

It is not a little singular how particular breeds of horses perpetuate certain defects—as we find, for instance, the Australian a buck-jumper, and the Mustang a roarer; and the Sardinian, which has an Arab cross, an irreclaimable biter. The Roman horse, too, except when ill, very rarely lies down; and, notwithstanding, it is most uncommon to find him puffed about the legs, or what is called "gummy."

There are in the little volume before us some useful hints about saddling:

"A saddle should be made to fit the horse for which it is intended, and requires as much variation in shape, especially in the stuffing, as there is variety in the shapes of horses' backs. An animal may be fairly shaped in the back, and yet a saddle that fits another horse will always go out on this one's withers. The saddle having been made to fit your horse, let it be placed gently upon him, and shifted till its proper berth be found. When in its right place, the action of the upper part of the shoulder-blade should be quite free from any confinement or pressure by what saddlers call the 'gullet' of the saddle under the pommel when the animal is in motion. It stands to reason that any interference with the action of the shoulder-blade must, after a time, indirectly if not directly, cause a horse to falter in his movement.

"Girths.—When girthing a horse, which is always done upon the near or left-hand side, the girth should be first drawn tightly towards you under the belly of the horse, so as to bring the saddle rather to the off side on the back of the beast. This is seldom done by grooms; and though a gentleman is not supposed to girth his horse, information on this as well as on other points may happen to be of essential service to him; for the consequence of the attendant's usual method is, that when the girths are tightened up, the saddle, instead of being in the centre of the horse's back, is inclined to the near or left-hand side, to which it is still farther drawn by the act of mounting, so that when a man has mounted he fancies that one stirrup is longer than the other—the near side stirrup invariably the longest. To remedy this he forces down his foot in the right stirrup, which brings the saddle to the centre of the animal's back.

"All this would be obviated by care being taken, in the process of girthing, to place the left hand on the middle of the saddle, drawing the first or under girth with the right hand till the girth-holder reaches the buckle, the left hand being then disengaged to assist in bracing up the girth. The outer girth must go through the same process, being drawn under the belly of the horse from the off side tightly before it is attached to the girth-holder.

"With ladies' saddles most particular attention should be paid to the girthing."

The author is perfectly right in his remark about the English habit of putting the saddle too far forward, a blunder which even our cavalry regiments occasionally commit. Such of our officers as have seen an Austrian cavalry regiment, or a Hungarian hussar regiment, will not have failed to be struck by the perfection of saddling displayed, not merely in the position of the saddle on the exact centre of motion of the animal, but in the admirable precaution adopted against sore backs. The Hungarian tressle leaves the spine so free that you could pass a cane between the saddle and the horse's back. I remember the arrival of a regiment, four thousand strong, in the Vorarlberg, with seven sore backs only, after eight days' marching. Our hussars in the Crimea were at one time almost disabled from this one cause.

Our author says, to make your horse change his foot in a canter, turn him as if to circle towards that side to which you require the foot to lead, he will use the foot forward that you wish, to support himself in turning. This is quite correct, but it is not the usual English doctrine. Most people in starting to canter press the near side rein to turn the horse's "counter" to that side, and compel him to strike out "off-leg." The Bauchet system is directly opposed to this, and insists that the rein should be drawn on the side the rider wishes the leg to be advanced. Certainly in this way the horse's action is more true, because he goes perfectly straight.

It might be wished that one so conversant with his subject had referred occasionally to Bauchet; especially when speaking of the advantages of the dumb jockey. In all that relates to arching the neck, and giving pliancy to the muscles about the throat, "the flexions," as practiced by Bauchet, are a vast improvement over the coarser methods of our English trainers. I do not agree in what our author says about one being always able to "sit a kicker." I have had two in my life which I can pronounce to be strong exceptions to his rule. One was a racing mare—"Pauline"—who ran well for the Corinthian's, when the property, I believe, of Lord Howth; she could kick anything off her back that ever mounted her. I saw her throw herself, in Clarendon's Riding School, Dublin, with the dumb jockey, so complete a summerset that the central rod of the dumb jockey entered the ground up to the very pad, and held her there as it were impaled; and yet even this failed to cure her.

Dycer told me that he had sold her upwards of thirty times by auction. She was a great beauty, with fine action, and it was hard to believe on seeing her that she was unridable. I tried, like many others, and made a most "indigne" ending.

My other kicker was a powerful thoroughbred of grand and showy action; his plan was to plant his fore legs firm under him, not in front, hog his back, and kick till his croup would actually strike the rider. You might hold his head how you pleased, for he contrived to pivot himself on the fore quarter. For a while, perhaps, you might keep your seat, but as weariness came on, for it was no small fatigue, he was certain to throw you at last. With this horse, I believe, it was an attempt to relieve himself of the pressure of the girth, for, with merely a sheet and a loose roller, he went perfectly well.

Some foreign horses, "Polacres" especially, have a trick of rearing against any object that will support them, such as a wall or a tree, and striking at it violently with their fore legs. They rarely or never fall back, but they stand so nearly perpendicular that the rider's position is the reverse of pleasant. I remember once mounting one of these beasts, with a saddle provided with safety clasps for the stirrup-leathers, which accordingly gave way when the pressure became lateral, so that I slipped over the tail with the leathers and stirrups, and found myself sitting at the beast's heels.

There are some excellent remarks about shoeing, and the general care of the foot, in this little volume; but I would, with all deference to so high an authority, enter my dissent to his treatment of what is called "brushing" or cutting. The malady, in full nineteen cases out of twenty, is not a local affection at all, or in any way dependent on the foot—the source of the disease is in the mouth; it is from a horse having a "hard side" he travels obliquely, and so comes to cross his action and cuts. The first thing to do with a cutter is to examine if the bridle-rein of one side does not chafe the neck, showing that unequal pressure has to be employed. I have cured scores of cutters without ever altering the shoe or changing the nailing, simply by handling and making the mouth equal on each side.

I am willing to have my theory tested by any one who has a cutting horse, so fully persuaded am I that malformation has nothing whatever to do with the malady.

As to roughing in frost, let me also give him a wrinkle especially adapted to our climate, where frost is rarely of long continuance, and where, consequently, frequent changes of the shoe might be required—it is, to have the shoes made to receive two small "spuds" of iron in the heel, which are to be screwed in, and removed when the horse enters his stable. These afford all the security against slipping in frosty weather, and do not oblige the necessity of removing the shoe itself. It is the universal practice in many parts of Germany and along the Baltic, and in Canada. By this practice you will be able to resist those terrors of your groom's foreboding about "tearing the horse's feet to pieces," fresh nail-holes etc. Nor is it the least beneficial part of the plan I recommend, that the danger the author speaks of in the horse treading on the opposite foot with a frost-nailed and calked shoe, has here no existence, since the "spuds" are removed when the horse is stabled, and their place filled with two flat-headed nails even with the shoe.

I wish the writer had said a word about tips or half-moon shoes, which leave the heel free, and are an admirable sort of shoe where the horse has feet to permit it. I know of no such security against greasy heels, thrush, or fungus, as this mode of shoeing.

"Calking the hind shoes of the hunter on the outside quarter only," he justly observes, will give the "animal more confidence at his fences and on landing." This, however, is also a question of the "ground," for in wet spongy soils the horse will receive no assistance from the calks.

Indeed, all advice with regard to hunters must have an especial reference to the country they hunt over. The very conventionalities of the hunting-field will show this. What would be said in Leicestershire, for instance, of the old Galway habit, which obliged the man who first cleared a fence to "call the ground," as it was termed?—that is, he should announce whether he had lighted on grass, or bog, or granite, or shingle, for the benefit of those who came after him.

There is a story of old Dudley Perse of Roxborough, a bold rider and a keen sportsman, who, after taking a high wall, completely disappeared, there being a "drop" of double the height. When Lord Gort cried out, "What's at the other side, Dudley?" the answer was, "I am, thank God!"

I cannot part with our dragoon without entreating him in the next edition of his admirable book (and it will see a dozen, or I know nothing of pig-skin) to let us have a chapter on the caprices of horses, their strange likings and dislikings, for they are in this respect very singular creatures, and well worth study and attention. Much of what is called restiveness is nothing more than the effort of the animal to express some inconvenience he desires to have removed—a strap that annoys, or a billet that hurts him; nor is it a little singular how far association of ideas will influence the horse; and the place where he has been relieved, and the man who relieved him, be remembered gratefully for a long time.

Some such circumstance, I have no doubt, had its effect on a cob I once possessed, and who was very difficult to mount, but stood motionless if his fore feet were placed in water. If it could be traced, I feel certain that the animal recurred to some time and place where the cold water about his feet had given him relief from pain.

It is not necessary I should follow our author into the medical portion of his treatise. I have looked through it, however, and find it like all that precedes it—sound, sensible, and easily understood.

For "clap" of the back-sinew, or break-down, or indeed any lameness that results from sprain, the Austrians use a simple application I have seen highly beneficial. It is to make a paste of the common marl with vinegar, and anoint the whole limb. The quicker drying of the inflamed part will at once direct you to the true seat of the mischief; but, besides this, the application is the best and most equable form of bandage, and may be suffered to remain several days without renewal.

Let me also advise a remedy for sore back. When the disease has proceeded to ulceration, and produced one of those sluggish, ill-conditioned ulcers, with flabby granulations, and an ichorous discharge, my remedy is lint steeped in warm "gum elemi ointment;" the ointment to be heated in a spoon over a candle, and the lint well soaked in this, and inserted into the sore. I have known more progress effected by this dressing in one week than by three months of other treatment.

If the author of this volume will accept any of these suggestions for his next issue, they are heartily at his service, being the only recompense in my power for all the pleasure and instruction I have derived from his volume.

"Waterfalls" of Heathen Origin.—Our lady readers may be surprised to hear that the present styles of wearing the hair in nets were practiced by the wild Karens in Burmah, more than thirty years ago. In a letter which Dr. Judson wrote, thirty-four years ago, he said: "On one Karen lady I counted between twelve and fifteen necklaces of all colors, sizes, and materials. Three was the average. Brass belts above the ankles; neat braids of black hair tied below the knees; rings of all sorts on the fingers; bracelets on the wrists and arms; long instruments of some metal perforating the lower part of the ear by an immense aperture, and reaching nearly to the shoulder; fancifully constructed bags enclosing the hair, and supended from the back part of the head, not to speak of their clothing, constituted their fashion and the ton of the fair Kareneses."

Success versus Skill.—It is told of the late Sir Astley Cooper, that on visiting Paris he was asked by the surgeon-in-chief of the empire how many times he had performed a certain wonderful feat of surgery. He replied that he had performed the operation thirteen times. "Ah, but monsieur, I have done him one hundred and sixty time. How many time did you save his life?" continued the curious Frenchman, after he had looked into the blank amazement of Sir Astley's face. "I," said the Englishman, "saved eleven out of the thirteen. How many did you save out of one hundred and sixty?" "Ah, monsieur, I lose dem all, but de operation was very brilliante."

"The success of 'Songs without Words,'" says the London Fun, "has of course suggested a companion series called 'Songs without Music,' by a highly talented author. They are to be sung, we hear, at a fanciful entertainment of the kind now popular, to be called 'Walks without Legs.' The author of this mélange is said to be one of our worst comic writers, and among its principal features is a variety of jokes without wit. As the entertainment will be especially adapted to audiences without sense, overflowing houses are expected."

Tom Thumb and the Yorkshireman.—A story is told by the Illustrated Times of a Yorkshireman who went to London especially to see Tom Thumb, and arrived on the night of his last levee, too late. In the dilemma he applied to an editor, to whom he had an introduction, to get him an interview. The editor took counsel with the colossal Paul Bedford, and Paul agreed to be "Tom Thumb" for the occasion. The Yorkshireman was then sent to his house. "Is General Tom Thumb at home?" asked the Yorkshireman. "Yes, sir," said the servant, who immediately ushered him into the portly presence. The Yorkshireman looked upon Paul Bedford, and Paul Bedford returned his gaze. "I beg your pardon," said the countryman, "there is some mistake. I wish to see General Tom Thumb." "I am General Tom Thumb!" said Paul, blandly. "You!" cried the astonished Yorkshireman. "Me! Sit down—sit down, dear boy, and take a glass of wine." "It is a swindle—a robbery—a do—an imposition!" roared the countryman. "What is?" asked Paul, innocently. "You are!" cried the Yorkshireman. "The bills say you are only two feet something high—that you only weigh seventeen pounds." "No more I do," said Paul, "in public; but I am in private here, at home, and taking my ease." "And—and your wife and baby?" stammered Roseberry Topping. "Just now they are out," was the reply, "and, therefore, of the size and weight described in the programmes. No one knows what we public characters go through in our anxiety to gratify our audiences. You see, during our levees we suffer so much from compression that we are obliged to resort to these means to restore the natural balance."

Singular Freak of a Fish-Hawk.—On Friday evening, about dusk, as we were passing up the Fourth avenue between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, we noticed a large gull or fish-hawk poising himself, and oscillating with his grand wings outstretched over and near the roof of a house in East Nineteenth street, near the centre of the square. We stood and watched him for a few moments, for he seemed to be perfectly fascinated with the smoke or color of the chimney, and apparently laved himself in it with the greatest pleasure. Presently, as we gazed, he lifted himself gradually to some two or three hundred yards more of altitude, and then, after one slow circle, darted like an arrow at the roof. He must, of course, have dashed himself to death, but whether he went into the chimney, or broke himself upon the roof, we could not see. Certainly he did not rise again, and our conclusion was, as we walked away, that he had been decoyed to his experiment, by the odor of some savory mess of fish, which was arising from the kitchen of the house where he made such an unexpected call.—Wilkes' Spirit of the Times.

Education.—"Without education," says Luther, "men are as bears and wolves." Is it not the clearest duty, prescribed by nature herself, under silent but real and awful penalties, for governing persons in every society to see that the people, so far as possible, are taught; that wherever a citizen is born, some chance be offered him of becoming "a man," and not a "bear or a wolf;" and more care be had that the intellect of such citizen, which is the sacred lamp of heaven, and (in the truest sense) God's own "revelation" to him, be not left smothered under dark ignorances, sensualities and sordid obstructions, but made to shine for him, and guide his steps toward a good goal? This is forever the duty of governors and persons of authority in human societies.—Carlyle.

Miss Emma Hardinge, who lectured through California some time since, and more recently starred the Atlantic States, is now lecturing in England, upon "America." The London announcement says: "Miss Emma Hardinge has for some years past been lecturing in the United States on the great political, social, and religious questions of the day, and her efforts have been everywhere greeted by vast and most enthusiastic audiences. During the political campaign in favor of the re-election of President Lincoln, Miss Hardinge delivered thirty-two orations in thirty-eight days. She also spoke the famous New York oration on Lincoln's death. She speaks entirely extemporaneously, and is pronounced by the American press to be 'the most wonderfully gifted and eloquent of living orators.'"

The Lincoln-literature has lately received an addition from abroad, in the shape of a handsome pamphlet, which contains six hundred lines, more or less, entitled "Sur Une Gravure Stances. A Abraham Lincoln." It is not, as we might expect, a monody on his "taking off," for most of it was written—its author, J. H. Serment, tells us—in 1864, "Ce n'était donc pas un chant de triumphe, mais un cri d'angoisse et de sympathie pour une grande cause, en meme temps de confiance en son avenir." The immediate cause of the poem appears to have been an engraving from a picture by M. Biard, representing some fugitive slaves pursued and overtaken by planters' dogs on the banks of a river.

"The Best" is the title of a weekly paper soon to be started in New York.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lobe, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 17. 1866.

HOWE LONG? HOWE LONG?

TO expect in this decade—perhaps we should say decadence—statesmanship in the Senate, or to look for those master efforts of eloquence which once went forth to thrill every nerve of the nation, would simply be to prepare the ground and sow the seed for an incalculable harvest of disappointment. But in view of the shrewdness and smartness for which country lawyers are celebrated, it would seem that we might count with some certainty upon occasionally hearing a bad cause tolerably well pleaded.

Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, made a speech on the 11th of January last which is now being circulated as a campaign document by the opponents of the Administration. Nothing more illogical, we apprehend, has ever before been shot into that memorable dust-cart, the Congressional Globe. In the outset he attempts to prove that the doctrine of State indestructibility is an absurdity, supporting his argument by the following "parallel:"

"Sir, I believe the laws of Connecticut forbid murder. But if some near and dear friend of yours should be waylaid, and have his throat cut from ear to ear, and you should apply for letters of administration upon his estate, would you not be surprised after you had marshalled in the probate court the proofs of his death, to be gravely told by the judge, 'Sir, you are mistaken; your friend cannot be dead: the law forbids murder. The cutting of your friend's throat was clearly illegal, and therefore null and void?'"

In this attempt to be clever, the Senator succeeds very well in making himself ridiculous. His illustration does not at all apply, and, with Senator Howe's leave we will shape a better one: Suppose, sir, it were claimed that some near and dear friend of yours had been murdered—stabbed, perhaps, to the heart with an ivory paper-cutter. Certain parties proposed to take possession of his effects and commit him to the grave without further ceremony. Knowing that he wore proof-mail, which rendered him invulnerable against all attempts upon his life, you refused to believe that he was dead, and eventually whipped those who asserted that he was until they confessed that they lied. Now, the case is parallel. But having fought to prove that our friend was not dead, having established the further fact that he cannot be killed, are we ourselves to proceed on the assumption that he is? Are we to shut him out from all social and political rights in the future, enter upon his estate and administer it without permitting his voice to be heard, tax him without allowing him representation, or are we to assist him to rise, brush the dust from his clothes, and once more establish himself in the attitude of a man? The idea of Senator Howe, that having fought over the body of a friend to prove that he is alive, we should proceed to bury him the moment the battle is ended, scarcely seems consistent. He also cites the fact that suicide is illegal, pointing to the absurdity of saying that because illegal it cannot be committed. Here again he by no means goes to the root of the matter. From the outset the Union party has claimed that, aside from being illegal, the suicide of a State is impossible—and we have proved it. Does Senator Howe insist that we now deal with the States which have attempted it as though they had succeeded in accomplishing their object?

Great complaint is made by the radicals of the familiar language which the President made use of in calling Forney a "dead duck" in the course of a few impromptu remarks upon an entirely unofficial occasion. President Lincoln's homely jokes and little anecdotes for a long time furnished food for the animadversion of his political enemies. Nor do we know that Senator Howe can stand forward as a type of dignity in debate, for in a solemn speech in the Senate—it certainly is stupid enough to be the very concrete essence of solemnity—speaking of the Southern States, he says:

"Perhaps the most succinct and apposite term to be found in the American lexicography would be to say they were 'played out.'"

It must at least be conceded to President Johnson that he made no attempt to shoulder his "dead ducks" off upon American lexicography.

As a humorist, Senator Howe signally fails. His jocoseness over Lazarus and the solemn scene of his resurrection, fails to amuse us, though we notice that the customary "[Laughter]" at that point interpolates the speech as reported in the Globe. To the Senator's thinking, Lazarus stands forth in history as the prototype of the South. It is a little singular that while the Senator was in so happy a humor, with so favorable an opportunity ready to his hand, he did not offer a resolution in Congress censuring the Savior for not having kicked Lazarus after raising him.

Indeed, Scripture seems to furnish Senator Howe with his principal illustrations, but we are rather surprised at his awkwardness in selecting from so fruitful a field only the ones that tell against himself. An engineer may hoist himself with his own petard occasionally, but it is not incumbent on him always to do so. For instance:

"Mr. President, will any one tell me that in spite of all these acts there are many good men in those communities, men as true to their convictions as are to be found anywhere? Who doubts it?—Who doubts that Paul, when he threw Christians into prison, compelled them to blaspheme, gave his voice against them when condemned to death, and went snuffing on their track toward Damascus, was as true to his convictions as ever he was? But who believes he was then a suitable or a safe guardian for the disciples of Christianity?"

The sequel of Paul's experience does not seem to occur to the Senator, but without belonging to a Bible-class he might remember that Paul was tenderly entreated of Heaven, and that to the small still voice which fell upon him he yielded that obedience and faith which he would perhaps have denied to harsher measures. Had the other Apostles refused to accept his conversion, insisting upon keeping him standing out in the cold in an indefinite probation, it is not unreasonable to suppose that Paul would very soon have gone back upon his new faith and relapsed into his former hardness of heart.

In his attempts to borrow illustrations from other sources, the Senator is quite as unfortunate as he is in his raids upon the sacred pages. The light of the stars is not made to shed the brightest of rays upon his argument, when, in allusion to the renunciation of the right of secession by some of the Southern States, he cries:

"Yes, Mr. President, they renounce it as Galileo renounced the theory of the earth's motion."

A shrewd controversialist would hardly compare the renunciation of a dogma like the right of secession to the renunciation, under compulsion, of an eternal truth, since established, for it is not the duty of the gladiator to put weapons into the hands of his opponents. On the whole, we fancy it will occur to the careful reader of Senator Howe's speech that, were he on trial for his life, and without counsel, he would consider it a serious misfortune to have the Senator appointed to defend him, for, however slight might be the evidence against him, with such an advocate his conviction might be counted on to a certainty. We are surprised that The Free American could not find a better campaign document than the speech it has chosen to publish.

A VOICE FROM YUBA.

WE have always admired the Marysville Appeal. Dignified in demeanor, calm in controversy, able in argument, the Appeal is one of the few papers to whose request for an exchange we have yielded without the mental annotation that in journalism, what seems a perfectly fair exchange, is very often, in point of fact, a robbery. Wearied with the perusal of papers, pamphlets, and books wherein the tenets and traditions of the English language were monotonously adhered to, discouraged at finding that in most instances our contemporaries preferred to spell their words and construct their sentences according to the dicta of fusty old pedagogues—sticklers for the preservation of the purity of the language—it was pleasant occasionally to turn to the columns of the Appeal and learn that one journal at least had the courage to set all such canons at defience. Its excursions into the fields of historical research and political economy were little less interesting than its wanderings in the more flowery paths of belles-lettres, its discoveries and announcements in the one direction being nearly if not quite as overwhelming as its innovations were startling in the other. To assert, however, that Andrew Johnson in refusing to yield to the sway of Sumner, Stevens, and others of the mad radical wing of the Republican party, betrays the confidence reposed in him by those who elected him to office, scarcely seems in keeping with its frequent tacit declaration that a verb is not bound to agree with its nominative case in number and person; though the discovery that Secretary Seward is in reality no statesman, besides being ambitious to a degree which renders him unworthy the confidence of his party, is certainly no less ingenious than the accompanying discovery that party is one of those exceptional nouns ending in y which do not form their plural in ies according to the common rule.

Second to the Appeal's discovery of the incapacity and vaulting ambition of our Republican Premier, we incline to rank its blazon of its conviction that "THE CALIFORNIAN is edited by a Webb-footed Union man, with no political pretentions or ability." Setting aside the delicate stroke of wit conveyed in the foregoing phenomenal sentence, viewing it as a solemn statement rather than as jeu d' esprit begotten of country air and exercise; waiving the criticism to which the fastidious mind might think it open, upon the score of decorum, not to say decency—we will not even more than passingly point to the suggestive fact that a daily paper, which makes political pretensions, should know how to spell at least one of the words, and that the editor would not have impaired his reputation for political ability by saying "nor ability" instead of "or ability," while he would have secured by the change the advantage of having one grammatical sentence in his paper. Thus lightly we glide over the perilous waters of our contemporary's orthography and syntax, feeling so complimented at finding ourselves seated in the same boat with Seward that we prefer to maintain the seat at all hazards, confident that, if the worst comes to the worst, that pedal peculiarity at which the Appeal so wittily hints will enable us to swim to the shore.

In a late number of our valued contemporary, we find a paragraph apologizing for a very sensible article taking a view of the present issue between Congress and the President entirely different from that which the paper had before expressed. The temporary absence of the editor is offered in excuse. Of the goings and comings of the editor we know nothing definite, but we some time since came to the conclusion not only that the schoolmaster up there was abroad, but also that he was bent on a permanent emigration. However, it was not during the absence of the editor, we apprehend, that the list of journals which support Congress appeared in its columns. Leading off the list was the APPEAL in letters which shouted, followed by Sacramento Union in type that whispered to the sight. The mild egotism of that arrangement excited our unbounded admiration. For the Sacramento Union is a power. Deprecating the position which it took at the outset of the present issue between Congress and the Executive, regretting the bitterness and unscrupulousness with which it has waged the fight, we still concede to it the credit of having brought into play the heaviest editorial artillery yet arrayed against the Administration. The Union's guns are heard at Washington, but we question whether the Appeal's smooth-bore platitudes create much concussion in the air outside of Yuba.

AMUSEMENTS.

SATURDAY last witnessed the production of The Seven Sisters at the Opera House to an immense audience. The name of the fashionable ladies who turned out at the matinée was legion. But the crowning triumph was reserved for the evening. Amid the glare of countless chandeliers and gas-burners the seven sisters did disport themselves upon the stage, while the manager, unable for the crowd to get in at the door, stood in front of the theatre and indulged in pleasant visions of a run. Nor, we are happy to say, has he been disappointed. Every night during the week the house has been crowded, and the sisters could not have drawn better had they been seven devils. We do not intend to ruffle the composure of the illustrious manager by a single harsh criticism. Things have gone hard enough with him in the line of his profession lately without our casting a stone to ruffle the smooth sea on which he is now sailing. We may say of the piece that it is excellently put upon the stage and that the closing scene is a grand triumph of taste and effect. We have seen the same piece better played, certainly, but we question whether it could be better played by the same company. Courtaine as the lady devil is very funny, and Mrs. Edwin as the leading sister enters into the spirit of the part with real zest. She drills her Zouave army like a born dragoon. Thorne, who committed the mistake on the first night of dressing up for Dave Scannell when playing an author's part—the Chief has not yet published his Memoirs of the Fire Department—dressed himself properly on subsequent occasions and did the little that he had to do well. Leman, who modernized the scene in which the Sister States are introduced, proved himself to be nearly as mighty with the pen as with the buskin. Jackson, as the inevitable negro, kept the audience in constant laughter, the result perhaps of being himself in such excellent humor over a recent happy event in his family that he could not refrain from publishing the occurrence. Little Harry Jackson—one of the seven precocious wonders of the world—was capital, and if the last addition to the Jackson race be as clever as he, the fortune of the father is indeed made. This afternoon and evening, and probably all next week, The Seven Sisters will be played.

Last evening, the charming comedienne, Miss Emily Thorne, was made the recipient of a complimentary farewell benefit—War to the Knife and The Laughing Hyena constituting the entertainment. It is not always safe to prophecy, but in this instance there is no danger of making a mistatement in positively asserting that the house was a full one, since all the dress circle seats were gone in the morning. An excellent cantatrice, pleasant in voice and manner, never overdoing her part, and always up to its requirements, Miss Thorne possesses all the elements of a popular favorite, and it is not at all surprising that our generous people turned out in such strength to give her a parting benefit.

At the Metropolitan, the Buislays have been busy with Le Pied de Mouton, or The Sheep's Foot, for ten days past. If anything may be predicted from the preparations, it will be one of the most gorgeous spectacular pieces ever produced in this city. A magic staircase, a ballet on skates—our managements generally let their ballets slide—eccentric wheels, dissolving views, fairies, demons, bats and acrobats—a perfect carnival of spectacle is promised. Miss Hinckley's shapely figure will appear vested in the most marvellous doublet and trunks; Mrs. Alicia Thorne—petite and pretty as a pink—is to have dances and songs to the audience's content, and all the ladies and gentlemen of the troupe, in fact, are suited with parts which fit them. Woodhull is added to the company, as well as Mme. Acosta and M. Weithoff—the latter is a famous skater. Monday night, the Sheep's Trotter will be trotted out, and long may it trot. This afternoon a grand matinee will be given, the comic pantomime of "The Country Apothecary," with the Buislays in their unparalleled feats, filling the programme.

At Hayes Park, to-morrow, a great balloon ascension is advertised. The balloon is christened The Pacific, and so large is it that two furnaces are necessary for its inflation. Ryland is the name of the adventurous æronaut, and "Come rise up, William Ryland," will be played by the band. It is not promised that Ryland will break his neck for the entertainment of the people, but, the chances lying in that direction, a great crowd will undoubtedly go out to see it done.

The Pacific Anatomical Museum still continues the favorite resort of those who wish to see themselves as others do not see them. Wonderful, wonderful indeed, are the works of wax! The soul that can wander among the physical curiosities which are revealed in this wonderful waxen world, without being wrought up to a pitch of enthusiasm by the sublimity of his surroundings, must indeed be dead to the beauties of nature and all the finer feelings of humanity. Smoothly as ever flows Dr. Jordan in his course of Sunday lectures.

Among theatrical on dits we may mention that Forrest is expected about the middle of next month, to open at Maguire's Opera House about the first of May. It is said that he will return to us Agnes Perry as his support. The seats will be sold at auction. The Menken is reported as due about the same time, but the movements of that eccentric star are not to be counted upon with any certainty. Whether Miss Emily Thorne will return East immediately or form some new combination or engagement for the entertainment of our public seems to be as yet uncertain. Mr. Charles Thorne proclaims an intention of going East very soon, but we rather fancy he will be persuaded to stay here a while longer. On the 10th of next month the Buislay family are up for departure, under the Platt management, taking with them Roundy and little Beneux—the latter displays a shrewdness beyond his years, or rather his size, and a proof of his capacity is found in the fact that to his care The Sheep's Foot is entrusted. Miss Hinckley threatens to go also on the 10th prox., but there is no telling what theatrical inducements to remain may not intervene. The Enchanted Beauty is underlined as the next spectacular novelty at the Opera House. Tibbetts, with his Brown's Horse, will return from Sacramento during the coming week.

NEW BOOKS FROM ROMANS'

BOOKS continue to multiply, reprints struggling with volumes written this side the Atlantic. In Half a Million of Money, Mrs. Amelia B. Edwards names a tempting sum, but it falls far short of the actual amount involved. The plot is a strange one, and yet in its details it scarcely has the air of novelty, for we recognize many old acquaintances. A whimsical old merchant died in 1760, leaving a fortune of half a million pounds, not to be divided among his three sons, but in trust, to accumulate for one hundred years, then to be divided between the eldest male issue of his eldest son and the city of London. At the end of the hundred years the money amounted to something more than four million pounds, so that the fortunate heir has reason to consider himself decidedly in luck. Brought up in ignorance of what is in store for him, he has no idea of the value of money, and on first coming into possession of it his time principally occupied in signing checks for his friends' use. The authoress conducts him through a course of club life, dispenses brandy-and-water and cigars as liberally as ladies always do in their con amore sketches of young men, but evinces decidedly more knowledge of her subject than most young ladies do. A rascally cousin has conspired to rob the hero of half his fortune, and this gives an opportunity for the introduction of a by-plot. Modern in scene, we finally see the hero fighting in Italy under Garabaldi; indeed there can be no complaint that the action of the book is not sufficiently varied and exciting. As a work of art less perfect than Barbara's History—by the same authoress—Half a Million of Money is still a most interesting novel and decidedly above the average. The English papers, however, say that she should have consulted a barrister before arranging the legal framework of the story, episode of the will, inheritance and all, turns out to be impossible in English law.

The Queen's Revenge, by Wilkie Collins, is a collection of stories and sketches by that author, most of which have appeared in English periodicals. All are good—many excellent.

Old New York; or, Reminiscences of the Past Sixty Years, is written by the late Dr. John W. Francis. An old Knickerbocker, everybody will remember Dr. Francis as one of those good natured, bustling gentlemen found in all societies. Very kind-hearted and a general favorite, he went everywhere, knew everybody, and acquired a reputation for a great deal more talent than he actually possessed. Reading the volume before us—prefaced by a memoir of the author written by Henry T. Tuckerman—we can but remark how much pleasanter it is to hear gossip than to read it. Conscientiously we cannot say that we admire Dr. Francis' style as a writer.

The Criterion is a collection of essays by H. T. Tuckerman, published in very handsome form by Hurd & Houghton. The subjects are familiar inns, authors, pictures, doctors, etc. Tuckerman is a close observer and analyzes well, but his great fault is prolixity. He elaborates an idea too much, and attempts to spread it over too large a surface. If he only had as many ideas as he has words, he would be a most remarkable writer.

In Principles of Education, the author of Amy Herbert has produced a book which commends itself directly to parents. Of all sciences, the one of female education seems to us the least understood, and the most imperfectly practiced. Mr. Sewell professes to derive the principles set forth in his book from "nature and revelation," and we assure the reader that sound common sense was not left out by him in his consultations.

In Poems Relating to the American Revolution, by Philip Freneau, we are carried directly back to "the times that tried men's souls." While many were at work with sword and bayonet, Freneau was busy with his pen, cheering the soldiers as they marched to battle, and stirring their hearts around the camp fires at night by his patriotic numbers. Very few prominent events of the Revolution escaped the muse of Freneau, and he even lived to commemorate the incidents of the second war with Great Britain in 1812. The naval victories of Hull, Macdonough, Porter, and others, were celebrated by him in verse which excited emulation in all who sailed beneath the blue. In this degenerate and ungrateful age Freneau may be to a great extent forgotten, but it may be assumed that a poet from whom both Campbell and Scott condescended to borrow whole lines is not destitute of merit. The book is prefaced with an introductory memoir of the author by Evert A. Duckink.

It has of late been fashionable to abuse Tupper, but he has never excited our ill-will to the degree of saying cruel things about him. As a poet he is rather prosy, but he always inculcates the best sentiments, and young ladies may turn over his pages with perfect safety. As a novelist he is by no means bad. The Crock of Gold amused and interested us much—it was many years ago that we read it, and most novels were forbidden to our eyes. The Twins and Heart may be called companion tales to The Crock of Gold. If we remember rightly, the thesis of the latter story was "Thou shalt not covet." So in The Twins the author sets forth, very delicately, the sin and evil consequences of committing adultery; while in The Heart "thou shalt not bear false witness" is the reigning moral. We should not be at all surprised to see Martin Farquhar yet illustrate each of the commandments by a neat little novel.

We always take T. S. Arthur up with care and lay him down tenderly. There is so little of him that the mind is agitated by a terrible apprehension that he may break, dissolve, or in some way disappear. Eminent advocate of temperance though he is, we sometimes wish that Mr. Arthur would infuse a little spirit into his works. Or, if prejudiced against anything strong, why not give us water pure instead of milk and water. The Lost Bride is before us. We have not read it, and do not intend to, for man is not immortal. But we know very well what it is all about. A few couples meet each other in a sort of country cotillon, balance backwards and forwards, chassée, and talk twaddle to each other, all conducting themselves in a perfectly proper manner, until ten o'clock comes, when the lights will be blown out and the party dismissed with some parting injunction from the author similar in freshness and originality to that rather trite aphorism, "Be virtuous and you will be happy." Long since we succeeded in ciphering Arthur's stock in trade and general style down to so fine a point that now it is not at all necessary to read his stories.

WE think the true meaning of the President's "dead ducks" has not yet been reached. He simply intended to intimate that Forney was given to the circulation of short-lived canards.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

THOSE who have read attentively the police reports for the past five years, will remember one name which was of frequent occurrence—a woman's. It could be counted upon with regularity. The facetious reporter always had his favorite joke thereupon—no need that we repeat the oft told stale, for it is familiar to all. In this woman, too, the faithful policeman had a treasure. No matter how unproductive his round was, though he walked the street the night through without finding a single case of even incipient intoxication or mild larceny to report, he still had one resource. His reputation for vigilance need not be suffered to go by default in absence of an arrest. Let him turn to any of her familiar haunts, and he was sure to find MARY HOLT in a state which warranted her committal to the station house.

Regularly every morning her face was to be seen among the many in the dock, peering over the heads of the other prisoners like a bloated moon about to set after an all night's debauch. The charge against her was always the same, and her answer was unvarying. "Drunk in the streets, your honor." No special pleading was ever attempted by her—never did she attempt to deny or extenuate her offence. In the earlier part of her career she may have urged epilepsy as an explanation of the condition in which she was found, representing that fits ran in the family, and she was their victim. But, of late years, no subterfuge of that kind commended itself to her. Drunkenness had become her normal condition and sobriety was not expected, indeed, would not be believed, of her. To have appeared in Court with the assertion that she was sober would have been regarded as the very wildness of intoxication, the first whispering of delirium, and instead of a comfortable cell in common with a few boon companions in the city prison, or more solitary confinement in the county jail, an asylum would have become her home.

At times it has seemed that she was conscious that she had a certain reputation to sustain, and rather gloried in the consistency with which she sustained it. The Judge looked for her in the dock as regularly as he looked for the appearance of the bald head of his clerk at the desk below, and she never disappointed him. As his eye turned inquiringly in that direction, then resting satisfiedly upon her with "You here again, Mary?" her face would glow with something akin to enthusiasm and pride, a certain sense of duty fulfilled was visible in her attitude and seemed to creep into the accents of her voice as she answered with the semi-unconscious half-deprecating air of one who has done good by stealth and blushes to find it fame: "Yes, your honor." Then the Judge put his spectacles upon his nose, expressed in set terms his sorrow at the error of her ways with rather an approving air than otherwise, and spoke her sentence as though he were chewing comfits. Mary would then be led below, almost as considerately as though she were a Duchess; and glancing over at the reporters' table it was plain to see by the smile upon the features of the humorous member of that fraternity, as he sharpened his pencil and settled himself squarely in his seat, that he was preparing to rewrite his favorite joke.

But a slight mistake occurred on Saturday morning last, and the usual programme was varied. A vigilant officer, having no one to arrest, and knowing one locality to which he could betake himself with as much certainty of finding something as the schoolboy has when he dives into the burrow of his rabbit, bent his steps towards the particular sidewalk under which Mary was accustomed to sleep. Sure enough, he found her; unconscious to all around her—even unconscious, perhaps, that the whisky bottle by her side was empty. As usual he tumbled her into a cart and drove her to the Station House. It was on tumbling her out that the little mistake was discovered. She was dead. Three persons on that eventful morning were signally disappointed; the Judge who was accustomed to pronounce her sentence, the clerk who recorded it, and the reporter who was cheated of an opportunity to ventilate his favorite joke. The latter did indeed sharpen his pencil and jot down as the head-line of a paragraph, "LOST HER HOLT," but to his credit be it said that he blotted it out, and I do sincerely hope that in view of that one act of mercy, the Recording Angel will drop tears upon some of his many offences in writing them down and blot out a few forever.

On that Saturday morning, you see, it fell to the lot of another Judge to speak Mary's sentence to so many days below. And in view of the poor creature's miserable life and unutterably wretched death, and the many days she spent "below" on earth, I do hope that that last sentence was a short one.

INIOO.

H. M. HEUSTON, of the well-known firm of Henston, Hastings and Co.—whose name the observant reader has occasionally met with upon suburban walls—leaves for the Atlantic States and Europe in the steamer of Monday next. If the people about the Tuilleries do not see themselves advised by placards on the wall of the Palace to go to Heuston, Hastings, and Co. to buy their clothing, while travellers in Egypt find the same injunction staring them in the face from the blank sides of the pyramids, we have entirely underrated Mr. Henston's indefatigability.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Masterson Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Masterson Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. By James E. Ashcom, Deputy Clerk.

de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Aadrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. } By Jas. E. Ashcom, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. } B. S. Brooks,
de23-3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

CHARLES F. RIEHN,

OF

Riehn, Hemme & Co.,

ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Doboc, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5-3m

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., puctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MARCH 19, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

MARCH 30, - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

FAUST CELLAR,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24 3m

---

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON ——————, - - - - - APRIL —, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply at the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

fe23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30-3m

---

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church,)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.

Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30-3m

---

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 Sacramento street, Corner of Webb,

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

de17-3m

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO.

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy

IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only, by

SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fe17-3m San Francisco, Cal.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24-3m

---

HAMLIN & CROSS.

GEO. HAMLIN.....F. L. CROSS.

DEALERS IN CHEAP PUBLICATIONS,

STATIONERY, BLANK BOOKS,

MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS,

611 Montgomery street, corner of Merchant.

fe24-tf

MAPS! MAPS! MAPS!

NEW MAPS OF MEXICO, JUST OUT;

NEW MAPS OF IRELAND;

CHART OF OUR FALLEN HEROES.

Maps of every description constantly on hand.

W. HOLT,
dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
dec9-3m 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Loue Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House ,8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wisbes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
fe6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fs5-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M fe25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $1 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

Wine of Pepsine,

OR,

RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh rennets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.

For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

GLUCOLEIN,

A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF

COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.

Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eruptations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.

Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crude oil.

Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fc3

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late eat INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

HOLT'S MAP

OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by

WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Pianist,

AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms, No. 20 Montgomery street, opposite the Lick House. fc3-2m

---

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No.	1 cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
"	2 cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
"	3 cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
"	4 cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
"	5 cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
"	6 cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
"	7 cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
"	8 cures Neuralgia, Tootbache, Faceache.	25
"	9 cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
"	10 cures Dyspepsia, Billions Stomach.....	25
"	11 cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
"	13 cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
"	14 cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
"	15 cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
"	16 cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
"	17 cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
"	18 cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
"	19 cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
"	20 cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
"	21 cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
"	22 cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
"	23 cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
"	24 cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
"	25 cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
"	26 cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
"	27 cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
"	29 cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
"	31 cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
"	32 cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
"	33 cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
"	34 cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year by mail to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must dressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON SATURDAY, - - - APRIL 14TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

EARL HALDEN'S DAUGHTER.

A BALLAD—A. D. 1400.

I.

IT was Earl Haldan's daugbter,
She looked ncross the sea;
She looked across the water,
And long and loud laughed she:
"The locks of six princesses
Must be my marriage fee,
So hey bonny boat, and ho bonny boat!
Who comes a-wooing me!"

II.

It was Earl Haldan's daughter,
She walked along the sand:
When she was aware of a knight so fair,
Come sailing to the land.
His sails were all of velvet,
His mast of beaten gold,
And "hey bonny boat, and ho bonny boat,
Who saileth here so bold!"

III.

"The locks of five princesses
I won beyond the sea;
I shore their golden tresses,
To fringe a cloak for thee.
One handful yet is wanting,
But one of all the tale;
So hey bonny boat, and ho bonny boat!
Furl up thy velvet sail!"

IV.

He leapt into the water,
That rover young and bold;
He gript Earl Haldan's daughter,
He shore her locks of gold;
"Go weep, go weep, proud maiden,
The tale is full to-day.
Now hey bonny boat, and ho bonny boat!
Sail westward, ho, and away!"

[Charles Kingsley.

THE CONFESSIONS OF PUFF.

THERE are few productioas so attractive as confessions. Despite of all experience, the word "confessions" has a charm that few can resist. We know that of all the productions of an author, his confessions are probably the most unreal and the most romantic; and yet, in spite of all this—possibly because of it—confessions, although the most deceptive of books, are the most profitable of speculations; and when an author, hard up for material, boldly plunges the knife into his own bosom, and serves himself up with his own sauce, the public generally relishes the dish. A well-known Parisian journalist—if our readers will pardon the expression—has just cooked his owa goose iu this fashion, and has laid opeu the secrets of an organization which has flourished for a loag time amongst our clever neighbors, but to which the more matter-of-fact British genius has never aspired. The French man of business gives the English credit for being far ahead of his countrymen in the great art of advertisiug—just as every nation will readily cede to another the palm of diplomacy, however egotistic it may be on all other questions; and the common, clumsy advertisement, which every one knows to be such, passes in France by the name of annonce Anglaise. But the ingenious French mind does not stop there. In addition to the ordiaary annonce, the French press has its réclames and its faits-divers; which, put into plain English, mean puffs ordinary and puffs extraordinary; and the journal, from the official Moniteur to the lowest printed sheet, has its graduated tariff of mercenary enthusiasm, varying in price from a few sous to six francs a line. This system has been in opcration for many years, and it may easily be conceived how much it has done for the welfare, if not for the independence, of the French Press. One would have thought such a system sufficient to meet the wants of even "the most spiritual people in the world;" but genius cuts out new paths where ordiaary mortals imagine nothiag more can be done.

M. Villemessant came up to Paris, a young mau from the country, a good many years since, and seeing that the edifice of Réclame was not quite complete, he invented the crowning stone of the Courrier. He started a journal of fashion, called the Sylphide; and he tells very naively how he worked the new oracle, and who helped him in his labors. He says: "I set about finding a female chronicler of the fashions; not one of those comtesses or marquises of Carnival, whose titles are derived from the golden book of pseudoayms, but a real lady of the fashionable world; and I was lucky enough to put my hand on one of the true aristocracy of the empire, who signed her articles with the high-sounding name of the Duchesse d'Abrantès." The Courrier was, and still is, a list of the fashionable world—a mosaic of silks, satins, ornaments, and perfumes to be used by the upper ten thousand, cleverly worked up by a female hand, and coutaining special mention of the wares of those who were willing to pay the piper. M. Villemessaut says modestly: "I was unable to put together thirty lines of an article; but I was soon master of all the slides and strings, and no one knew better than I did how to to inspire a réclame, or to put my finger on the sensitive chord of the advertiser." Aad he gives us some amusing specimens of the products of his new workshop. Here we have an example of the rèclame élégiaque: "A Grisette's Legacy.—Last Sunday, the occupants of a house ia the Rue Saint-Honoré were in chase of a canary, which was flyiag about their premises, having come from nobody knew where. The pursuit was all the more eager from the fact that the hird had a piece of paper attached to its neck by a thread. At leugth the little creature was made captive, the paper detached, unfolded, and read. Its contents were as follows: 'Poor, ill, without work or any other resource, I know not what will become of me. I am only twenty; but I will not lead a life of shame! I have decided: all will be ended to-night. The ouly friend I have in the world is this little bird, which I set at liberty! I implore the person who may catch it to take great care of it. It sings so sweetly, poor little thing! Signed, Marie.' The bird was taken by M. ——, proprietor of the establishment of the Rue ——, who gave it asylum, and watches over it with religious care." This puff was duly exhibited beforehand to the proprietor in question, who was delighted with it; and the success was so great that he was compelled to buy a canary, and hang its cage up in the most prominent part of his shop. The shopkeeper had bought a hird that did not sing; and a seatimental lady who had read the sad story, said, "Poor litttle thing, it mourns for its mistress!"

M. Villemessant treats us to specimens of the réclame á double détente—in which two hirds are killed with one stone—and other wonderful examples of his uew art. He tells us that the perfumers, silk-mercers, and modestes bit like gudgeons, and that a fortaight after the Sylphide was started he had orders on hand for rèclames to the extent of many thousand francs. But he wanted a little ready money; so he picked out a great house, one of the retail silk aud calico lords who had never condescended to the réclame. With a bit of draft enthusiasm in his hand he approached the potentate—whose name, as well as those of his other clients, he gives at full length—and with a trembling hand he turned the handle of the door which led iuto the great man's sauctum. After a few preliminary remarks, the precious bit of copy was read; the great man, who had never advertised in his life, was so struck with the idea, and so charmed with young M. Villemessant, that a bargain was concluded at once, and the journalist departed with twelve hundred francs, twelve piles of five-franc pieces in silver, which M. Villemessant calls the columns of his new temple, safe in the depths of his breeches-pockets—famous ballast against the lightness of his heart.

M. Villemessaat tells some amusing anecdotes of the modesty of some of his clients. One perfumer was indignaut at being called in the Courrier the "Demi-dieu of Perfumes." "Demi-dieu," said the purveyor of sweet smells, "and pray who is the dieu of perfumes—M.- —— or M. ——?" Another client, a fashionable tailor, said: "I have a horror of a large amount of puffery; when you speak of me, say simply, Le dieu de la Mode—no more!" Could modesty go beyond that? M. Villemessant has started innumerable journals. If the Sylphide was his hors-d'œuvre, Figaro was, and still is, his piece de résistance; while the Grand Journal and the Evènement are recent additions to his bill of fare. He has worked the réclame in every possible form, and his Courrier has become a feature in almost every publication. He tells us how he introduced the new notion iuto the great papers; he went to M. de Girardin, whose journal, La Presse, was already on the high road of success, and whose device at that time was, "A new idea every day." M. Villemessant's little proposition struck him at once; it was new, and promised to he fruitful. M. de Girardin closed with the proposal instantly, and said, "I will give you the feuilleton of La Presse once a week; you will do what you please with it, but you must take care that the matter is well manaaged. You shall give me a hundred francs a week, and pay me a month in advance." The money was paid next moruing; and then, says M. Villemessant, the next thing was to sub-let the apartments in the house he had taken. This, too, was soon achieved. One celebrated goldsmith—whose name is given in full—ordered twelve bits of interested enthusiasm, of from five to ten lines in leugth, at the rate of a hundred francs each; and before long, to quote M. Villemessant's own words, "I found gold on the very surface, and had only, as it were, to stoop—me baisser—happy expression!—to pick up orders." Many of these courriers de modes are written by ladies.

M. Villemessant has himself told us that his Duchesse was really a member of the haut monde, although she borrowed a title that did not quite belong to her; and he tells us how he seduced another lady of title into the business. The latter was, and is, a marquise; and was at the time referred to, living in such state that the pushing young maa from the country was quite dazzled when he approached the sanctum of the grand bas-bleu. The lady condescended to enter into the business, assuming a title below that which was hers by right, and the courriers of the Comtesse —— had immense success. The lady is well known and respected by all who move in the literary circles of Paris; she is not so young or so rich as she once was, but she is spirituelle, and has written some very clever books. We could name another comtesse—if we thought it polite to snatch the loup from a lady's face—a real, living, breathing, clever, laughing countess, who now wields the courrier pen in a well-known daily journal. These things are no secrets in Paris; but when writing in an English journal it is fitting to write as English journalists do, and so we leave to M. Villemessant the amusing task of unmasking the ladies. Comtesse has becoaie almost the universal title of those who chronicle the elegances of fashionable life in Paris; but all comtesses are not countesses—all are not even women; many a Comtesse du Carnaval wears a beard behind her mask. M. Villemessant does not hesitate to name at least one well-known journalist who has done, who perhaps still does, courrier work; who is, or was, not above taking a leasc of a literary apartmeut, and letting it out by the yard. It is an ingenious mode of doing immense service to others without self-sacrifice; and there is, of course, nothing exclusive or unfair in the matter, for the Courrier des Modes, like the London Tavern, is open to all the world—who can pay for its advantages. M. Villemessant confesses all these things, and many more, in his last new publication; and mentions in his confessions many names of living individuals and existing firms incidentally. We suppose this is a new form of réclame, possibly to become famous under the title of the Confessional! We do not think, however, that the new notion is so good as that which made the fortune of the modest young uian from the country, who signs himself H. de Villemessant.

A STRANGE WEDDING.—The St. Louis Democrat says that, a few days ago, Charles Moritz, a returned soldier, being anxious to marry and settle down, offered an acquaintance fifty dollars, provided he procured him a person of whom he might make a wife. The bargain was struck, and Moritz's friend and a few others determined to work a practical joke on the bachelor. They had a boy, dressed up in women's clothing, introduced to Moritz, who was pleased with the look of the bargain, and, arrangements being made to that end, a confederate joker married the pair, and received five dollars from the happy bridegroom for tying the knot. Moritz also paid over seventy dollars lor the wedding supper, and gave his bride a handsomc present in money. The sudden illness of a sister called the bride away from the wedding feast, and she did not return. Next day Moritz set out to hunt her ap, when he was told the whole affair was a farce. He did not regard the matter in the same light, and the parties to it are in jail for trial on a charge of swindling.

DURING all this clamor of Congress for severity towards the conquered States, the exhibitioa which a very large number of Congressmen made of themselves on the field of the first Bull Run will occur to a great many minds. Their scrambling was a sight to see. The Springfield Republican says most truly, that the men who put down the rebellion do not join ifi the demand for the further punishment of the Secessionists, but, "If there is a general who has never won a battle, a soldier who invariably skulked when fighting was to he done, a camp-follower who was ever on hand to plunder conquered towns, a civilian who was always ready to pour out the blood and money of everybody else to save tho nation—these are the men who are now eager to kick the prostrate foe and confiscate his valuables—these are the men who are continually making abortive attempts to arouse all hatreds and stir the popular heart to vengeance."

AT St. Louis, during the month of January, the different railroad companies ran four-horse omnibuses, loaded with passengers, across the ice-bridge of the Mississippi river. The event is interesting, as one which does not occur once in many years. There is no doubt that, if iron tracks had been laid, the steaai locomotives could have crossed with equal safety.

A WEDDING BREAKFAST was given by a substantial farmer, blessed with five daughters, the eldest being the bride, when a neighbor, a young farmer, who was honored with an invitation, thinking, no doubt, he ought to say somethiug smart and complimentary on the event, addressing the bridegrooiu, said: "Well, you have got the pick of the batch!"

SOUTHERN lawyers are reaping abundant pecuniary harvests by their charges in drawing up petitions in behalf of Southern applicants for pardon. One attorney, of South Carolina, has forwarded upward of one thousand petitions to the Attorney-General's office, for each of which he received the fee of twenty-five dollars.

M. SARDON, the French playwright, having recently had an interview with tho Empress Eugénie, at Compiègne was complimented by her Majesty, upon his efforts to ridicule the prevailing extravagance in ladies' toilets. The Empress said that she had tried, last winter, to set the example of greater simplicity of dress, and that she was determined to wear still more unpretending toilets this season.

LADIES.—We sincerely believe that you will be pleased and gratified with the tone and beauty imparted to the complexion by Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To Poor Writers.—If you would learn to write a good hund, try the Babbittonian—the new system of instruction in penmanship. It is the cheapest and best. Purchase the forms, which will be the only instruction you need, and practice will make you an excellent pensman. Call on Warren Holt, Room No. 2, Mead House, corner Pine and Montgomery streets, and learn particulars. Read the following:

The Babbittonian system of Penmanship appears to me really to possess all the advantages which it claims in the above printed summary.

Rev. P. V. Veeder,
Principal of City College, San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 13, 1865.

The elements and principles of the Babittonian Penmanship seem to me valuable for their practicability and simplicity. I do not hesitate to add my testimony in favor of this system as one of the best in use.

J. C. Pelton,
Superintendent Public Schools.

State of California,
Department of Public Instruction,
San Francisco, Oct. 16, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern: I have carefully examined the Babbittonian system of Penmanship, and take pleasure in recommending it to teachers and others interested, as one which possesses many merits. Its cheapness is one of its more cordent merits.

JOHN SWETT. Supt. Pub. Instruction.

Taking Lessons from Us.—The English are beginning to evince a desire to learn how to read and write the English language. The dictionaries of Webster and Worcester have been republished in England, and are received by a large number of Englishmen as standard authorities for the languago. The Babbitonian Penmanship, an American system, has been republished in London and adopted by prominent seminaries there, and may possibly do away with some of the stiffness of style of writing still prevalent there. The New York Times remarks that the English first gave us a language, and taught us to speak and write; we give it back to them with interest, improved and made more useful to the mass of the people.—Morning Call, Jan. 7th.

To the Sick and Afflicted.—We can honestly recommend those who are suffering from diseases of long standiug, or from the use of mercury, to call at the Electric Medical Institute. The system practiced by Dr. Howard und his associates is the most sensible we have heard advocated. If there is anything that deserves the name of humbug, it is that which claims to cure every disease with one remedy or system. It would not be more ridiculous if Dr. Howard's Rheumatic remedy was advertised as a cure-all. In diseases peculiar to females Dr. Howard has no superior; particularly in chronic irregularities he is unsurpassed by any other physician in the State. We are personally acquainted with a number of ladies who have been restored to health at the institute, notwitstanding their complaints being pronounced incurable by some of the best physicians in the city. To all who need the assistance of a physician, we would say, call at the Electric Medical Institute, 648 Washington street, before going elsewhere. In Dr. Howard you will find a gentleman who is worthy of your confidence.—S. F. Irish People.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgicul Institute, No. 648 Washiugton street, near Kearny.

Read the following letter:

San Francisco, February 12, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with Rheumatism for seven years; a great part of the time I was unable to do anything, and my ankle would swell to such an extent that I could not wear a boot. I tried every known remedy, and many Physicians who would insist on my confining myself to my room; but it was of no use: I only became worse and almost discouraged. I accidentally saw one of your bills, and although I had little confidence in your remedy, I commenced using it, and you may judge of my surprise when, after using it three days, I was able to go to work. I am now as well as ever I was in my life, and I have not lost any time while taking your remedy, except the first three days.

In order to benefit others, and to assure you of my gratitude, you may publish this if you think proper to do so.

Your friend,
R. W. Mabery, 120 Natoma street.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wanted—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. Shear, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California.

On the "Qui Vive."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

Concord Wagons and Harness.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

Dainty Work.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medicul and Surgica Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfure of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

Opinions of the Press.—We call the particular attention of our readers to the advertisement of Dr. P. Howard, in another column. It gives us pleasure to recommend to those who need the assistance of a physician, the valuable services of Dr. P. Howard and his associates. In a city like San Francisco, where there are so many disreputable concerns, it is gratifying to find one worthy of the confidence and patronage of the people. At the Electric Medical and Surgical Institute, 648 Washington street, the gentlemen conducting it are eminently qualified, and the system they practice is based on sound and philosophical principles, comprising within itself the Hydropathic and Electropathic systems, and the Electric practice of medicines. To the ladies we can recommend the Electric system as particularly adapted to their delicate constitutions. The rooms are fitted up in splendid style, and the Bathroom is large and convenient. Their Electropathic instrument is one of the best we have ever seen, having six different currents of great power, yet so well controlled and regulated that it can be applied to the most delicate. The numerous patients thronging the Institute, and their happy faces, speak volumes in its favor. The best surgical skill is also to be found at the Institute. In fact, we are satisfied that there is more scientific attainment than at any other Institute in the State. Dr. P. Howard was, in former years, the proprietor of the Electropathic Institute, and established for it a reputation second only to the Eclectic Institute. Being compelled to visit Mexico on business, the Institute passed into other hands. Dr. P Howard has been long and favorably known, and to those who are in need of the services of a physician we recommend him as in every way worthy of their confidence.—S. F. Irish News.

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lend Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

For the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 2d of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30-3m

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - , - - - MARCH 8,

BY

McGANN & CO.,

FASHIONABLE HATTERS,

No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

NEW BOOKS

JUST RECEIVED AT

A. ROMAN & CO.'S.

Across the Continent: A Summer's Journey to the Rocky Mountains, the Mormons, and the Pacific States, with Speaker Colfax: By Samuel Bowles, Editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
Winnifred Bertram, and the World She Lived In. By the author of "The Schonberg-Cotta Family."
Personal Reminiscences of the Life and Times of Rev Gardner Spring, D. D., with Portrait.
The Pilgrim's Wallet; or Scraps of Travel gathered in England, France and Germany. By Gilbert Haven.
A Spinster's Story. By M. A. F.
Tales, Romances and Extravaganzas. By Thomas Hood.
A Summer in Skye. By Alexander Smith.
Winning his Way. By "Carleton."
The Letters of Mozart. Translated by Lady Wallace.
The Freedman's Book. By L. Maria Child.
A Biography of Richard Cobden: By John McGilchrist.
Herman: or Young Knighthood. By E. Foxton.
Later Lyrics. By Julia Ward Howe.
Country Love vs. City Flirtation; or Ten Chapters from the Story of a Life. Reduced to Rhyme, for Convenience Sake, by H. T. Sperry.
Fighting Joe; or, The Fortunes of a Staff Officer. By Oliver Optic.
The Privateersman. By Captain Marryat, R. N.
The Dutch Pilgrim Fathers. By Edward Hopper.
DeVaue; a Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.
Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. By J. G. Holland.
The Priuce of Kushna; a West Indian Story. By Richard H Kimball.

COMPLETE SETS OF

Bohn's Celebrated Libraries.

We have on hand the largest stock of

Standard, Miscellaneous

AND

LIBRARY BOOKS

TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
fe2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MARCH 19, - - - - - GOLDEN AGE
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Horner.)

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cyliadrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick ilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.
CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!
W. D. FARRAND.

1886. 1866. 1866.

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

LAMOTT,
THE LEADER AND INTRODUCER OF
FASHIONS,

HAS OPENED HIS MAMMOTH HAT AND CAP Establishment at

227 Montgomery street, near Pine, Russ Block,

Where can be found the greatest variety of Hats and Caps for Gents', Youths' and Children's wear ever offered on this coast.

He outshines them all, and defies competition in the Hat Business.

His Factory at the East makes all his Goods expressly for his California market, which is something that has never been done before. Give him a call at

227 MONTGOMERY STREET.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S
Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,
A few doors below Kearny, - . - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,
C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,
WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,
No. 641 Commercial street,
A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the URINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., de16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,
OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Ready Made and to Order.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoint Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

NOTICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

FAIRBANK'S STANDARD
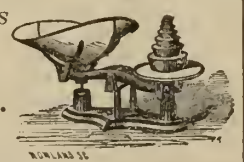
SCALES.



Every HOUSEKEEPER should have a reliable SCALE in the PANTRY to use in testing the weight of ARTICLES purchased from the BUTCHER and GROCER.

See samples of all sizes at Salesroom.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,
mar4-1m 334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

---

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT'S
STEAM
PRINTING HOUSE, 533
CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NEW.

PIANOS FOR SALE

AND TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,
AT
Kohler's Music Store,
No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.
fe20-1m

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Series every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

---

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,
422 KEARNEY STREET
BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,
SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES
de23-3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF,

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,
fe2 SAN FRANCISCO,

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

J. PEIRCE,
Furniture and Bedding
WAREROOMS,

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
731 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President
fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - . San Francisco.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
de30 3m San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,
COSTUMER,
No. 710 Washington street,
(A few doors above Kearney,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.
de30 3m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

fe10-3m

THE EXCELSIOR HAT

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Paris, New York and London

STYLES FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER,

1866,

WAS INTRODUCED

Saturday, - - - - March 3,

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial street..San Francisco
No. 125 J street.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second streets.....Marysville

Our style in MOLESKIN for this season is, we feel confident, the SUPERLATIVE OF ELEGANCE AND FINISH; our MERINO PINAUD and ST. CLOUD the most successful result of Parisian taste. Especial attention also deserve our Chelsea, Chester, Crescent, Newport, Derby, and Clarendon Resorte.

CALL AND SEE THEM. mar4-1m

FOR GENUINE

Scotch Ginghams,

AND

CHOICE DRESS GOODS,

GO TO

S. MOSGROVE,

222 Third street, Colton's Building.

fe23 tf

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,
MERCHANDISE,
FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

NEW BOOKS

JUST RECEIVED AT

A. ROMAN & CO.'S.

Across the Continent: A Summer's Journey to the Rocky Mountains, the Mormons, and the Pacific States, with Speaker Colfax: By Samuel Bowles, Editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
Winnifred Bertrum, and the World She Lived In. By the author of "The Schoaberg-Cotta Family."
Personal Reminiscences of the Life and Times of Rev. Gardner Spring, D. D., with Portrait.
The Pilgrim's Wallet; or Scraps of Travel gathered in England, France and Germany. By Gilbert Haven.
A Spinster's Story. By M. A. F.
Tales, Romances and Extravaganzas. By Thomas Hood.
A Summer in Skye. By Alexander Smith.
Winning his Way. By "Carleton."
The Letters of Mozart. Translated by Lady Wallace.
The Freedman's Book. By L. Maria Child.
A Biography of Richard Cobden: By John McGilchrist.
Herman: or Young Knighthood. By E. Foxton.
Later Lyrics. By Julia Ward Howe.
Country Love vs. City Flirtation; or Ten Chapters from the Story of a Life. Reduced to Rhyme, for Convenience Sake, by H. T. Sperry.
Fighting Joe; or, The Fortunes of a Staff Officer. By Oliver Optic.
The Privateersman. By Captain Marryat, R. N.
The Dutch Pilgrim Fathers. By Edward Hopper.
DeVano; a Story of Plebeians and Patricians. By Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.
Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects. By J. G. Holland.
The Prince of Kashna; a West Indian Story. By Richard H Kimball.

COMPLETE SETS OF

Bohn's Celebrated Libraries.

We have on hand the largest stock of

Standard, Miscellaneous

AND

LIBRARY BOOKS

TO BE FOUND IN THE CITY.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
fe2 417 and 419 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED,
mar10 3m SAMUEL WHITE.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.
mar2 3m

THE

MUTUAL

Life Insurance Company

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED 1842.

Assets, ALL Cash,

OVER

$14,000,000!

AN EXAMPLE OF THE

DIVIDENDS OF 1866.

POLICY NO. 33,321,

FOR

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!

Issued in San Francisco, August 22, 1864.

The amount Premium paid thereon in one year was $304 40.

The Amount of Dividend for one year to August 22, 1865, was $539 62,

Being $235 22 More than am't Premium paid,

Making the amount of Policy on August 22, 1865,

$10,539 62!

If the Dividend is used in payment of Premium, instead of being added to the Policy, the next payment required will be

Only $88 22,

instead of $304 40.

OTHER EXAMPLES OF

Policies Issued in 1864.

Amount Policy.	Premiums paid One Year.	Dividends One Year.
$10,000	$220 80	$394 77
5,000	120 72	237 27
2,500	87 40	141 80
1,000	21 70	39 48

ALL THE PROFITS OF THE COMPANY ARE

DIVIDED ANNUALLY,

AMONG THE STOCKHOLDERS,

AND

CAN BE USED IN PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS, OR ADDED TO THE POLICY, AT THE OPTION OF THE ASSURED.

ALL POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

LIFE POLICIES ISSUED,

PAID UP IN FIVE OR TEN YEARS.

AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES issued, paid up in Ten Years or otherwise.

CHILDREN'S ENDOWMENT POLICIES, Etc.

H. S. HOMANS,

General Agent for California, Oregon, and Nevada.

No. 609 Clay street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—Holders of Policies issued through this Agency in 1864 can ascertain the amount of their Dividends upon application to the General Agent, and the Amount of Dividends on Policies issued in 1865 as soon as received.

fe17-1m

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

THE NORTH BRITISH AND

MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immedintely on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

NATIONAL

Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE.

Brannan's Express Building

402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)

PERMANENT OFFICE,

(After March 1st,)

408 Montgomery street,

Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,

Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends declared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTIBLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.

STEPH. T. KING,

General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,

712 Montgomery street,

fe24-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

GRAND MATINEE:
AT HALF PRICES, Commencing at 2 o'clock,

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, MARCH 17,

The Successful Operatic, Spectacular, Diabolical, Terpsichorean, Farcical Burletta in Three Acts, entitled the

SEVEN SISTERS!

Produced with THE FULL STRENGTH OF THE POPULAR DRAMATIC COMPANY, and a
Grand CORPS DE BALLET of
FIFTY YOUNG LADIES AND MISSES!

In the First Act,
GRAND ZOUAVE MARCH, DRILL, AND TABLEAUX, BY THE FEMININE CORPS DE ZOUAVES.

The Second Act, entitled
THE ALLEGORY OF THE UNION,
written by W. LEMAN, at the request of Mr. Maguire, expressly for this Theatre, comprises
Ten Grand National Tableaux

The piece concludes with a
GRAND TRANSFORMATION SCENE
IN THE BOWER OF FERNS!
Forming the most Gorgeous Spectacular Representation ever produced in San Francisco.

THE GRAND SPECTACULAR PLAY,
The Enchanted Beauty,
WILL SHORTLY BE PRODUCED, WITH GORGEOUS SPLENDOR!

Dress Circle and Orchestra Seats - - - - - $1 00
Parquet - - - - - - - - - - - 50
Gallery - - - - - - - - - - - 25 cents
Private Boxes, - - - - - - - - $5 and $10
Doors open at 7; performance to commence at 8 o'clock.

NEW GOODS! NEW GOODS!

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,

NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

NEW STYLE
SPRING DRESS GOODS!

AND WILL ALSO OFFER ALL KINDS OF

DOMESTIC GOODS,
DRESS GOODS,
LINEN GOODS,
SHEETINGS,
SHIRTINGS,
PRINTS,
ETC.,

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

See our Advertisement in Daily Papers.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
mar10 Lick House Block.

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,
AND
Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE
TO THE
CLIFF HOUSE
TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. fe27-tf

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, state of California.
In the matter of the Estate of HERMANN PLATH, deceased,
Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix of the above named Estate, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers within ten months from the first publication of this notice at her residence on Southwest corner of Union street and Lafayette Place, in said City and County of San Francisco.
SOPHIA PLATH, Executrix
Of the Estate of Hermann Plath, deceased.
San Francisco, March 17th, 1866. mar17-5t

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

LESSEE AND MANAGER, - - - SENOR E. BUISLAY
STAGE MANAGER, - - - - - L. R. BENEUX.

GRAND MATINEE AT TWO O'CLOCK, THIS,
St. Patrick's Day,
For Families and Children, - - - - At Half-Prices.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, MARCH 17,
Will be presented a series of splendid and entertaining
GYMNASTIC, ACROBATIC, AND DRAMATIC ENTERTAINMENTS, BY THE Celebrated Buislay Family
And the FULL DRAMATIC COMPANY.

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 19:
First Night of the new Fairy and Spectacular Extravaganza,
THE SHEEP'S FOOT!
An entirely new FAMOUS TRICK PIECE!
Translated from the French expressly for the BUISLAYS,
and
NEVER PLAYED BEFORE IN THE UNITED STATES,
Which had a Wonderful Run of over
THREE HUNDRED NIGHTS IN PARIS;
Produced with all its original attractiveness of Scenery, Transformations, Tricks, and Music, by THE CELEBRATED BUISLAY FAMILY,
(with Feats never performed before,) assisted by MLLE. ACOSTA, MESSIEURS H WIETHOFF and MASSARTIC; MESDAMES SALLIE HINCKLEY and ALICIA M. THORNE; MESSRS. FRED. WOODHULL, RUBY, ROUNDY, ARCHER,
THE CHORUS OF TWELVE,
A CORPS DE BALLET, and a Host of Auxiliaries.

Dress Circle and Orchestra seats, $1; Parquet, 50c.; Gallery, 25c.; Private Boxes, $10 and $5.

HAYES PARK.

Grand Balloon Ascension!
AND
THE GREATEST BILL OF THE DAY!
AT HAYES PARK,
ON SUNDAY.....MARCH 18,
MR. GEORGE RYLAND
Will make an ascension in the
NEW MAMMOTH BALLOON, PACIFIC,
THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

MISS ELLENA will walk a Tight Rope stretched from the floor to the ceiling of the large Pavilion.
HERR HOLMAN
will perform the astonishing feat of resisting the strength of two powerful pulling horses.
A great variety of Acrobatic and Gymnastic Entertainments by the celebrated Lee Family,
AND OTHERS.
Performances to commence at 2 o'clock.
A GRAND BALL
at the close of the exercisee.
Admission 25 cents. Reserved seats 25 cents extra.

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
&
COMPANY,

The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York city, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
a27-tf between California and Pine.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.
J. J. Knowlton & Co., removed to 120 Montgomery.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, basement Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Starke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.
E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

CONFECTIONERY.
Marcus Pezold, 46 Second street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush etreets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner Bush.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.
N. P. Cole & Co., 314 Pine, near Montgomery.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Pierce, 415, 417 and 419 California street

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co.. Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.
W. H. Pillner & Hunter, Gallery 14 Second street.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard.
Concordia, Bothman & Kretschman, Third and Mission.
Ohio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 324 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kobler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD!
AND Constitution,
WITH
LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
fe19-1m SAN FRANCISCO.

WHO WANTS
Profitable Employment
OR PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.
Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.
Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.
Business Interests sold quickly for cash.
Real Estate bought and sold.
Help furnished for all kinds of employment.
Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.
S. P. WHITMAN,
Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17 3m

LITTLE & CO.'S
Chinese Vegetable
HAIR RESTORATIVE.

THIS PREPARATION is offered to the public as an infallible remedy for premature baldness; and the proprietors guarantee to refund the purchase money in all instances where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. For this purpose, the name of the purchaser will be registered, if desired.
Price per jar, with directions, $2.50.
LITTLE & CO.,
mar17-1m. Depot 622 Clay street.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,
THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15-3m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME IV., No 17.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 24, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
- Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
- Recollections of a Late Dancing Master.—By "Philip"
- Poor Chips.—By C. H. Webb.
- Cultivation of Flowers — Climbing Plants.—By "Iris."
- The Misfortune of being Rich.
- Editorial Paragraphs.

POETRY:
- Unrest.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events of the Week.

SELECTED:
- The Fiend-Fisherman; or, Memoirs of an Adopted Son.—By Wilkie Collins.
- A Complaint about Correspondents. By "Mark Twain."
- Amusing Cholera Incident.
- The Liberty of the Press.
- A Comfortable Doctrine.
- "Punch's" Table Talk.
- Irving at the Irving House.

POETRY:
- December Snow.—By R. Buchanan
- Cleopatra.—By W. W. Story.

[For the Californian.]

UNREST.

O! VESTAL LILIES, white and still,
Thy golden cressets newly trim:
O! wine-tipt tulip-globes now spill
Thine Orient oils upon their flame;
My heavy woe I may not name,
But woe were less if thou wouldst fill
Each glowing cresset's rim.
For I may burn within the fire
All bitterness, and what is true
Endures the ordeal of the pyre,
And swathes itself in gossamer dew.

O! Summer wind return again
And sing my little ills to rest:
Distil thy balm, delightful rain,
Through various currents of sweet air;
The cross is heavy that I bear,
But thou mayest lull the vexing pain
And breathe a quiet in my breast.
Peace, weary heart! O! tongue be mute!
Voluptuous Cereus, pri'thee weep
Thy golden tears, and soft salute
Yon star. My soul desireth sleep.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

INIGOINGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 24th, 1866.

THE weather during the past week has not been very favorable for astronomical observations, however beneficial it may have been to crops, milk ranches, and other agricultural interests.

It is little wonder that the milk which is set upon our tables is somewhat thin and diluted, when we consider how the cows have been soaked through this winter. Rain, rain—nothing but rain for weeks—laying the dust, it is true, but not conducing to the comfort of pedestrians in any very eminent degree.

The awkwardness of such weather is at times fearful to contemplate. A few days since—Mrs. Inigo being compelled by circumstances over which neither of us had any control, to go a few miles into the country—I advertised for a dry nurse.

A dozen applied; but, by the time they got to my door, they were all wet ones. It wasn't their fault, poor things, but the unities must and shall be preserved: so none of them were taken into the bosom of my family. And, even as veritable wet ones, an objection would still have interfered to shut the doors of employment in their faces, for I am unware that a full breast of milk and water has ever been considered a desideratum in any family where young children abounded. The pursuit of nourishment under difficulties is reserved as a discipline for our later years.

Let me frankly confess that I am not at all partial to this kind of weather. For it interferes with all kinds of amusements, particularly with moonlight walks, drives on the ocean beach, and chowder parties. As a general thing, it may perhaps be remarked, without fear of provoking dispute, that a stream of cold water trickling down one's backbone is rather an interruption to love-making.

However brilliant one may like to appear in the presence of his beloved, one does not always like to present himself to her as a rain beau. And I, for my part, would every time get wet through to the skin rather than undergo the moral discipline of carrying an umbrella. The evil which I do to my health, and the bad example which I furnish to the rising generation by this improvident practice, have several times been pictured to me in the strongest of water colors, but still no umbrella has yet sprouted above my head. Some day I will perhaps become convinced of the error of my ways, and awake a wiser and a wetter man, but, just at present, I do not fancy the idea of appearing upon the street as a peripateptic mush room. It has, indeed, been represented to me that it is better to look like a mushroom than to incur the rheumatism, but this, like buying butter, is simply a question of taste.

Very often taste makes waste. This is excellently illustrated in the case of a friend of mine who has been to Europe lately. He bought pictures, and indulged extensively in the old masters...

I cannot forbear remarking, par parenthese, that others of my friends who go over there are accused of being more given to young mistresses...

As I was saying, however, this particular one is an unfortunate worshipper of Art. One reason that he is so fond of it will perhaps be found in the very significant fact that he knows very little about it, for it will be noticed that the old adage about familiarity holds about as true in æsthetical acquaintances as in our real minglings with men. I accompanied him once, to purchase—as he said—some stationery to put in the nicks of his walls.

Power's Greek Slave struck his fancy, but he objected to the costume. It might be classical, he remarked, and even true to nature, but, when it would have been so easy for the artist—particularly as he was a stone-cutter—to cut out a mantle for her, or a piece of a mantle, if not a complete mantelpiece, he was surprised that the artist had not done so; and, with much pertinence and seeming feeling, he remarked that a small quantity of back-hair might at least have been thrown in as a sort of basso-relievo.

In reply to a suggestion which I made regarding a purchase, he said that he really didn't care about having a Venus de Medicine in the house, and an Apollo bevelled Dear he thought might be too expensive a piece of carving for him to consider.

Finally, running his eye over a catalogue, he was attracted by something titled the Maggio Maggiore. Maggie Maguire? said he, with the air of one who reflects. That must surely be some relative of my old friend, the proprietor of the Opera House in San Francisco. And he at once ordered it sent to his hotel.

One thing he could not understand—why pictures were not always sold according to their size. As he very truly remarked, painters bought their canvas by the yard and it ought to be sold in the same way. Acting on this idea, he bought the largest pictures he could find, and always seemed excessively gratified if, upon a careful reckoning up, he could prove to himself that the cost of the frame, canvas, paints and oil, were exactly covered by the price he paid, after allowing the artist the regular wages for day laborers which ruled in Florence. But his house is furnished with all sorts of pictures and things, and he is vertu-ous. Can he be otherwise than happy?

It being possible to be virtuous and yet have cakes and ale—or at least have something ail you—let us drink to Wealth and Stupidity, now and forever, one and insufferable!

It pains me to confess, however, that, notwithstanding the severe standard of morals which I have always striven to attain and preserve—a strife probably which will only end with my life as it has long since promised to furnish me constant employment—I am not happy. Just as everything seems settled and working smoothly, a screw gets loose somewhere and all is out of order.

At present it is that terrible bore the trichinosis—you know, sis—that worries me. You hear every one echoing like a Parrott: No more Ham! Westphalia was once a favorite dish with me, but now I shrink back from it as a cat does from soap, shouting to the astonished waiter that I knows his trickinosis and his manners.

Is it indeed true that pork can no longer be eaten in any form without incurring the fearful disease which cut short the life of the Tetrarch of Judea? Is all of that flesh, which the great Law-Giver forbade to his people, alive and moving with these terrible trichnia which, invisible to the naked eye, perforate the eater in every direction, asserting a right of way through all parts of the body, without anybody's knowing what is going on? Picture it, think of it, pork-loving man; taste of it, eat of it, then if you can.

Really, all this is very pleasant to think of. A worse curse than that pronounced upon the descendants of Ham is to be visited upon the eaters of ham. Verily, verily, how the company at the Metropolitan must writhe and mourn uneasily in their sleep in view of all the ham-sandwiches which they ate on occasion of a late collation.

Speaking of the Metropolitan reminds me of the grand spectacular piece they are bringing out there—The Sheep's Foot.

Do you know that being accustomed to see so many mutton-heads among the audiences of our theatres it seems to me only a preservation of the proper balance of things that a sheep's foot should once and awhile be put upon the stage.

What a verification this is of the saying that extremes sometimes meet.

The extremes of life and death came very near meeting, at a rehearsal of the piece the other evening, when one of the actresses was descending through a trap. It was all along of a counter-weight they tell me, which swung and nearly dashed the young lady's brains out, but it seems to me they did not count her weight rightly or such an accident could not have happened. It proves that a kick from a sheep's foot may in some cases be a very serious matter. Let the public rejoice that the charming Guzman on that occasion was not Don.

Whether or not the public will rejoice at the release of my friend McCarthy, I do not know. I see no reason why they should not, for it is recorded that a good many years ago they got up quite a demonstration over the release of Barrabas.

The fact of the matter is, the public can never be counted upon with any certainty. To borrow a phrase from a speech which I once thought very fine, they are "the slaves of Passion, of Prejudice, and of Pride." In the matter of that election which Pontius Pilate accorded to a memorable multitude, and to which reference has just been made, very few will defend the popular choice, but I am apprehensive that the people of our day would be very apt to repeat it under the same circumstances.

That the voice of the people is the voice of God I am very loth to believe. The proverb which inculcates that idea is one of the many that have no foundation in reason or in religion, and which ought to be turned out from the language as an insult to both. Nine times in ten the public are sure to be wrong, if there exist a single chance for being mistaken.

Has there ever, in any age of the world, been a cross erected around which the populace did not gather, howling and clamoring for blood? The cry of "Crucify him" in the first instance was scarcely the voice of God, and yet it went up from the throats of the people. Bah! I hate and detest that whole batch of stupid sayings of which the one now under discussion makes one. Nine times in ten the voice of the people is the voice of the Devil, for ignorance is dominant among the masses and they are led and swayed by any unscrupulous, bad, and clever man who has the ambition to head a party. Vox populi, vox Dei, indeed! As well attempt to tell me that the breaths of a crowd are sweet, and that the aroma which exhales from their sweating armpits is equivalent to the smell of new-mown hay.

INIGO.

THE FIEND FISHERMAN;

OR,

MEMOIRS OF AN ADOPTED SON.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

[The curious legend connected with the birth of this "Adopted Son," and the facts relating to his extraordinary career in after life, are derived from the "Records" of the French Police of the period. In this instance, while the facts of the narrative exist in print, the form in which the narrative is cast is of the author's own devising.]

I.

CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH PRECEDED THE BIRTH OF THE ADOPTED SON.

TOWARD the beginning of the eighteenth century, there stood on a rock in the sea, near a fishing village on the coast of Brittany, a ruined Tower with a very bad reputation. No mortal was known to have inhabited it within the memory of living man. The one tenant whom Tradition associated with the occupation of the place, at a remote period, had moved into it from the infernal regions, nobody knew why—had lived in it, nobody knew how long—and had quitted possession, nobody knew when. Under such circumstances, nothing was more natural than that this unearthly Individual should give a name to his residence; for which reason, the building was thereafter known to all the neighborhood round as Satan's-tower.

Early in the year seventeen hundred, the inhabitants of the village were startled, one night, by seeing the read gleam of a fire in the Tower, and by smelling, in the same direction, a preternaturally strong odor of fried fish. The next morning, the fishermen who passed by the building in their boats were amazed to find that a stranger had taken up his abode in it. Judging of him at a distance, he seemed to be a fine, tall, stout fellow; he was dressed in fisherman's costume, and he had a new boat of his own, moored comfortably in a cleft of the rock. If he had inhabited a place of decent reputation, his neighbors would have immediately made his acquaintance; but, as things were, all they could venture to do was to watch him in silence.

The first day passed, and, though it was fine weather, he made no use of his boat. The second day followed, with a continuance of fine weather, and still he was idle as before. On the third day, when a violent storm kept all the boats of the village on the beach—on the third day, in the midst of the tempest, away went the man of the Tower to make his first fishing experiment in strange waters! He and his boat came back safe and sound, in a lull of the storm; and the villagers watching on the cliff above saw him carrying the fish up, by great basketfuls, to his Tower. No such haul had ever fallen to the lot of any one of them—and the stranger had taken it in a whole gale of wind!

Upon this, the inhabitants of the village called a council. The lead in the debate was assumed by a smart young fellow, a fisherman named Poulailler, who stoutly declared that the stranger of the Tower was of infernal origin. "The rest of you may call him what you like," said Poulailler; "I call him The Fiend-Fisherman!"

The opinion thus expressed proved to be the opinion of the entire audience—with the one exception of the village priest. The priest said, "Gently, my sons. Don't make sure about the man of the Tower, before Sunday. Wait and see if he comes to church."

"And if he doesn't come to church?" asked all the fishermen, in a breath.

"In that case," replied the priest, "I will excommunicate him—and then, my children, you may call him what you like."

Sunday came; and no sign of the stranger darkened the church-doors. He was excommunicated, accordingly. The whole village forthwith adopted Poulailler's idea, and called the man of the Tower by the name which Poulailler had given him—"The Fiend-Fisherman."

These strong proceedings produced not the slightest apparent effect on the diabolical personage who had occasioned them. He persisted in remaining idle when the weather was fine; in going out to fish when no other boat in the place dare put to sea; and in coming back again to his solitary dwelling-place, with his nets full, his boat uninjured, and himself alive and hearty. He made no attempts to buy and sell with anybody; he kept steadily away from the village; he lived on fish of his own preturnaturally strong frying; and he never spoke to a living soul—with the solitary exception of Poulailler himself. One fine evening, when the young man was rowing home past the Tower, the Fiend-Fisherman darted out on to the rock, said, "Thank you, Poulailler, for giving me a name"—bowed politely, and darted in again. The young fisherman felt the words run cold down the marrow of his back; and whenever he was at sea again, he gave the Tower a wide berth from that day forth.

Time went on—and an important event occurred in Poulailler's life. He was engaged to be married. On the day when his betrothal was publicly made known, his friends clustered noisily about him on the fishing-jetty of the village to offer their congratulations. While they were all in full cry, a strange voice suddenly made itself heard through the confusion, which silenced everybody in an instant. The crowd fell back, and disclosed the Fiend-Fisherman sauntering up the jetty. It was the first time he had ever set foot—cloven foot—within the precincts of the village.

"Gentlemen," said the Fiend-Fisherman, "where is my friend, Poulailler?" He put the question with perfect politeness; he looked remarkably well in his fisherman's costume; he exhaled a relishing odor of fried fish; he had a cordial nod for the men, and a sweet smile for the women—but with all these personal advantages, everybody fell back from him, and nobody answered his question. The coldness of the popular reception, however, did not in any way abash him. He looked about for Poulailler with searching eyes, discovered the place in which he was standing, and addressed him in the friendliest manner.

"So you are going to be married?" remarked the Fiend-Fisherman?"

"What's that to you?" said Poulailler. He was inwardly terrified, but outwardly gruff—not an uncommon combination of circumstances with men of his class, in his mental situation.

"My friend," pursued the Fiend-Fisherman, "I have not forgotten your polite attention in giving me a name; and I come here to requite it. You will have a family, Poulailler; and your first child will be a boy. I propose to make that boy my Adopted Son."

The marrow of Poulailler's back became awfully cold, but he grew gruffer than ever, in spite of his back.

"You won't do anything of the sort," he replied. "If I have the largest family in France, no child of mine shall ever go near you."

"I shall adopt your first-born for all that," persisted the Fiend-Fisherman. "Poulailler! I wish you good morning. Ladies and gentlemen, the same to all of you."

With these words, he withdrew from the jetty; and the marrow of Poulailler's back recovered its temperature.

The next morning was stormy, and all the village expected to see the boat from the Tower put out, as usual, to sea. Not a sign of it appeared. Later in the day, the rock on which the building stood was examined from a distance. Neither boat nor nets were in their customary places. At night, the red gleam of the fire was missed for the first time. The Fiend-Fisherman had gone! He had announced his intention on the jetty, and had disappeared. What did this mean?

On Poulailler's wedding day, a portentous circumstance recalled the memory of the diabolical stranger, and, as a matter of course, seriously discomposed the bridegroom's back. At the moment when the marriage ceremony was complete, a relishing odor of fried fish stole into the nostrils of the company, and a voice from invisible lips said: "Keep your spirits, Poulailler; I have not forgotten my promise!"

A year later, Madame Poullailler was in the hands of the midwife of the district, and a repetition of the portentous circumstance took place. Poulailler was waiting in the kitchen to hear how matters ended up stairs. The nurse came in with a baby. "Which is it," asked the happy father; "girl or boy?" Before the nurse could answer, an odor of supernaturally fried fish filled the kitchen; and a voice from invisible lips replied: "A boy, Poulailler—and I've got him!"

Such were the circumstances under which the subject of this Memoir was introduced to the joys and sorrows of mortal existence.

II.

HIS BOYHOOD AND EARLY LIFE.

When a boy is born under auspices which lead his parents to suppose that, while the bodily part of him is safe at home, the spiritual part is subjected to a course of infernal tuition elsewhere—what are his father and mother to do with him? They must do the best they can—which was exactly what Poulailler and his wife did with the hero of these pages.

In the first place, they had him christened instantly. It was observed with horror that his infant face was distorted with grimaces, and that his infant voice roared with a preternatural lustiness of tone the moment the priest touched him. The first thing he asked for, when he learned to speak, was "fried fish;" and the first place he wanted to go to, when he learned to walk, was the diabolical Tower on the rock. "He won't learn anything," said the master, when he was old enough to go to school. "Thrash him," said Poulailler—and the priest thrashed him. The farmer's orchards were robbed; the neighboring rabbit-warrens were depopulated; linen was stolen from the gardens, and nets were torn on the beach. "The deuce take Poulailler's boy," was the general cry. "The deuce has got him," was Poulailler's answer. "And yet he is a nice-looking boy," said Madame Poulailler. And he was—as tall, as strong, as handsome a young fellow, as could be seen in all France. "Let us pray for him," said Madame Poulailler. "Let us thrash him," said her husband. "Our son has been thrashed till all the sticks in the neighborhood are broken," pleaded his mother. "We will try him with the rope's end next," retorted his father; "he shall go to sea, and live in an atmosphere of thrashing. Our son shall be a cabin boy." It was all one to Poulailler Junior; he knew as well as his father who had adopted him; he had been instinctively conscious from infancy of the Fiend Fisherman's interest in his welfare; he cared for no earthly discipline—and a cabin boy he became at ten years old.

After two years of the rope's end (applied quite ineffectually,) the subject of this Memoir robbed his captain, and ran away in an English port. London became the next scene of his adventures. At twelve years old, he persuaded society in the metropolis that he was the forsaken natural son of a French duke. British benevolence, after blindly providing for him for four years, opened its eyes and found him out at the age of sixteen; upon which he returned to France, and entered the army in the capacity of a drummer. At eighteen he deserted, and had a turn with the gipsies. He told fortunes, he conjured, he danced on the tight-rope, he acted, he sold quack medicines, he altered his mind again, and returned to the army. Here he fell in love with the vivandiere of his new regiment. The serjeant-major of the company, touched by the same amiable weakness, naturally resented his attentions to the lady. Poulailler (perhaps unjustifiably) asserted himself by boxing his officer's ears. Out flashed the swords on both sides, and in went Poulailler's blade through and through the tender heart of the serjeant-major. The frontier was close at hand. Poulailler wiped his sword, and crossed it.

Sentence of death was recorded against him in his absence. When society has condemned us to die, if we are men of any spirit how are we to return the compliment? By condemning society to keep us alive—or, in other words, by robbing right and left for a living. Pollailler's destiny was now accomplished. He was picked out to be the greatest Thief of his age; and when Fate summoned him to his place in the world, he stepped forward and took it. His life hitherto had been merely the life of a young scamp—he was now to do justice to the diabolical father who had adopted him, and to expand to the proportion of a full grown Robber

His first exploits were performed in Germany. They showed such novelty of combination, such daring, such dexterity, and, even in his most homicidal moments, such irresistible gaiety and good humor, that a band of congenial spirits gathered about him in no time. As commander-in-chief of the Thieves' army, his popularity never wavered. His weaknesses—and what illustrious man is without them?—were three in number. First weakness—he was extravagantly susceptible to the charms of the fair sex. Second weakness—he was perilously fond of practical jokes. Third weakness (inherited from his adopted parent)—his appetite was insatiable in the matter of fried fish. As for the merits to set against these defects, some have been noticed already, and others will appear immediately. Let it merely be premised, in this place, that he was one of the handsomest men of his time, that he dressed superbly, and that he was capable of the most exalted acts of generosity wherever a handsome woman was concerned—let this be understood to begin with; and let us now enter on the narrative of his last exploit in Germany before he returned to France. This adventure is something more than a mere specimen of his method of workmanship—it proved, in the future, to be the fatal event of his life.

On a Monday in the week, he had stopped on the highway, and robbed of all his valuables and all his papers, an Italian nobleman—the Marquis Petrucci of Sienna. On Tuesday, he was ready for another stroke of business. Posted on the top of a steep hill, he watched the road which wound up to the summit on one side, while his followers were ensconced on the road which led down from it on the other. The prize expected, in this case, was the travelling carriage (with a large sum of money inside) of the Baron de Kirbergen.

Before long, Poulailler discerned the carriage afar off, at the bottom of the hill; and in advance of it, ascending the eminence, two ladies on foot. They were the Baron's daughters—Wilhelmina, a fair beauty; Frederica, a brunette—both lovely, both accomplished, both susceptible, both young. Poulailler sauntered down the hill to meet the fascinating travellers. He looked, bowed, introduced himself—and fell in love with Wilhelmina on the spot. Both the charming girls acknowledged, in the most artless manner, that confinement to the carriage had given them the fidgets, and that they were walking up the hill to try the remedy of gentle exercise. Poulailler's heart was touched, and Poulailler's generosity to the sex was roused in the nick of time. With a polite apology to the young ladies, he ran back, by a short cut, to the ambush on the other side of the hill in which his men were posted.

"Gentlemen!" cried the generous Thief, "in the charming name of Wilhelmina de Kirbergen, I charge you all, let the Baron's carriage pass free." The band was not susceptible—the band demurred. Poulailler knew them. He had appealed to their hearts in vain—he now appealed to their pockets. "Gentlemen!" he resumed, "excuse my momentary misconception of your sentiments. Here is my one-half share of the Marquis Petrucci's property. If I divide it among you, will you let the carriage pass free?" The band knew the value of money—and accepted the terms. Poulailler rushed back up the hill, and arrived at the top just in time to hand the young ladies into the carriage. "Charming man!" said the white Wilhelmina to the brown Frederica, as the drove off. Innocent soul! what would she have said if she had known that her personal attractions had saved her father's property? Was she ever to see the charming man again? Yes: she was to see him the next day—and, more than that, Fate was hereafter to link her fast to the robber's life and the robber's doom.

Confiding the direction of the band to his first lieutenant, Poulailler followed the carriage on horseback, and ascertained the place of the Baron's residence that night.

The next morning a superbly-dressed stranger knocked at the door. "What name, sir?" said the servant. "The Marquis Petrucci of Sienna," replied Poulailler. "How are the young ladies after their journey?" The Marquis was shown in, and introduced to the Baron. The Baron was naturally delighted to receive a brother nobleman—Miss Wilhelmina was modestly happy to see the charming man again—Miss Frederica was affectionately pleased on her sister's account. Not being of a disposition to lose time where his affections were concerned, Poulailler expressed his sentiments to the beloved object that evening. The next morning he had an interview with the Baron, at which he produced the papers which proved him to be the Marquis. Nothing could be more satisfactory to the mind of the most anxious parent—the two noblemen embraced. They were still in each other's arms, when a second stranger knocked at the door. "What name, sir?" asked the servant. "The Marquis Petrucci of Sienna," replied the stranger. "Impossible!" said the servant; "his lordship is now in the house." "Show me in, scoundrel," cried the visitor. The servant submitted, and the two Marquises stood face to face. Poulailler's composure was not shaken in the least; he had come first to the house, and he had got the papers. "You are the villain who robbed me!" cried the true Petrucci. "You are drunk, mad, or an impostor," retorted the false Petrucci. "Send to Florence, where I am known," exclaimed one of the Marquises, apostrophizing the Baron. "Send to Florence by all means," echoed the other, addressing himself to the Baron also. "Gentlemen," replied the noble Kirbergen, "I will do myself the honor of taking your advice"—and he sent to Florence accordingly.

Before the messenger had advanced ten miles on his journey, Poulailler had said two words in private to the susceptible Wilhelmina—and the pair eloped from the baronial residence that night. Once more the subject of this Memoir crossed the frontier, and re-entered France. Indifferent to the attraction of rural life, he forthwith established himself with the beloved object in Paris. In that superb city he met with his strangest adventures, performed his boldest achievements, committed his most prodigious robberies, and, in a word, did himself and his infernal patron the fullest justice, in the character of the Fiend-Fisherman's Adopted Son.

III.

HIS CAREER IN PARIS.

Once established in the French metropolis, Poulailler planned and executed that vast system of perpetual robbery and occasional homicide which made him the terror and astonishment of all Paris. In-doors, as well as out, his good fortune befriended him. No domestic anxieties harassed his mind and diverted him from the pursuit of his distinguished public career. The attachment of the charming creature with whom he had eloped from Germany survived the discovery that the Marquis Petrucci was Poulailler the robber. True to the man of her choice, the devoted Wilhelmina shared his fortunes, and kept his house. And why not, if she loved him?—in the all-conquering name of Cupid, why not?

Joined by picked men from his German followers, and by new recruits gathered together in Paris, Poulailler now set society and its safeguards at flat defiance. Cartouche himself was his inferior in audacity and cunning. In course of time the whole city was panic-stricken by the new robber and his band—the very Boulevards were deserted after night-fall. Monsieur Hérault, lieutenant of police of the period, in despair of laying hands on Poulailler by any other means, at last offered a reward of a hundred pistoles and a place in his office worth two thousand livres a year to any one who would apprehend the robber alive. The bills were posted all over Paris—and, the next morning, they produced the very last result in the world which the lieutenant of police could possibly have anticipated.

Whilst Monsieur Hérault was at breakfast in his study, the Count de Villeneuve was announced as wishing to speak to him. Knowing the Count by name only, as belonging to an ancient family in Provence, or in Languedoc, Monsieur Hérault ordered him to be shown in. A perfect gentleman appeared, dressed with an admirable mixture of magnificence and good taste. "I have something for your private ear, sir," said the Count. "Will you give orders that no one must be allowed to disturb us?"

Monsieur Hérault gave the orders.

"May I inquire, Count, what your business is?" he asked, when the door was closed.

"To earn the reward you offer for taking Poulailler," answered the Count. "I am Poulailler."

Before Monsieur Hérault could open his lips, the robber produced a pretty little dagger and some rose-colored silk cord. "The point of this dagger is poisoned," he observed; "and one scratch of it, my dear sir, would be the death of you." With these words, Poulailler gagged the lieutenant of police, bound him to his chair with the rose-colored cord, and lightened his writing-desk of one thousand pistoles. "I'll take money, instead of taking the place in the office which you so kindly offer," said Poulailler. "Don't trouble yourself to see me to the door. Good morning."

A few weeks later, while Monsieur Hérault was still the popular subject of ridicule throughout Paris, business took Poulailler on the road to Lisle and Cambrai. The only inside passenger in the coach besides himself was the venerable Dean Potter, of Brussels. They fell into talk on the one interesting subject of the time—not the weather but Poulailler.

"It's a disgrace, sir, to the police," said the Dean, "that such a miscreant is still at large. I shall be returning to Paris, by this road, in ten days' time, and I shall call on Monsieur Hérault, to suggest a plan of my own for catching the scoundrel."

"May I ask what it is?" said Poulailler.

"Excuse me," replied the Dean; "you are a stranger, sir—and, moreover, I wish to keep the merit of suggesting the plan to myself."

"Do you think the lieutenant of police will see you?" asked Poulailler; "he is not accessible to strangers, since the miscreant you speak of played him that trick at his own breakfast-table."

"He will see Dean Potter, of Brussels," was the reply, delivered with the slightest possible tinge of offended dignity.

"Oh, unquestionably!" said Poulailler—"pray, pardon me."

"Willingly, sir," said the Dean—and the conversation flowed into other channels.

Nine days later the wounded pride of Monsieur Hérault was soothed by a very remarkable letter. It was signed by one of Poulailler's band, who offered himself as King's evidence, in the hope of obtaining a pardon. The letter stated that the venerable Dean Potter had been waylaid and killed by Poulailler, and that the robber, with his customary audacity, was about to re-enter Paris by the Lisle coach, the next day, disguised in the Dean's own clothes, and furnished with the Dean's own papers. Monsieur Hérault took his precautions without losing a moment. Picked men were stationed, with their orders, at the barrier through which the coach must pass to enter Paris; while the lieutenant of police waited at his office, in the company of two French gentlemen who could speak to the Dean's identity, in the event of Poulailler's impudently persisting in the assumption of his victim's name.

At the appointed hour the coach appeared, and out of it got a man in the Dean's costume. He was arrested in spite of his protestations; the papers of the murdered Potter were found on him, and he was dragged off to the police office in triumph. The door opened, and the posse comitatus entered with the prisoner. Instantly the two witnesses burst out with a cry of recognition, and turned indignantly on the lieutenant of police. "Gracious Heaven, sir, what have you done!" they exclaimed in horror; "this is not Poulailler—here is our venerable friend; here is the Dean himself!" At the same moment, a servant entered with a letter. "Dean Potter. To the care of Monsieur Hérault, Lieutenant of Police." The letter was expressed in these words: "Venerable sir—Profit by the lesson I have given you. Be a Christian for the future, and never again try to injure a man unless he tries to injure you. Entirely yours, Poulailler."

These feats of cool audacity were matched by others, in which his generosity to the sex asserted itself as magnanimously as ever.

Hearing, one day, that large sums of money were kept in the house of a great lady, one Madame de Brienne, whose door was guarded, in anticipation of a visit from the famous thief, by a porter of approved trustworthiness and courage, Poulailler undertook to rob her, in spite of her precautions, and succeeded. With a stout pair of leather straps and buckles in his pocket, and with two of his band, disguised as a coachman and footman, he followed Madame de Brienne one night to the theatre. Just before the close of the performance, the lady's coachman and footman were tempted away for five minutes by Poulailler's disguised subordinates to have a glass of wine. No attempt was made to detain them, or to drug their liquor. But, in their absence, Poulailler had slipped under the carriage, had hung his leather straps round the pole—one to hold by, and one to support his feet—and, with these simple preparations, was now ready to wait for events. Madame de Brienne entered the carriage—the footman got up behind—Poulailler hung himself horizontally under the pole, and was driven home with them, under those singular circumstances. He was strong enough to keep his position after the carriage had been taken into the coach-house; and he only left it when the doors were locked for the night. Provided with food beforehand, he waited patiently, hidden in the coach-house, for two days and nights, watching his opportunity of getting into Madame de Brienne's boudoir.

On the third night the lady went to a grand ball—the servants relaxed in their vigilance while her back was turned—and Poulailler slipped into the room. He found two thousand louis d'ors, which was nothing like the sum he expected, and a pocket-book which he took away with him to open at home. It contained some stock-warrants for a comparatively trifling amount. Poulailler was far too well off to care about taking them, and far too polite, where a lady was concerned, not to send them back again, under those circumstances. Accordingly, Madame de Brienne received her warrants, with a note of apology from the polite thief.

"Pray excuse my visit to your charming boudoir," wrote Poulailler, "in consideration of the false reports of your wealth, which alone induced me to enter it. If I had known what your pecuniary circumstances really were, on the honor of a gentleman, Madam, I should have been incapable of robbing you. I cannot return your two thousand louis d'ors by post, as I return your warrants. But if you are at all pressed for money in future, I shall be proud to assist so distinguished a lady by lending her, from my own ample resources, double the sum of which I regret to have deprived her on the present occasion." This letter was shown to royalty at Versailles. It excited the highest admiration of the court—especially of the ladies. Whenever the robber's name was mentioned, they indulgently referred to him as the Chevalier de Poulailler. Ah! that was the age of politeness, when good breeding was recognized, even in a thief. Under similar circumstances, who would recognize it now? O tempora! O mores!

On another occasion, Poulailler was out, one night, taking the air, and watching his opportunities on the roofs of the houses; a member of the band being posted in the street below to assist him in case of necessity. While in this position, sobs and groans, proceeding from an open back-garret window, caught his ear. A parapet rose before the window, which enabled him to climb down and look in. Starving children surrounding a helpless mother, and clamoring for food, was the picture that met his eye. The mother was young and beautiful and Poulailler's hand impulsively clutched his purse, as a necessary consequence. Before the charitable thief could enter by the window, a man rushed in by the door, with a face of horror, and cast a handful of gold into the lovely mother's lap. "My honor is gone," he cried, "but our children are saved! Listen to the circumstances. I met a man in the street below: he was tall and thin; he had a green patch over one eye; he was looking up suspiciously at this house, apparently waiting for somebody. I thought of you—I thought of the children—I seized the suspicious stranger by the collar. Terror overwhelmed him on the spot. 'Take my watch, my money, and my two valuable gold snuff-boxes,' he said, 'but spare my life.' I took them." "Noble-hearted man!" cried Poulailler, appearing at the window. The husband started; the wife screamed; the children hid themselves. "Let me entreat you to be composed," continued Poulailler. "Sir! I enter on the scene for the purpose of soothing your uneasy conscience. From your vivid description, I recognize the man whose property is now in your wife's lap. Resume your mental tranquility. You have robbed a robber—in other words, you have vindicated society. Accept my congratulations on your restored innocence. The miserable coward whose collar you seized is one of Poulailler's band. He has lost his stolen property, as the fit punishment for his disgraceful want of spirit."

"Who are you?" exclaimed the husband.

"I am Poulailler," replied the illustrious man, with the simplicity of an ancient hero. "Take this purse, and set up in business with the contents. There is a prejudice, sir, in favor of honesty. Give that prejudice a chance. There was a time when I felt it myself; I regret to feel it no longer. Under all varieties of misfortune, an honest man has his consolation still left. Where is it left? Here!" He struck his heart—and the family fell on their knees before him.

"Benefactor of your species!" cried the husband—"how can I show my gratitude?"

"You can allow me to kiss the hand of madame," he replied.

Madame started to her feet, and embraced the generous stranger. "What else can I do?" exclaimed this lovely woman, eagerly—"Oh, Heavens! what else?"

"You can beg your husband to light me down stairs," replied Poulailler. He spoke, pressed their hands, dropped a generous tear, and departed. At that touching moment, his own adopted father would not have known him.

This last anecdote closes the record of Poulailler's career in Paris. The lighter and more agreeable aspects of that career have hitherto been designedly presented, in discreet remembrance of the contrast which the tragic side of the picture must now present. Comedy and Sentiment, twin sisters of French extraction, farewell! Horror enters next on the stage—and enters welcome, in the name of the Fiend-Fisherman's Adopted Son.

IV.

HIS EXIT FROM THE SCENE.

The nature of Poulailler's more serious achievements in the art of robbery may be realized by reference to one terrible fact. In the police records of the period, more than one hundred and fifty men and women are reckoned up as having met their deaths at the hands of Poulailler and his band. It was not the practice of this formidable robber to take life as well as property, unless life happened to stand directly in his way; in which case, he immediately swept off the obstacle without hesitation and without remorse. His deadly determination to rob, which was thus felt by the population in general, was matched by his dendly determination to be obeyed, which was felt by his followers in particular. One of their number, for example, having withdrawn from his allegiance, and having afterward attempted to betray his leader, was tracked up to his hiding-place in a cellar, and was there walled up alive in Poulailler's presence—the robber composing the unfortunate wretch's epitaph, and scratching it on the wet plaster with his own hand. Years afterward, the inscription was noticed, when the house fell into the possession of a new tenant, and was supposed to be nothing more than one of the many jests which the famous robber had practiced in his time. When the plaster was removed, the skeleton fell out, and testified that Polailler was in earnest.

To attempt the arrest of such a man as this, by tampering with his followers, was practically impossible. No sum of money that could be offered would induce any one of the members of his band to risk the fatal chance of his vengeance. Other means of getting possession of him had been tried in vain. Five times over, the police had succeeded in tracking him to different hiding-places; and on all five occasions, the women—who adored him for his gallantry, his generosity, and his good looks—had helped him to escape. If he had not unconsciously paved the way to his own capture, first by eloping with Mademoiselle Wilhelmina de Kirbergen, and secondly by maltreating her, it is more than doubtful whether the long arm of the law would ever have reached far enough to fasten its grasp on him. As it was, the extremes of love and hatred met at last in the bosom of the devoted Wilhelmina; and the vengeance of a neglected woman accomplished what the whole police force of Paris had been powerless to achieve.

Poulailler, never famous for the constancy of his attachments, had wearied at an early period of the companion of his flight from Germany—but Wilhelmina was one of those women whose affections, once aroused, will not take No for an answer. She persisted in attaching herself to a man who had ceased to love her. Poulailler's patience became exhausted; he tried twice to rid himself of his unhappy mistress—once by the knife and once by poison—and failed on both occasions. For the third and last time, by way of attempting an experiment of another kind, he established a rival to drive the German woman out of the house. From that moment his fate was sealed. Maddened by jealous rage, Wilhelmina cast the last fragments of her fondness to the winds. She secretly communicated with the police—and Poulailler met his doom.

A night was appointed with the authorities; and the robber was invited by his discarded mistress to a farewell interview. His contemptuous confidence in her fidelity rendered him careless of his customary precautions. He accepted the appointment; and the two supped together, on the understanding that they were henceforth to be friends, and nothing more. Toward the close of the meal, Poulailler was startled by a ghastly change in the face of his companion.

"What is wrong with you?" he asked.

"A mere trifle," she answered, looking at her glass of wine. "I can't help loving you still, badly as you have treated me. You are a dead man, Poulailler—and I shall not survive you."

The robber started to his feet, and seized a knife on the table.

"You have poisoned me?" he exclaimed.

"No," she replied. "Poison is my vengeance on myself: not my vengeance on you. You will rise from this table as you sat down to it. But your evening will be finished in prison, and your life will be ended on the Wheel."

As she spoke the words, the door was burst open by the police, and Poulailler was secured. The same night the poison did its fatal work; and his mistress made atonement with her life for the first, last, act of treachery which had revenged her on the man she loved.

Once safely lodged in the hands of justice, the robber tried to gain time to escape in, by promising to make important disclosures. The manœuvre availed him nothing. In those days the Laws of the Land had not yet made the acquaintance with the Laws of Humanity. Poulailler was put to the torture—was suffered to recover—was publicly broken on the Wheel—and was taken off it alive, to be cast into a blazing fire. By those murderous means, Society rid itself of a murderous man—and the idlers on the Boulevard took their evening stroll again in recovered security.

* * * * * * * *

Paris had seen the execution of Poulailler; but, if legends are to be trusted, our old friends, the people of the fishing village in Brittany, saw the end of him afterward. On the day and hour when he perished, the heavens darkened, and a terrible storm arose. Once more, and for a moment only, the gleam of the unearthly fire reddened the windows of the old Tower. Thunder pealed and struck the building into fragments. Lightning flashed incessantly over the ruins; and, in the scorching glare of it, the boat which, in former years, had put off to sea whenever the storm rose highest, was seen to shoot out into the raging ocean from the cleft in the rock—and was discovered, on this final occasion, to be doubly manned. The Fiend Fisherman sat at the helm; his Adopted Son tugged at the oars; and a clamor of diabolical voices, roaring awfully through the roaring storm, wished the pair of them a prosperous voyage.

POOR CHIPS.

"ALL hands, ahoy!"

It was my middle watch below. For a weary week and more we had been beating against the baffling sou'west winds of the Cape; but with the morning of this day came a fair northerly wind, and we were making the most of it. Contrary to the usual custom of compliment to these rough latitudes, we had not sent down our lighter spars from aloft; and so with the first breath of the favorable breeze we were flying before it under a cloud of royals and stun'-sails. But as the day grew the wind freshened; one by one the royals were furled and stun'-sails sent in, though our Captain, whose hardihood in carrying sail had become proverbial, manfully held on everything to the last, so that when our watch left the deck the ship was staggering under top-gallant sails, top-sails, and courses. Soon after going below we heard the other watch setting jibs and stay-sails, by which we inferred that the wind was hauling on the quarter. But I was drowsy; the creaking of the jib-sheet block overhead was soon merged in the chirping of robins round the door-way at home; in the rattling cordage I heard but the stir of autumn leaves, and the groanings of the strained masts were to my retrospective fancy but the swaying of nut-laden trees in the merry woods which we boys were wont to rifle. Thus wrapped in dreams of the past, I lost all consciousness of the present, until recalled to a ship's life and duty by the hoarse cry at the forecastle hatchway, "All hands to shorten sail, ahoy!"

We were not long in getting on deck, for a sailor's toilet is soon made. He has no starched collar to adjust, no wonderful cravat to tie; nor is he very particular as to cleansing his teeth or running the point of a marlin-spike round the rims of his finger-nails, when thus hurriedly called. A growl, a shake, and he is dressed. Confusion enough was visible and audible on deck when we got there. It was "clew up!" and "clew down!" "let go halliards!" here, and "start away sheets!" there. And well they might be starting sheets, for the wind, fair when our watch went below at eight bells, had now hauled to the westward and was blowing a whole gale. The watch on deck had furled the top-gallant sails, clewed up the courses, settled away the top-sails, and were then furling the mizzen. Our watch took its accustomed station at the fore. Many hands make light work; in a few seconds the sail was lying to the yard in loose folds, and the word was given to hand it. After belaying my clew-line, I stepped to the halliards to see that they were well taut—not thinking it necessary to go aloft, since the yard was already alive with more men than could well work—when the mate, who, after his customary fashion, had been stumping about deck and cursing the whole crew for a lubberly set of land-crabs, sung out to know who was forward. I answered.

"Lay aloft, then, you Sandy, and see why they don't pick up that sail, and tell me if you find any skulkers in the top."

"Ay, ay, sir!" and I sprang cheerily into the rigging.

On getting into the top, I found Chips shivering under the lee of the fore-mast head.

"Chips! Chips!" said I, "why aren't you out on the yard there? The mate is swearing a blue streak below, and if he learns of your being stowed away here he'll make you ship all sorts of seas."

"Oh, Sandy!" said Chips, "I'm too weak; the wind would strip me from the spar;" and the tremors that shook the poor fellow's frame, as he clung cowering to the eyes of the rigging, confirmed his words.

"Any skulkers there in the top, Sandy?" shouted the mate from below.

"Not a soul, sir!" I sung out, cheerily, and swinging myself to the yard above, assisted as best I could in stowing the bunt of the sail; for, as I have before remarked, the yard was already packed with more men than could well work.

It may have been a lie that, but if no more aggravated charge of falsehood be brought against me when this watch below is out and all hands are summoned to the great quarter-deck above, my soul will rest sufficiently easy with itself on the score of truth. Singular as it may seem, I look back at the dim face of that untruth with the most perfect satisfaction; I pet its memory somewhat as one would fondle the recollection of a dear departed child. I've achieved volumes since, yet I regard that sentence as a more golden one than any that I've written. I am sure it embodies a better sentiment than men are accustomed to utter in daily and familiar conversations.

A word here to tell the reader who Chips was all this while. The name, you know, is a generic one, and applied to all ships' carpenters. Sailors are most sensible godfathers, and always christen with an eye to the preservation of the unities—thus the cooper is known as Bungs, and the blacksmith as Smut. But our Chips was of a gentler humanity than the generality of these hewers of wood, and, of course, a favorite with the crew. Something more than a pun was meant when a frolicsome youngster swore that our Chips was of finer grain than any that ever before floated. It was in the hope of re-establishing his health, much impaired by some pulmonary disease, that he came to sea; and for a time, while cruising in the balmy tropical latitudes, it seemed as though his object would be obtained. The soft, caressing breezes that wander in those courts of the sun, with the bewitching nights and refulgent days, would woo the weary soul back, if any temptation could, from the very verge of the grave; for it almost seems impossible that any brighter heaven can lie beyond. But as we sailed southward, and the Southern Cross began to bend above our heads, and still southward, until the Magellan Clouds poised themselves over the royal-truck, the rough winds and icy sleet which reveal themselves with these wonders proved too much for his frail constitution, and he failed rapidly. It was then that we began to speak of him as "Poor Chips;" and we spoke thus quite as much in love as in pity. It came out afterward that he had been engaged to a girl in Boston. I remember that often in his sleep he would murmur the name "Mary Haley;" and in our tropical cruisings, through long hours of the night-watches, he would sit between the knight-heads or the windlass-bitts humming a song of which I can only remember that the refrain was Aileen-a-Roon.

I have said that his gentle manners and unobtrusive disposition endeared him to all on shipboard. I should have said to all except the mate; but then to have the good-will of the latter was small credit to the man with whom it rested. Years have passed since I sailed with that mate, but, looking back through their intervening vista, I see him before me now, as then, a perfect nightmare of meanness and ugliness. His quarter-deck name was Maxim, but in the forecastle he was known as "Devil-bug." Tall and snaky in build, with that unsightly curvature of spine which makes a ship what we call "hogged," a man stoop-shouldered, the villainy of his face hedged in by a pair of brick-red whiskers, sure no man ever lived on whose whole exterior nature at birth wrote "tyrant, coward, and scoundrel" more plainly. His arms, long, lean, and bowed, as they hung loosely by his side, might not inaptly be compared to a parenthesis; but it was a miserable affair of a heart that they inclosed. Indeed nature seemed aware that it was not worthy of appearing in the body of her work, and so inclosed it in brackets—a sort of postscript to a most miserably-constructed article. From the first he took a dislike to Chips, and never suffered an opportunity of venting it to pass unimproved. He reveled in that infernal delight which a mean nature ever has in degrading a nobler one. Was a ringbolt to be scoured, a mast slushed, or any other piece of drudgery, important or unimportant, to be done, to Chips it was appointed. Even at the time of which I write, in that rough weather of which all who have ever sailed around the Horn have had experience, while the poor fellow was so weak that in dressing he had to steady himself by laying one hand on his bunk, if not on deck as soon as the others of the watch, this ever-to-be-execruted Devil-bug would rush into the forecastle, shake him from his hold, and "freshen his way," as he termed it, up the ladder with a rope's end. Many a hand longed on these occasions to drop a handspike on the rascal's head; but discipline prevailed, and his punishment was not then.

To return now to my story.

While on the top sail yard I noticed that the parrel-band had worked loose, and, notifying the mate, he ordered me to remain and make it secure. I detained Chips with me, nominally to assist, really to keep him beyond the reach of his tormentor. Having finished the little job, we went down. The balance of the men were handing the mainsail, and I stood by to attend their calls to the deck, while Chips busied himself in coiling up the loose rigging. At this moment the mate came along with a spare gasket in his hand.

"Here, you Chips, take this gasket, and lay out and stow that flying-jib snug."

Now this was merely a "work-up job," and none knew it better than myself, since I had furled the sail in question the evening previous, and at his order had taken special pains to make it secure; moreover, it was a task of no inconsiderable danger to a landsman like Chips, as the ship was rearing and plunging in that fierce head-sea like a crazy colt—her jib-boom one moment pointing to the zenith, the next to the nadir, and describing in every sweep a full semi-circle. Accordingly I ventured to say that I myself had furled the flying jib before our watch went below, had taken the precaution to put extra stops about it, and was sure that it was safe.

"Ah!" said the mate, "since you are so fond of working your jaw-tackle you can lay out there, too."

Of course, it was not for me to reply, but to obey. It is the very gospel of the sea to go when ordered, and, taking the gasket in my hand, I started forward. I heard Chips beg to be excused from the work, alleging that his legs were so we a they could hardly support him about deck, and he feared he should fall overboard. I also heard the rude curse and the still ruder kick given him in reply; and the fellow came crawling out after me on the long spar which stretched like a gibbet-arm far over the water. We gained the flying jib-boom, and made rapid work of it—for really there was nothing to do of furling but go through the form commanded by the mate—and I was passing the last turn of the gasket, when the foot-rope suddenly slackened beneath my feet, a wild cry of despair rang out on the midnight air, and I was alone on the spar. Looking downward, I saw Chips clinging to a piece of rigging that dangled under the bows. My God! I shall never forget the freezing horror of that face as, lit by the phosphorescent glare of the parted waters, it looked upward for a help that my arm was powerless to give. Even now it haunts me of nights, and I often start from sleep with the cry on my lips which I then, more from instinct than volition, sent thrilling through the ship—"Man overboard!', A terrible cry that, to mingle with the whistling of the gale. For a moment only he thus hung. The ship plunged her head quivering under water, and when she again rose, shaking the spray from her hempen mane like a drenched lioness, Chips was gone. One piercing cry for help came from far to leeward, but none could be given. It would have been impossible to lower a boat in such a sea; and though the life-buoy was detached from the taffrail, it is not probable that any hand rose to clutch it.

With us rude sailors the name of Chips became a household word: and many a rough hand would wipe away a tear when it was mentioned, or when the owner looked at the empty hammock which now swung untenanted. And what said the mate?—that "the skulking scoundrel had gone where he could 'soldier' forever if he pleased."

Well, we doubled the Cape at last, and gliding along in the smooth waters of the rightly-named Pacific, soon forgot the hardships through which we had so lately passed. In the nights of brimming beauty which crown the cup of the low latitudes we drank oblivion to the manifold horrors of the Horn. One night — it was the larboard watch's middle-watch on deck—while bowling along at perhaps seven knots the hour, most of us lounging about deck in drowsy attitudes, Aileen-a-Roon came swelling on the air as distinctly as any human voice could give it utterance. It seemed to come from a little in advance of the ship, now dying away in plaintive melody, and anon rising in a wild swelling cadence, as Chips was wont to hum it. There could be no mistake about the tune; and the loungers, as by one accord, sprang to their feet to assure themselves that they were indeed awake.

"It comes from the flying-jib-bnom end," quoth Old George, the Nestor of our crew. "I knew he would come again, and I know what and whom he wants."

"What's all this nonsense about?" cried the mate, angrily, coming forward, as was his wont whenever conversation drew a group together on the forecastle: he was ever fearful that the crew were hatching some conspiracy against him. He knew that he deserved to be killed, and was correspondingly suspicious that some plot might be laid to that end. Perhaps, too, he saw the shadow of his fate beckoning him on.

"Chips has come back to finish passing his gasket, sir," said Old George. "Listen! Do you not hear him out there humming his Aileen-a-Roon?"

"Aileen-a-Roon be d——d!" said the mate; "it's the flying-jib sheet-block chafing on the topmast stay. You didn't seize that Scotchman on as I told you, you old rascal. Look out for your watch below to-morrow. I'll soon clap a stop on this ghost's jaw of yours." And, taking a marline-spike in his hand, he started out on the bowsprit.

Now let no reader at this moment exult in thinking that he has detected in his author a statement that passes the bounds of probability. None better than myself know that it is not customary for the mate of a ship to amuse himself by doing odd jobs in the rigging at night; I should never have ventured to invent such a story. To have maintained his usual custom and that of officers of his kind, that mate should have sent three men out on the jib-boom to do one man's work, and distributed the rest of the watch at the mast-heads to look out for land in the middle of the Pacific ocean. But again I say, gentlemen, that the finger of Fate was in it; he was beckoned on by the shadow of his doom, and followed. Well, we watched the mate out, and sure enough, when he seated himself crosswise on the spar, the melody ceased.

"Old Devil-bug is right about the ghost," said a merry younker; "no man once well clear of this old hulk would come back again, dead or alive!"

No one gainsayed him; and, half-ashamed of our ready superstition, we resumed our lounging postures about the deck. Time passed on, and eight bells was struck. The relief watch turned out, but where was the mate to pass the orders of the night to his second? We all saw him go out on the jib-boom, but none remembered to have seen him come in. The second mate called "Mr. Maxim!" so loudly that he woke the captain, but no Mr. Maxim made answer. All hands were turned up, the ship hove to, and the boats lowered and sent in all directions, groping through the night, but without avail. And though we shortened sail and cruised vigilantly in that vicinity for a week no tidings came of the missing mate.

Old George shook his head and said, "I told you so." The young sailor never again laughed at the credulity of his elders.

My story is done. In all essential particulars it is true. If you doubt the assertion of the author, seek any one of the men that sailed in the whale ship Walter Scott on her cruise in '51, and see if the whole yarn does not have his corroboration. Or, granting the main facts, you may laugh and say that I have tortured a mere coincidence into a miracle; that the flying-jib-sheet hummed "Aileen-a-Roon:" that the mate fell overboard unheeded, and that the rushing waters stifled his cry for assistance. Very possibly you are right. Sailors reason by perception, landsmen by induction. None will dispute that retribution came where it was deserved; the precise manner in which the bolt fell is scarcely worthy of argument. We undoubtedly agree as to the hand by which it was launched.

I have told you of Chips' death, and what came of it. You can draw your own conclusions. Certain it is that two women in New England wear black—the one mourns a husband that went down to sea and never returned; the other, a lover.

C. H. Webb.

[For the Californian.]

CULTIVATION OF FLOWERS.

CLIMBING PLANTS.

THE almost entire absence of climbing plants in the beds and borders of small flower gardens is greatly to be regretted, for very few plants possess the pleasing aerial lightness which distinguishes these. When in appropriate situations, they may be made to contribute largely to the general appearance of a garden by covering with verdure unsightly objects, or in assisting to form alcoves or verdant passages. A few stones or roots may be thrown together, and the climbers, if planted at the base, will speedily cover them, forming a most agreeable object; rustic vases and baskets are very proper places for them and these articles appear in a much more artistical and appropriate light when filled with creepers or overhung with festoons of the natural flowers and foliage of climbers, than when occupied with stiff-looking geraniums or other plants of a similar growth; and even flower beds may be filled to great advantage with plants that are naturally climbers.

By placing a few small bushes on the surface of a bed, the plants will soon cover them all, and as most of them are very abundant bloomers, the display is not inferior no less enduring than that of any other plants.

Sometimes when they are used to cover rock work or roots, they are just stuck into a small fissure in the stones or a hole in the roots with scarcely a handful of soil to cover them and then left to perish under the stigma of a bad name, the culture of them being, in consequence, given up or discontinued, but such plants are not allowed a fair chance even for their lives, much less of developing their several beauties. They should be planted at the base of whatever they are wished to cover, with free scope for the roots, selecting tall growing species for the top, and dwarfer ones for the bottom of the subject.

For the edging of walks or beds there is nothing more beautiful than some of the climbers, forming an excellent contrast to other plants.

The ivy forms one of the very best of edgings for a wide walk or a drive. Keeping it pegged down to the ground it can be kept in any desired shape; or, put under trees where grass will not grow, it will form a very close verdure. By taking small plants and placing them in the ground as far from the body of the tree as desired, and then training the shoots towards the centre, they will soon cover the entire surface of the ground.

The Tropeolum is another good plant for the same purpose; being in flower nearly all the time and very hardy, it is very desirable. It can be grown from seeds or cuttings; some of the new varieties are very handsome, and when planted in contrast with other suitable colors, we have in the tropeolum one of the most showy objects of the garden.

Ipomveas of the various kinds are among the most beautiful of the climbing plants, and, when grown in a mass, they will hardly be recognized by those who have only now and then seen a single plant bearing here and there a poor, starved flower.

The Passifloras are also admirably adapted both for bedding and training on trellises, and their curious and beautiful flowers will always make them favorites.

The Sollyas, with their pretty blue flowers, as well as the Maurandias, with their blueish purple flowers; the Everlasting Peas, with their variegated colors; the Lophospermum, with its pink tubular flowers; the Thunbergias, with orange-colored flowers, and a black spot in the centre; some of the Kennedyas, with their pea-shaped flowers of various colors, are very pretty.

The variety of climbers from which persons of taste can select is very large; and they can gratify their love of beauty to the fullest extent by a judicious arrangement of them. There are many which are only in bloom for a short time, and whose beauty is soon past, which, in a cold climate and the long winters, do not seem out of place; but here, where we have such a uniformity of temperature, something is required which is ever green and constantly in bloom. Most of the forementioned varieties combine these merits.

Climbing Roses and Honeysuckles have not been mentioned, as every one is supposed to have them. Most of us are compelled by circumstances to live in houses which some one else built, or which have by ill luck an ugly expression in every board or brick, from the sill of the door to the peak of the roof. Paint will not hide it, nor will cleanliness disguise it, however many defects and sins these things cover.

But vines will do both, or, what is better, with their lovely, graceful shapes, and rich foliage and flowers, they give a new character to the whole exterior. However ugly the structure, only give it this fair drapery of leaf and blossom, and nature will touch it at once with something of grace and beauty. What summer foliage is to a naked forest, what rich tufts of ferns are to a rock in a woodland dell, what "hyacinthine locks" are to the Goddess of Beauty, or wings to an angel, the drapery of climbing plants is to a cottage.

FLORAL DIRECTORY—CONTINUED.

March 18. St. Cyril, Great Leopard Bane, (Doronicam Pardalionetes.)
March 19. St. Joseph, Yellow Star of Bethlehem, (Ornithogalum buteum.)
March 20. St. Wulfran, Dog's Violet, (Viola Canina.)
March 21. St. Bennet, Bulbous Fumitory, (Fumaria Bulbosa.)
March 22. St. Catherine of Sweden, Pilewort, (Fricaria Verna.)
March 23. St. Alphonsus, Peerless Daffodil, (Narcissus Incomparbilis.)
March 24. St. Irenœus, Golden Saxifrage, (Chrysosplenum Oppositifolium.)

Iris.

THE "LIBERTY OF THE PRESS."

IN this country, where the effective and simple invention of avertissement is unknown, the press has a liberty not bounded even by the dictionary, but limited only by the imaginations of the people who write for it. A certain check upon journalistic fancy once existed, when nearly all the writers for the press were known; for then, individuals aggrieved by a newspaper had the means of personal satisfaction in their own hands, and there was nothing in public opinion to restrain a citizen from beating an editor if he liked. This means of satisfaction is still the resort of injured innocence in the remoter districts, but it must be confessed that it is liable to sad abuses, and that an editor may now and then be flogged for upholding a great principle, as well as for defaming private character. In this metropolis—where some characteristics of our civilization have found their ripest growth—the argumentum ad hominem is difficult of application in most cases of editorial offence; for the journalists are nearly all sheltered under the cloak of impersonality, which, like charity, covers a multitude of sins, and the public has come to look with a sentimental disfavor upon the device of beating the responsible editor.

In Italy, where the Government exercises a certain control over the press, it is the custom for each journal to maintain as its gerente responsabile a stout laboring man, who, for a stipulated salary, consents to be cast into prison in atonement for such offences as the journal may commit. Consequently, this honest fellow spends half his days in arrest; the journalists pay the fines, and write what they please. This would be the true principle on which to make the journalists personally responsible in this country. For a very slight consideration, a newly arrived emigrant, or an able-bodied freedman, or one of those Constitution-as-it-was people, who believe that slavery is a fine thing and flogging a privilege, could be induced to represent the editor of any leading journal, and take those beatings which can now no longer be given to the real offenders.

We Americans, who have so much civil liberty, have singularly little individual freedom, and it is to be acknowledged that the palladium of our liberties is often made to bear rather heavily upon us. From thrones, and crowns, and usurpations of political power we are tolerably safe; but we have our tyrants, nevertheless. The number of chiels among us taking notes with a view to printing them is out of all proportion to the census, and the "Sweet little cherubs who sit up aloft" in the fifth stories of the daily newspaper offices, writing articles, have a sharper tooth for private character than could be wished. There are laws for libel on our statute-books, but they have heretofore been of very difficult and infrequent application. Unless the tendency to scandal is in some way checked, we shall have, with a really not very wicked civilization, such a state of things as exists in some European countries, where unspotted reputations are unknown, and purity of life is no safer from infamy than its opposite.—The Nation.

There is a French Episcopal Church, in New York, where the contributions are collected by young ladies, and wicked people call it a "pretty waiter-girl church."

CLEOPATRA.

[The following remarkable poem by W. W. Story—the eminent sculptor—appeared in the August number of Blackwood. Aside from the magnificence of its diction, the idea of the poem is so bold and original that very few will feel themselves familiar with it even on a second reading. The doctrine of the Metempsychois never had an ampler or more fitting illustration.]

HERE, Charmian, take my bracelets,
They bar with a purple stain
My arms; turn over my pillows—
They are hot where I have lain:
Open the lattice wider,
A gauze on my bosom throw,
And let me inhale the odors
That over the garden blow.

I dreamed I was with my Antony,
And in his arms I lay;
Ah, me! the vision has vanished—
Its music has died away.
The flame and the perfume have perished—
As this spiced aromatic pastille
That wound the blue smoke of its odor
Is now but an ashy hill.

Scatter upon me rose-leaves,
They cool me after my sleep,
And with sandal odors fan me
Till into my veins they creep;
Reach down the lute, and play me
A melancholy tune,
To rhyme with the dream that has vanished,
And the slumbering afternoon.

There, drowsing in golden sunlight,
Loiters the slow smooth Nile,
Through slender papyri, that cover
The sleeping crocodile.
The lotus boils on the water,
And opens its heart of gold,
And over its broad leaf-pavement
Never a ripple is rolled.
The twilight breeze is too lazy
Those feathery palms to wave,
And yon little cloud is as motionless
As a stone above a grave.

Ah me! this lifeless nature
Oppresses my heart and brain!
Oh! for a storm and thunder—
For lightning and wild fierce rain!
Fling down that lute—I hate it!
Take rather his buckler and sword,
And crash them and clash them together
Till this sleeping world is stirred.

Hark! to my Indian beauty—
My cockatoo, creamy white,
With roses under his feathers—
That flushes across the light.
Look! listen! as backward and forward
To his hoop of gold he clings.
How he trembles, with crest uplifted,
And shrieks as he madly swings!
Oh, cockatoo, shriek for Antony!
Cry, "Come, my love, come home!"
Shriek, "Antony! Antony! Antony!"
Till he hears you even in Rome.

There—leave me, and take from my chamber
That wretched little gazelle
With its bright black eyes so meaningless,
And its silly tinkling bell!
Take him—my nerves he vexes—
The thing without blood or brain—
Or, by the body of Isis,
I'll snap his thin neck in twain!

Leave me to gaze at the landscape
Mistily stretching away,
When the afternoon's opaline tremors
O'er the mountains quivering play;
Till the fiercer splendor of sunset
Pours from the west its fire,
And melted, as in a crucible,
Their earthly forms expire;
And the bald blear skull of the desert
With glowing mountains is crowned,
That burning like molten jewels
Circle its temples round.

I will lie and dream of the past-time,
Æons of thought away,
And through the jungle of memory
Loosen my fancy to play;
When, a smooth and velvety tiger,
Ribbed with yellow and black,
Supple and cushion-footed
I wandered, where never the track
Of a human creature had rustled
The silence of mighty woods,
And, fierce in a tyrannous freedom,
I knew but the law of my moods.
The elephant, trumpeting, started
When he heard my footstep near,
And the spotted giraffes fled wildly
In a yellow cloud of fear.
I sucked in the noontide splendor,
Quivering along the glade,
Or yawning, panting, and dreaming,
Basked in the tamarisk shade,
Till I heard my wild mate roaring,
As the shadows of night came on,
To brood in the trees' thick branches
And the shadow of sleep was gone;
Then I roused, and roared in answer,
And unsheathed from my cushioned feet
My curving claws, and stretched me,
And wandered my mate to greet.
We toyed in the amber moonlight,
Upon the warm flat sand,
And struck at each other our massive arms—
How powerful he was and grand!
His yellow eyes flashed fiercely
As he crouched and gazed at me,
And his quivering tail, like a serpent,
Twitched curving nervously.
Then like a storm he seized me,
With a wild triumphant cry,
And we met, as two clouds in heaven
When the thunders before them fly.
We grappled and struggled together,
For his love like his rage was rude;
And his teeth in the swelling folds of my neck
At times, in our play, drew blood.

Often another suitor—
For I was flexile and fair—
Fought for me in the moonlight,
While I lay couching there,
Till his blood was drained by the desert;
And, ruffled with triumph and power,
He licked me and lay beside me
To breathe him a vast half-hour.
Then down to the fountain we loitered,
Where the antelopes came to drink;
Like a bolt we sprang upon them,
Ere they had time to shrink.
We drank their blood and crushed them,
And tore them from limb from limb,
And the hungriest lion doubted
Ere he disputed with him.

That was a life to live for!
Not this weak human life,
With its frivolous bloodless passions,
Its poor and petty strife!
Come to my arms, my hero,
The shadows of twilight grow,
And the tiger's ancient fierceness
In my veins begins to flow.
Come not cringing to sue me!
Take me with triumph and power,
As a warrior that storms a fortress!
I will not shrink or cower.
Come, as you came in the desert,
Ere we were women and men,
When the tiger passions were in us,
And love as you loved me then?

[For the Californian.]

RECOLLECTIONS OF A LATE DANCING MASTER.

IF I had not heard the bell tolling the other day, I might never again have thought of the man whom I have seen only seldom of late, or have run back on the gamut of my years to the melodious days of small boyhood, to the oldest of tunes that seemed to stumble from a sober violin, and to the recreation which we found once a week, at the little seldom-opened hall in my native place. But the bell told me that he has gone away now, that young children will no longer wait upon him to acquire graces of manner, and awkward middle age will not ask his ministrations to guide them into the paths of elegance and propriety of action. They may lament his absence, but he will be only a memory. His name has gone from the columns of the daily prints, where he allured youth and age to come and mend their ways by taking heed thereto. And though the gilt letters that spelled his name seem little worn at the doors where he used to administer, it were as useless to ask for him there as to go to the lone mountain yonder, and knock at the white slab that stands near the narrow house, where he now spends his days and nights.

I have seen him pass me a few times during these last months, as unconscious of my presence as of an early sorrow. I had not seen him for more than a decade of years, yet my first glance at him revived in me the same old feeling of pity, that my little boyhood even felt, when he was my preceptor, and I an awkward pupil, who oftener heard from him hints of my impurturbable awkwardness, than direct compliments for my adolescent grace. I couple with the memory of him and my early self the impressions that I ever have, not always I fear without envy, of certain diminutive persons not older but comelier than myself. These somehow speedily accomplished each new phase of the dance, and were rewarded with gentle strokes upon the head, and with being led off to a dance with a very pretty girl in dark eyes and blue dress (always my delight,) who moved with an easy elegance that no tutorship could instruct, and which came only as an inheritance of nature. I remember thinking there occurred instances of his partiality, and that he and I and the little girl in blue would all have been better friends, if he had distributed such rewards a little differently.

I don't think he was always as gentle as he would have his precepts make us, for through some days his dark hair would look darker than ever, and in the scowls on his brow one could read the warnings of his impatience. He spoke quickly in those days, and directed us nervously about with his finger, and made urchins, who were never born to be docile, bear the weight of that impatience quite unjustly. He had prejudices that I could not explain, and I am mindful even to-day of his singular indulgence to a pair of little passionate, bright eyes, that used to flash when they chose to, adorned with coral ear-rings, and a plain gold ring on the plump right hand; and of his tireless spite against little flaxen hair, that hung in curls over a scarlet dress, with drooping eyes that always wondered pitifully, while no answer came—only occasionally a lip-quiver, if any reproof was spoken. I think the latter was a kind of human target at which he would send all the shafts of his discontent with the little multitude. The child was not naturally endowed with considerable intelligence, and he ventured a guess, as if it were infallible, that any error which occurred must be on account of her presence. And my memory does not serve me, or when he found unusual success attending his ministrations, he kept very near the little dark eyes and brought out unusual dimples by his unrestrained compliments. Flaxen hair never spoke much, always came punctually, and waited in her scarlet dress. And, although she was so constant and prevalent, she came not to be altogether a favorite with one youthful critic, whose adolescent humor was only satified with calling her "Scarletina." And her companions, perhaps unkindly, accepted the amendment. So little flaxen hair found early, that it's the fortune of some to find thorns so thick about their roses, that they cannot pluck them without bleeding.

I think there are in the experiences of childhood such days of overwhelming festivity and joy, absorbing all intellectual vigor in diproportionate visions of bliss, and driving far away legitimate duties from the thoughts, as do not come to the later age, when there is mixed into the current of our lives such oil of soberness as makes the flow unruffled and silent. I remember one of these eras was when this master announced to us that there would be, what he called an "exhibition," at a period distant not less than four weeks. The youthful interpretation of this was, that the great hall of the little city would be thrown open, for boundless joy—not guessing that it was a method of advertising the accomplishments which he had engrafted upon these little human twigs. But they thought only of the apparently disinterested kindness, and perhaps no revelation of the true fact would have marred their anticipations.

What an effect upon youthful society the anticipation of a great delight induces! I remember that then little girls grew suddenly strong in their loves and antipathies. They became very affectionate, and would crowd together around the desks in school and would walk in files of four abreast up and down the yard with their arms around each others' waists. (I know the little boys too, some of them, wanted to walk on the outside and put their arms around the outside little girls' waists, and that the outside little girls didn't want them to.) And they would keep farther away than ever from the girls they did not love. And, if I remember, they would contort their faces when they met them, and go right off and talk to their bosom and waist friends and express entire disbelief in their possible pleasing appearance upon the coming occasion. I am sure the gentleman who taught our feet could not have guessed how the youthful thoughts danced over the books at school, and chasseed in and out the ribbon shops, and balanced to corner dry goods and slipper stores, and promenaded a great distance away from geography and mathematics. (Perhaps the tutor of the feet cared little for the success of the tutors of the head. He never boasted of any scientific knowledge, and gave no special evidence of any literary acquirement, further than was necessary to express a correct computation of accounts between himself as creditor and numerous parents as debtors.)

The hall of our exhibition was a large stone affair, with broad steps leading up to the great entrance. But we went in by the side avenue, and up two flights of winding stairs. I can see the long procession standing in the upper halls—little blue dress without her blue, but clothed in white like all the rest, but she hadn't changed her eyes or left them at home, and a girl who had made me trustee of many social confidences, perfectly dazzling in robes of tissue (but her wings were covered up,) and "Scarletina," not Scarletina at all, but white-robed and shining, with only a little red ribbon twisted in with her flaxen hair—and boys that were not very handsome commonly, trying to create a sensation, with black jackets and enamelled pumps, among those little white flutterers who were clearly almost overwhelmed with their own unaccustomed wealth of attire.

I remember the unmistakable pride which that master took as he directed the small multitude down the winding steps into the blazing hall, glorious with extravagance of chandeliers and with gaily adorned parents and friends, and magnificent with an orchestra of many instruments. One forgot the humbleness of the dancing school room where we appeared only in the daytime, and the homely little fiddler who sat upon a rostrum in the shadow and scraped away, seeming to think of nothing in particular but how long he must fiddle and of his daily wages.

Such evenings came only seldom into the routine of our lives and were like oases in what seemed the desert of our growing-up days. They were bountcous in nourishment, being rich in anticipation, creamy in participation, and satisfactory in remembrance. We overlooked the impatience of the teacher, in the bountiful bestower of such occasional joy.

The chapter of my life, in which I see his presence through many pages, was lived in a little New England city by the sea. Our early impressions are abiding, and therefore when I met him again a few months ago, after a good many years, I recognized him speedily. He was a tall gentleman with a semi-official visage—an after-dinner countenance as it were. The most casual observer would say he could be a master of ceremonies better than any other. Without æsthetic culture, he could tell what was comeliest and yet be afar off from what was most beautiful. His own walk demonstrated his appreciation of the poetry of motion. You would have said, had you known him, that no one was by nature better adapted to teach others in that branch of æsthetics that appertained to mode. It's an art, whose secrets Nature doesn't whisper to every one, how to meet the stranger without or within thy gates, to salute impressively, to attend uncompromisingly, to part from suggestively ; and if, not being one of those whom Nature has so favored. you had met him, I believe that you would have rested, as having reached a safe haven, after an uncertain voyage. I know there were many men, half through the journey, even in my little native city, and who had not "known all these things from their youth up," who called him under the shadow of their own fig trees and asked and received instruction. And though it may not be writ upon their grave-stones that they walked always afterwards in the paths of rectitude, it is in the remembrance of many of a later generation that these aged disciples thought better of their own accomplishments, and even ventured to assert claims in the society of their generation, which may or may not have seemed to more properly belong to them. But this is a reproach rather against the vanity of maturity, than the successful efforts of our accomplished master.

In my contemplation of him as the dancing master, I considered him excellent in his calling, though wished I could rub the scowl off his forehead. I do not think he considered any person as being as competent in his profession, and so there was an easy dignity about him, an unmistakable excellence, an utter disinclination to be considered as competing with any other. And while, in those days, I thought him sometimes very cross and not over-partial to me, yet if any person ever hinted at a comparison of him with a certain maiden lady, of indefinite years, and with such a horrible monosyllabic name that no person ever invited her to change it, who taught similar branches in a smaller hall or at a cheaper rate, my logical faculty became intensified in his favor and hardened my closed fingers and made me his champion indisputably. I emphasized arguments in his favor, and probably took poetic license with his good qualities, and spoke of them in the superlative degree.

And I thought of him as a man, apart from his magisterial character. I believed his earlier days must have been better than his latter. A languid dignity seemed natural to him. What, as a pupil, my eyes saw as a scowl, I could otherwise believe were lines that some former anxiety had left—the footprints of an early distress. I never asked where his boyhood had been passed, but I kept thinking there was an air about him of dethroned royalty. He had adopted that profession which appertained peculiarly to the elegancies of life. His limbs were not muscular, and his light step never hinted the inheritance of the gardener, Adam, who "earned his bread by the sweat of his face." Whatever his gains, he spent right royally, and scarcely acknowledged the right of tradesman or any one of the mercantile community to present any numerical statement of his obligations. He would waive them off with a surprise upon his countenance and a suppressed lip-curl, as a king might direct one to his chamberlain or chancellor of the exchequer. His dress was always the "purple and fine linen" of the shops, and there was ever an indescribable, unliquidated air about them. I did not think, at that early age, that the uniformity of his fine attire might arise from the risk of leaving salable garments at home and within the reach of such persons connected with the judiciary as attach and sell under process for the payment of debts. I now think he had no preference for such persons, and recognized their occasional brief authority.

I do not know when, in those early days, he went out of my sight, but there is a slip in my recollection a good many years ago, not marked in time, but a period during which I have no memory of him. And these years—I cannot count them—went by, and one day I met this uncrowned sovereign walking on the sunny side, in that dignity which I know must have been an inheritance, with the same lines on his brow, but deeper cut, and, plainly enough, the old regret hanging about him for the early blessings. The former richness of attire was present, but I thought Time had been stealing some of the elasticity from his limbs. He was following the old, elegant calling still, and, I presume, gathered about him all of every generation as it outgrew its infant grace, and was ushered into the awkward bashfulness of immaturity. I have passed the door where his name in gilt letters guided the stranger, and from the open windows have heard the measured tones from that violin—the same to which my youthful feet were taught to keep time. And at the window I have seen bouquets of young faces, almost the same, they seemed, as those grouped together years ago. One day there was there a little pale face with flaxen curls, but saffron ribbons, and I half believed it was the same that now must belong to a maturer woman, the unloved "Scarletina" of a good while ago,

"As if a rose could shut and be a bud again."

I never passed his name but I thought over again my youth. He seemed to me, as I met him, as not of to-day, but an unprogressive guide-board—a hand that did not move, but kept pointing backward to different and earlier days, as if derisively, and knowing that I could not return upon that path.

But now he has gone away from tripping girls and stumbling boys, from the routine of teaching to the presence of the great Teacher ; from the afternoon lessons to sparkling young eyes and blue dresses, and from brass-buttoned jackets, and from evening assemblies where he was master of ceremonies, uncertain if he shall receive any other reward, but sure that creditors or the judiciary cannot touch his goods. He carried no treasures away, and has left no possessions behind. No one has applied in behalf of bereft heirs for Letters Testamentary or of Administration. His only estates are what he may have in eternity, of which the County Recorder even can give no information. There is many a man and woman who, when they hear of his passage, will stop a moment to remember him—the subdued relic of royalty, heir to what unknown throne!

Elegant teacher—anxious waiter upon Fate! Thou didst wander through Time, wondering if thou mightst not chance to catch some misdirected beatitude, and wast disappointed! Skillful guide of youth and inelegant maturity to gracefulness and ease, better things were wished thee than thou didst acquire. Corrector of ignorant steps and reveeler of new accomplishments to pedal capacities, thou hast finished thy work and hast gone beyond the reach of all men's compliments and recommendations! Art thou waiting in thy whereabouts, ready to greet thy former pupils as they pass beyond the gate? Did thy scholars, who had gone before, remember thy presence in the eternal halls, and welcome thee? Or art thou unmindful of thy earthly calling, and hast left thy pumps and earthly pomp out of mind? Nathless, we follow thee as far as we may on thy journey, and have burned candles for thy way, if it was perchance darkened. We know some peace has come to thee, for in death thou hadst lost that early and continuous frown, and may be thou hadst reached again thy lost crown and thy wished-for beatitude. Soul of my departed Teacher, Vale! and Amen!

PHILIP.

A COMFORTABLE DOCTRINE.

WHEN Dr. Livingstone was sleeping out one night, in the course of his explorations, a lion seized and shook him, with a view to further proceedings. It is not many men who can say with Miss Pecksniff that they have "lived to be shook" in such a style as this. The Doctor records it as his experience that the result of this shaking was to superinduce a sort of comatose state, a feeling half of numbness, half of contented repose, in which he disregarded pain, and had no considerable dread of the tearing of flesh and limbs which was to precede his death. Thereupon he suggests the idea that perhaps the practice of shaking their prey which is observed in all feline animals, as well as in dogs and in some of the more violent fishes, is a Providential arrangement to spare the necessary victim pain.

If we look into tales of death by violence, we shall see in very many cases some such preparation for a comparatively easy death—easy, that is to say, as compared with the horror which the account excites in those who hear or read of them. This would appear to be notably the case in some kinds of railway accident. The shock and jar of a collision has something peculiarly numbing about it. Passengers who escape unhurt from such a catastrophe relate that they suddenly became conscious of something happening or being about to happen, and knew nothing more till they found themselves faced round the other way, or heels uppermost, or contorted in some of the many strange ways in which the human body is found to be contorted after accidents of this kind. There has been no blow to account for a loss of consciousness ; there is no bruise to show, no outward injury done, and yet locomotion of a very complicated and difficult nature has been achieved, and a space of time has passed which cannot by any means be called instantaneous, for it has sufficed for the crash and tumult of the collision to come to an end, and the transported passenger finds himself settled and stationary. A Scotch physician who was in a bad railway accident some years ago discovered himself sitting at the top of the cutting in which the accident occurred, externally unhurt, as if he could not have been thrown there ; indeed, from the nature of the case he could not have been. How he had got there he had no conception ; and it seemed quite certain that he had not been carried or in any way helped there. His nervous system was so completely thrown out of gear that he never recovered from the shock.

It can scarcely be doubted that had death come upon him in any form whatever during the interval which elapsed between his leaving the carriage and his finding himself quietly seated on the cutting, many yards away from the ruined train, he would have met it without conscious suffering. And, without going through such a hazardous ordeal as this, large numbers of persons have had experience which points in the same direction.

A man who is a bad sailor, and has crossed the Channel in really dirty weather, sitting on the deck, knows what it is to be suddenly lifted as it were from his seat by some strange power, such as that which carried the prince and princess in the Arabian Nights backwards and forwards through the air, and deposited ever so far off in a heap, among ruinous débris of umbrella and cloak, and other impediment of a sick passenger on a stormy day. At the moment of his deposit, and for some moments after, no imminence of death in any form could have much effect in rousing him even to a struggle to evade it. And much the same result follows sometimes from what the Irish call a gentle tap on the head ; so that in many very horrible accidents resulting in prolonged "agonies of death," which make every nerve of one's body quiver at the bare recital, there are great chances in favor of the victim's having received just some preparatory jerk. or shock, or blow which paralyzes that part of his system to whose sensitiveness pain is due, and so renders him unable to feel the lengthened pangs.

And this may very well hold in the case of those who struggle on and cry aloud in their apparent torture, even as the "subject" under the surgeon's knife makes signs of pain when his nerves are under the blessed influence of anæsthetics.

It is a comfort to think of such things in these days, when steam locomotion and steam machinery bring to so many households the horrors of a dreadful death to enhance the usual sorrow for death. And, in face of the terrible catastrophe in the Bay of Biscay, it is a great comfort to think that a similar effect is often produced, though perhaps not to so high a degree, by fatigue, by exposure to wet and cold, by prolonged and anxious doubt. Sea-sickness has especially and to a very high degree this effect. A man under its influence will constantly say, "Do with me what you will." If he were to fall overboard, he is sure he should make no effort to save himself. If he is told that the ship is sinking, the announcement has but little interest for him. In that storm in which the London went down, long before a tenth part of the passengers could have become accustomed to the motion of the vessel, we may be sure that there were many whose ordinary sufferings rendered it impossible for them to have that keen perception of the horrors of the situation which each fresh detail brings to us on land. And of the rest large numbers must have been tired into resignation, tired by the efforts at self-preservation and the preservation of others they had so spiritedly and so nobly made, tired by exertions the very intentness of which precluded the possibility of much agony of anticipation while such exertions lasted. Many again of those whose sex or age or infirmities forced them to be somewhat inactive spectators of all that went on were doubtless only half alive to their trials. The discomforts of a vessel on which the sea was making clear breaches, the numbness of cold and the results of exposure to wind and spray, the deafening noise of the elements and the confusion of all within the ship—all these and many more influences would be at work to reduce persons of weak constitution to a half-regardless state, some time before death was known to be inevitable.

THE Athenæum says : "If parents of small means would train up one of their daughters to undertake the cooking of the family, and another to do the housework, instead of keeping an over-worked, incompetent maid-of-all-work, it would be far better for the girls themselves and for the comfort of the family, than let them go out into the world as second and third-rate governesses or music teachers. We have seen the comforts of a house in which the daughters have been trained to do all the work of the family. The young ladies were as refined and their hands as nicely kept as if they had done nothing but the desultory uselessness which seems to preside over female employment. The more refined and lady-like a woman is the neater and quicker she transacts any household work she undertakes."

ON the occasion of starting a convivial club, somebody proposed that it should consist of twelve members, and be called "The Zodiac," each member to be named after a sign.

"And what shall I be?" inquired a somewhat solemn man, who was afraid that his name would be forgotten.

"Oh!" replied Jerrold, we'll bring you in as the weight in Libra."

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

Sacramento Agents: Crowell & Lolx, at A. Dennery & Co.'s. 138 J street.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

A. A. STICKNEY,
J. P. BOGARDUS,
WM. J. BINGHAM,
C. H. WEBB, } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1866.

THE MISFORTUNE OF BEING RICH.

IN view of the difficulty which a rich man is said to experience in entering into Heaven, it would seem that by the workings of the great natural law of compensation he should be permitted to have a comparatively easy time of it upon earth. But no! Against the embarrassment of riches he has to struggle even here below. When he gives in alms it is almost invariably complained that he does not give enough; if he refuse to give at all still worse is his fate, for as before he was denounced as a niggard, he is now anathemized as a miser.

If he become involved in a lawsuit, no matter what right may be upon his side, a jury is morally certain to find a suit against him, particularly if the action be one for damages. If the scale of justice lean to his side, the thought that "he can afford it" is pretty sure to turn the beam. In the very outset of the case he has to struggle against a popular prejudice. Even the voice of the press is lifted up against him, and that inexorable finger-post points out to the popular sympathy the direction in which it must travel.

We have seen a notable instance of this in a late breach of promise suit, brought against a wealthy bachelor of this city. It is not upon record that the defendant has ever done harm to any one, or failed to pay his taxes regularly, and all honest dues. His enjoyment lay in the accumulation of wealth, as that of some others lies in spending it. He followed the bent of his inclinations, getting all he could and keeping all he got. While other men were devoting themselves with success to the comparatively easy task of spending money, he was turning his energies to the more difficult science of saving it. Not to the sirens of earth did he incline his ear—deaf he has been to them, as were the sailors of Ulysses when their barque glided safely past the perilous land of which mention is made in the Odyssey. Wine flowed, but he did not dissolve his dollars in the bowl. From the fascinations of the green-cloth he turned away. It may be that he gave little or nothing in charity, but should it not be also recorded to his credit that he spent little of his substance in wastefulness? For spending money, whether on contribution-boxes or other seductions, we are not sure that men deserve extravagant praise. To the one it is a gratification to give, to the other it is a pleasure to keep—why deny to a man the pursuit of happiness in his own way? Cleopatra found an expensive pleasure in swallowing pearls; other eccentrically disposed persons have derived gratification from standing upon a wharf and dropping gold pieces into the water. The only pearls swallowed by fair lips now-a-days are those which go down unconsciously with the succulent oyster; but what is the difference whether a man drop his money into the water, into a contribution-box, or into his own iron-chest, if in each instance it be only his individual pleasure which he seek to serve?

It never seems to be taken into account that it is generally only by the practice of the most rigorous economy and stern self-denial that great wealth is acquired. In making money, as in making love, it may be said, Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coute. John Jacob Astor was accustomed to say that getting together his first thousand dollars was more difficult than the acquirement of all the rest of his fortune. Certainly it requires some resolution for a young sprig to grip himself by the throat with one hand, clutch tightly the neck of his purse with the other, and tread among the flowery paths "where every prospect pleases, without letting go a dime! and should we not give the proper credit-marks for it? Some call this sacrifice of the pleasures of the senses virtue, but may we not also term it economy? Most men, acting upon the dum vivimus, vivamus, and carpe diem principle, eat their cake as they go along, but that is no reason why one whose pleasure lies in seeing his cake should nibble away upon it until nothing is left. No, not at all; if he choose let him lock it away in his strong-box and occasionally smell of it through the keyhole to assure himself that it is there. If it mould or he die before venturing upon a bite, it is his business and who shall interfere?

Every man has his idea of what happiness is and starts out to attain it. One man thinks it lies in getting religion, another in getting rich. It is the custom to say that the man who sets his mind upon wealth finds it only dross when he grasps it, and is discontented. Not so, at all. It may fairly be assumed that the man who thinks enough of money to deny himself much of what goes to make life pleasant in order to acquire it, values the object of his pursuit enough to not regard it as an idle bubble and all that when it is in his hand. His chief trouble and greatest anxiety is destined to lie in the difficulty of keeping it. He is quite as happy as the man is who started out at the same time with the ambition to become a statesman, a shoemaker, or a Justice of the Peace, and attains the object of his ambition. Each has his troubles, for the successful man is always envied. The statesman is maligned, slandered, and perhaps sent as consul to some obscure port in Japan where he is liable to have his throat cut with swords, the shoemaker has rivals in trade who use cheaper leather and undersell him, and the Justice of the Peace is accused of corruption in deciding a case involving the ownership of a sheep.

Of these troubles the rich man has his full share, and is equally deserving of sympathy. One of the annoyances to which he is subject is the overtures of the fair sex. If he look at one, a latent wink which must mean something is detected in his eye; if he speak to one twice, a family consultation is at quickly held to decide whether or not his attentions are honorable—if he speak thrice, he is open to a breach of promise suit at once. A cloud of witnesses will swear that they hard emotion in his voice, saw love in his look, and that he positively had matrimony in his eye. His case is prejudged before being called before the Courts, and whatever its merits may be, the struggle against all the many influences brought to bear, is always a difficult and generally a vain one. In view of the privations a man has to undergo in getting rich, the trouble he has in keeping so, and the many other annoyances to which he is subject, we submit that the rich man should always have fair play, that it should be assumed that he is quite as good as a poor man so long as he pays his taxes, and that in view of the fact that he will, in the common course of nature, be called upon to go to his account with only a very slim chance of squeezing his portly figure through the needle's eye, he should not be baited and badgered to the extent he is on earth.

A NEW feature has been introduced into Shakspearean criticism. We have heard much—too much, perhaps—about the various subjects mentioned by him, but we are now threatened with notices of the things which he did not mention. In a recent number of Notes and Queries, Mr. Walter Thornbury has an article on "Shakspeare's Silence Concerning Smoking," and he promises others on "Shakspeare's Silence About Scotchmen and Silver Forks."

PATTI's reception at the Italiens in Paris was brilliant beyond anything in the history of the triumphs of this theatre, but the enthusiasm of the audience did not quite reach the point it attained at Marseilles, where the people took the horses from her carriage and dragged her to her hotel, and then, snatching her bonnet from her head, tore it into shreds and divided them around as souvenirs.

SWINBURNE, the poet, proposes to edit a selection of Lord Byron's poems, and to furnish the volume—which Moxon, of London, will publish—with an introductory critical essay on Byron's life, character and genius. Swinburne, by the way, is still a young man, not having attained his thirtieth year. His father is a Rear-Admiral in the British Navy. His mother is the daughter of the Earl of Ashburnham.

THE New York News has sent Miss Carry Corinne Lester to the South as its special correspondent and agent. She is described by those who have seen her as a very beautiful and accomplished lady. The proprietors of the News are complimented by the Southern journals for the skill they have displayed in the selection of such a representative.

WE acknowledge the receipt from M. Gray, 613 Clay street, of two pieces of new music entitled, "Good Bye at the Door," and "The Listening Mother," arranged for the piano.

AT the "Young Men's Ball," in Washington, Grant, Meade, Sherman, and Thomas, danced in one of the sets.

A HANDLESS man a letter did write;
The dumb dictated it word for word;
It was read by one who had lost his sight;
And deaf was he who listened and heard.
It was nought that the handless man did write;
And nought was read by his dumb compeer;
It was nought that struck on the blind man's sight;
And nought on the deaf man's ear.
For one and the same, as we all well know,
Are a cipher, and nought, and the letter O.

AMUSEMENTS.

MAGUIRE'S Seven Sisters have held possession of the Opera House stage during the week past as well as the preceding one. The piece has had a very successful run, drawing uniformly good houses. The cool weather may perhaps have had something to do with increasing the attendance, moving people to gather around the fires of Phlegethon which at intervals are commanded to light the darkness of of the scenery. This afternoon and evening, however, the Seven Sisters abdicate the throne. No more will Courtaine, in short skirts and with gauze wings, disport upon the stage. Mrs. Edwin must disband her Zouaves; Jackson will be called upon to wash the cork from his face, and Leman will be obliged to adjourn his Congress of States. But The Enchanted Beauty is underlined for speedy production, so that all who are fond of scenic display may expect an opportunity of soon again revelling in a perfect paradise of theatrical effects. A few chanting beauties, let us incidentally remark, would be a material addition to the Opera House Company in such pieces as the popular taste seems to require and managements have determined to give. On Friday evening, Charles Thorne took a benefit, Miss Emily Thorne—a thorn, however, claiming an entirely different geneological tree—volunteering for the occasion. The Corsican Brothers and The Pleasant Neighbor were announced for the entertainment, and, the box-sheet being filled early in the day, it is safe to say that he had a crowded house.

Benefits being in order, Harry Jackson will present himself before the public on Thursday evening, next week. On the principle that one good turn deserves another, Mr. Jackson should certainly have a good house, for, having contributed to the population lately, it is only fair that the population should now contribute something to his support. Aside from this claim for a benefit which shall be a benefit, Mr. Jackson is a careful and pains-taking actor, and in his peculiar line of characters has few rivals upon this coast. And Harry Jackson, Jr.,—who kindly volunteers for the senior's benefit—is a perfect little gem of precocity. As a general thing, infant prodigies are detestable bores, and very few ever amount to anything as adults. But this little fellow is a rare exception to what is unfortunately a general rule. Neither pert nor forward, his whole soul is evidently wrapped up in a profession to which he seems to have taken as naturally as a duck to water. On the stage he appears entirely unconscious that he is on exhibition, entering into the spirit of his part with a con amore air especially pleasing. His Irish personations are excellent. One explanation of the modest grace that invests the little fellow may be found in the fact that his father has never starred him, and, if this system of wise repression, accompanied by judicious culture, be maintained to the end, we have an idea that Jackson Jr. will become an ornament to a profession which has never yet been too extensively decorated.

If any proof were wanted that our people delight in spectacular pieces, and will turn out if a novelty be presented to them, the truth made itself palpably apparent on Thursday night. It was fairly a gala night at the Metropolitan. The long-promised Sheep's Foot was presented, and there was not standing-room in the house. For weeks it had been in careful rehearsal, and the most mysterious rumors were rife concerning it. It was known that on one occasion, at least, at rehearsal, the leading actress was shot up in the air, ten feet or more, like a Congreve-rocket, by way of trying the catapult power of a trap. In consequence of this experiment, it was confidently expected on some sides that the ladies of the theatre, ballet and all—easily enough the latter could be lifted—would be kept bouncing up and down at the mouths of traps, like pith balls toyed with by the breath of a juggler. But all were disappointed. With the rising of the curtain, Don Guzman came forward en domino, drew a concealed weapon on himself, and had it jerked from his hand with a promptness which speaks well for the aerial police. Very soon after, Signora Leonora Mandeville Thorne and Don Lopez Leach came forward, standing on their feet, instead of on their heads, and sang a duet in most charming style. And then, behold, we had Don Niaso Nigodinos Woodhull and Lazarillo Ruby upon the scene. But we cannot, will not, recount the plot of the piece. The tricks, transformations, effects and all, would fill a small volume. It is called the sheep's foot because that inexpensive morsel of mutton is given to the genial Guzman by a good genii—we preserve the singular use of the noun adhered to on the stage, though always under the impression that it is plural—to assist him in making up to and off with Leonora, but a pig's foot would have done equally well as a talisman, and been much better for jelly. But sometimes there is a good deal in a name. This, it will be remembered, is the piece which was produced at La Porte St. Martin, in Paris, at an expense of 150,000 francs, and ran two years—a pretty good run on one foot. Ah, in that city to which all good Americans go when they die, they know how to do things! But revenons a nos moutons or a notre Pied de Mouton—the piece went off very well the first night, all things considered. The reluctant traps by postponing the delivery of two members of the quintette and smashing the guitar of one innocent who did not know their viciousness, contributed somewhat to the mirth of the audience in the beginning. But such contretemps are pleasant rather than otherwise to all save the stage manager. Conscientiously, however, we cannot compliment Beneux on his ballet—of course Acosta and Wiethoff are excepted from this criticism, for they could not be better, and in point of justice should not be counted in among the recruits. A little ballet is a dangerous thing, and, shade of Terpsichore, what a ballet was this one! But doubtless it will improve as it gets older. The principal characters were very well played. As "Don Guzman" Miss Hinckley excelled all her former efforts in dress, fairly unpacking her trunks and proving conclusively that, though endowed with a sheep's foot, she is by no means possessed of a sheep's leg. The character was excellently sustained throughout. As "Leonora" Mrs. Thorne was naive and piquant as usual, though she requires a little practice in getting down magic stairs. Leach and Woodhull were both very good in their respective parts. The good genii—her first essay we are told in a speaking part—will acquire a better modulation of voice after a little practice. In the skating scene Wiethoff and Ronndy distinguished themselves, but Acosta evidently is not at home on ice, still, she was charmingly awkward, and such a danseuse can afford to have her skating smiled at. The anvil chorus was excellently well done, and the double-stick combat could scarcely have been improved upon. Of the acrobatic performances of the Buislays it is unnecessary to speak, for they have no rivals. Altogether the new piece is the most successful as well as ambitious scenic piece we have yet seen produced in California, and if it draws as it at present promises to, a sheep's foot will for the future be synomonous as a representative of value with a foot of the best mine on the stock list.

In giving themselves over to things seen and scenic, our people are now but following the example of that universal fashion-setter—Paris. La Famille Benoiton has been playing at the Vaudreille Theatre since early in November, a correspondent writes, and even now seats have to be secured weeks in advance. Everything is a la Benoiton in costume, from boots up, and two of the actresses have already retired on fortunes and princes. At the Chatelet, a revue called The Magic Lantern, has been another sensation. It is said that the presence of so many people in the theatre is owing to the absence of clothes on the many people on the stage—which speaks well for the primitive taste of the people of Paris. According to all accounts, clothes are indeed few and far between, such magnificent distances being preserved that finally the police took umbrage and lent their friendly shade. The lady who personated Eve stepped out from a large book—the first volume of the book of nature—wearing a chignon and a fig leaf—et viola tout. The reigning conundrum for some time was: What was the first leaf in the book of nature? The answer is so plainly aux yeux, as to spare the trouble of giving it. Le Lion Amoureux, at the Francais, was the last sensation of the town. Written by Ponsard, a member of the Academy, the Emperor has been twice to see it, and the author has been granted a pension, paid by the Education Office. We yet look to see a peusion granted by our Board of Education to the gifted author of The Wild Irish Mother. The get-up of Le Lion is said to be perfectly splendid, Marshal Vaillant having actually gone behind the scenes to show Bressant how to wear his hat with the regular military air, while the costumes of Hoche and Tallien were copied from dresses loaned by the families. Encouraged by the success of Le Pied de Mouton, perhaps some tete de mouton of a manager here will bring out a translation of some of the abovementioned pieces—The Magic Lantern, for instance, would be a light little thing to do.

At Hayes Park—to which rural retreat the Sunday laws do not reach—another grand balloon asceusion is advertised for to-morrow. Woodhull has lately taken to ballooning, but in this instance Ryland appears as the æronaut. Miss Elleua will also walk a tight rope. Herr Holmau will pull against a span of horses, and the Lee family will also entertain the people with a variety of acrobatic and gymnastic feats.

The farewell concert given by Miss Jenny Landesman at Platt's Hall, on Wednesday eveuing, was very well attended. The young lady possesses a naturally fine mezzo-soprano voice, and, with the cultivation which she will have an opportunity of bestowing upon it in Europe, we may yet astonish the outside world by another prima douna. She leaves upon her European trip at an early day. The Misses Lamlein won much applause by their performance upon the piano, and from their present execution much may be augured of the excellence which they are one day destined to attain.

A leader in yesterday's Alta headed "How much can we bear," leads off thus: "The question of how much taxes a people can bear and live etc." Oh, Alta! Alta! That is more than we can bear, great as is our liking for our good natured contemporary. It would have been so easy to writte, "how much taxation," "how great a tax," or "how many taxes." But "how much taxes" taxes us beyond what we can bear, indeed, good Alta.

A COMPLAINT ABOUT CORRESPONDENTS.

WHAT do you take us for, on this side of the continent? I am addressing myself personally, and with asperity, to every man, woman, aud child east of the Rocky Mountains. How do you suppose our minds are constituted, that you will write us such execrable letters—such poor, bald, uninteresting trash? You complain that, by the time a man has been on the Pacific Coast six months, he seems to lose all concern about matters and things and people in the distant East, and ceases to answer the letters of his friends and even his relatives. It is your own fault. You need a lecture on the subject—a lecture which ought to read about as follows:

There is only one brief, solitary law for letter-writing, and yet you either do not know that law, or else you are so stupid that you never think of it. It is very easy and simple: Write only about things and people your correspondent takes a living interest in.

Cannot you remember that law, hereafter, and abide by it? If you are an old friend of the person you are writing to, you know a number of his acquaintances, and you can rest satisfied that even the most trivial things you can write about them will be read with avidity out here on the edge of sunset.

Yet how do you write?—how do the most of you write? Why, you drivel and drivel, and drivel along, in your wooden-headed way, about people one never heard of before, and things which one knows nothing at all about and cares less. There is no sense in that. Let me show up your style with a specimen or so. Here is a paragraph from my Aunt Nancy's last letter—received four years ago, and not answered immediately—not at all, I may say.

"St. Louis, 1862.

"Dear Mark: We spent the evening very pleasantly at home, yesterday. The Rev. Mr. Macklin and wife, from Peoria, were here. He is an humble laborer in the vineyard and takes his coffee strong. He is also subject to neuralgia—neuralgia in the head—and is so unassuming and prayerful. There are few such men. We had soup for dinner likewise. Although I am not fond of it. Oh, Mark, why don't you try to lead a better life? Read II. Kings, from chap. 2 to chap. 24 inclusive. It would be so gratifying to me if you would experience a change of heart. Poor Mrs. Gabrick is dead. You did not know her. She had fits, poor soul. On the 14th the entire army took up the line of march from——"

I always stopped there, because I knew what was coming—the war news, in minute and dry detail—for I could never drive it into those numsculls that the overland telegraph enabled me to know here in San Francisco every day all that transpired in the United States the day before. and that the pony express brought me exhaustive details of all matters pertaining to the war, at least two weeks before their letters could possibly reach me. So I naturally skipped their stale war reports, even at the cost of also skipping the inevitable suggestions to read this, that, and the other batch of chapters in the Scriptures, with which they were interlarded at intervals like snares wherewith to trap the unwary sinner.

Now what was the Rev. Macklin to me? Of what consequence was it to me that he was "an humble laborer in the vineyard," and "took his coffee strong?"—aud was unassuming, and neuralgic, and prayerful? Such a strange conglomeration of virtues could only excite my admiration—nothing more. It could awake no living interest. That there are few such men and that we had soup for dinner, are simply gratifying—that is all. "Read twenty-two chapters of Second Kings" is a nice shell to fall in the camp of a man who is not studying for the ministry. The intelligence that "poor Mrs. Gabrick" was dead, aroused no enthusiasm—mostly because of the circumstance that I had never heard of her before, I presume. But I was glad she had fits—although a stranger.

Don't you begin to understand, now? Don't you see that there is not a sentence in that letter of any interest in the world to me? I had the war news in advance of it; I could get a much better sermon at church when I needed it; I didn't care anything about poor Gabrick, not knowing deceased: nor yet the Rev. Macklin, not knowing him either. I said to myself, "Here's not a word about Mary Anne Smith—I wish there was; nor about Georgiana Brown, or Zeb. Leavenworth, or Sam Bowen, or Strother Wiley—or about anybody else I care a straw for." And so, as this letter was just of a pattern with all that went before it, it was not answered, and one useless correspondence ceased.

My venerable mother is a tolerably good correspondent—she is above the average, at any rate. She puts on her spectacles aud takes her scissors and wades into a pile of newspapers and slashes out column after column—editorials, hotel arrivals, poetry, telegraph news, advertisements, novellettes, old jokes, recipes for making pies, cures for "biles"—anything that comes handy; it don't matter to her; she is entirely impartial; she slashes out a column, and runs her eye down it over her spectacles (she looks over them because she can't see through them, but she prefers them to her more serviceable ones because they have got gold rims to them)—runs her eye down the column and says "Well, it's from a St. Louis paper, anyway," aud jams it into the envelope along with her letter. She writes about everybody I ever knew or ever heard of, but unhappily she forgets that when she tells me that "J. B. is dead; and that W. L. is going to marry T. D.;" and that "B. K. and R. M. and L. P. J. have all gone to New Orleans to live," it is more than likely that years of absence may have so dulled my recollection of once familiar names that their unexplained initials will be as unintelligible as Hebrew unto me. She never writes a name in full, and so I never know who she is talking about. Therefore I have to guess—and this was how it came that I mourned the death of Bill Kribben when I should have rejoiced over the dissolution of Ben. Kenfuron. I failed to cipher the initials out correctly.

The most useful and interesting letters we get here from home are from children seven or eight years old. This is petrified truth. Happily they have got nothing to talk about but home, and neighbors, and family—things their betters think unworthy of transmission thousands of miles. They write simply and naturally, and without straining for effect. They tell all they know, and then stop. They seldom deal in abstractions or moral homilies. Consequently their epistles are brief; but, treating as they do of familiar scenes and persons, always entertaining. Now therefore, if you would learn the art of letter-writiug, let a little child teach you. I have preserved a letter from a small girl eight years of age—preserved it as a curiosity, because it was the only letter I ever got from the States that had any information in it. It runs thus:

St. Louis, 1865.

"Uncle Mark, if you was here I could tell you about Moses in the Bulrushers again. I know it better, now. Mr. Sowerby has got his leg broke off a horse. He was riding it on Sunday. Margaret, that's the maid, Margaret has took all the spittoons, and slop-buckets, and old jugs out of your room, because she says she don't think you're ever coming back any more, you been gone so long. Sissy McElroy's mother has got another little baby. She has them all the time. It has got little blue eyes, like Mr. Swimley that boards there, and looks just like him. I have got a new doll, but Johnny Anderson pulled one of its legs out. Miss Doosenberry was here to day; I give her your picture, but she said she didn't want it. My cat has got more kittens, O, you can't think—twice as many as Lottie Belden's. And there's one such a sweet little buff one with a short tail, and I named it for you. All of them's got names, now—General Grant, and Halleck, and Moses, and Margaret, and Deuteronomy, and Captain Semmes, and Exodus, and Leviticus, and Horace Greeley—all named but one, and I am saving it because the one that I named for You's been sick all the time since, and I reckon it'll die. [It appears to have been mighty rough on the short-tailed kitten, naming it for me—I wonder how the reserved victim will stand it.] Uncle Mark, I do believe Hattie Caldwell likes you, and I know she thinks you are pretty, because I heard her say nothing couldn't hurt your good looks—nothing at all—she said even if you was to have the small-pox ever so bad you would be just as good-looking as you was before. And my ma says she's ever so smart. [Very.] So no more this time, because General Grant aud Moses is fighting.

Annie."

This child treads on my toes, in every other sentence, with a perfect looseness, but in the simplicity of her time of life she doesn't know it.

I consider that a model letter—an eminently readable and entertaining letter—and, as I said before, it contains more matter of interest and more real information than any letter I ever received from the East. I had rather hear about the cats at home and their truly remarkable names, than listen to a lot of stuff about people I am not acquainted with, or read "The Evil Effects of the Intoxicating Bowl," illustrated on the back with a picture of a ragged scalliwag pelting away right and left, in the midst of his family circle, with a junk bottle.—"Mark Twain," in the New York Review.

Miss Adelaide Phillips.—A writer in the Boston Transcript warmly and truly praises Miss Adelaide Phillips, remarking: "A pure contralto voice is a rare gift; and in the first rank of contralto artists, (very limited in number) the name of Adelaide Phillips is widely known. Her early professional life was passed among us, and we have reason to be justly proud of her well-earned fame. Accustomed from her childhood to the boards—having, indeed, no recollection of her first appearance on the stage—Miss Phillips possesses the rare advantage of life-long habit united with the dramatic and vocal gifts which were born with her. At the time when, as a very young girl, she had been advised to study for the opera, Jenny Lind was sweeping through this country,

"'A living voice, a breathing harmony."

She heard Adelaide Phillips sing, and not only did justice to the great promise of her musical gifts, but addressed to her an autograph letter of generous encouragement aud tender counsel; the check for a thousand dollars, which the latter enveloped, was less valuable to the heart of the young girl than the blessing that accompanied it. Miss Phillips followed Jenny Lind's advice in choosing Garcia as her instructor, and studied with him in London for two years, after which time she spent a season in Italy, and made her successful début in the opera at Milan. Since then her voice of song has passed over many lands, and wherever she appeared excited strong admiration. Those among us who were in Paris in the winter of 1862 will remember the interest they felt, when Adelaide Phillips made her début at the Italian Opera, and their pride in her magnificent representation of Azucena. It was no light achievement to assume successfully a role which the Parisians associated with Alboni. Miss Phillips's professional engagements have carried her far away and detained her from us long. Once more we hear her glorious voice in oratorio and in opera, and never has she sung better than during the last few weeks. We welcome again her presence among us."

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House ,8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage.
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50.
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will findi Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., fe6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President.
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe6-3m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M fe25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum.....7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
ja27 38 Walker street, New York.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

Wine of Pepsine,

OR,

RENNET WINE!

A NEW AND EFFICACIOUS REMEDY FOR DYSPEPSIA, Gastralgia, etc. Prepared from fresh reonets according to the formula of Dr. GEORGE ELLIS, and presenting this valuable digestive aid in an attractive form both as regards taste and appearance.

For the past few years this medicine has been used with great success by the most enlightened physicians of Europe and America in Dyspepsia, Gastralgia, in slow and difficult digestion following Fevers, and also in Consumption and other Chronic Diseases. Price $1 50 per bottle.

WM. H. KEITH & CO.'S

GLUCOLEIN,

A NEW AND VALUABLE COMPOUND OF

COD LIVER OIL.

GLUCOLEIN combines all the therapeutic properties of the crude oil, and does not become rancid on exposure, and is prepared from the BEST French Brown Cod Liver Oil.

Glucolein dissolves readily in the stomach and is easily assimilated, very pleasant to take and does not leave any bad taste in the mouth, nor produce eructations or any unpleasant effects, and is easily borne by the most delicate stomach.

Glucolein contains a large per cent. of oil, and, from the facts above stated, one teaspoonful is more efficacious than one tablespoonful of crune oil.

Put up in glass jars—price, $1 50 each. fe3

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

HOLT'S MAP

OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

THIS MAP has been carefully revised, and all the NEW COUNTIES inserted, and also many other important changes made.

For sale, Mounted or in Book Form, by

WARREN HOLT,
ja13-tf 305 Montgomery street, Room No. 2.

WALTER S. PIERCE,

Pianist,

AND PROMPTER OF DANCING,

Can be engaged for PRIVATE PARTIES, at Piano Rooms, No. 26 Montgomery street, opposite the Lick House. fe3-2m

---

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

CHARLES HENRY WEBB, Editor.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, O. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is no

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON SATURDAY, - - APRIL 14TH

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained. The peculiar construction of this machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick ilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself. The advantage derived by thus avoiding all trituration in the presence of quicksilver, must be apparent to any one at all acquainted with gold or silver amalgamating.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

I CHALLENGE COMPETITION.

CALL AND SEE THE MACHINES WORK!

W. D. FARRAND.

WHO WANTS
Profitable Employment
OR PAYING INVESTMENTS!

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.

Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.

Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.

Business Interests sold quickly for cash.

Real Estate bought and sold.

Help furnished for all kinds of employment.

Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.

S. P. WHITMAN,

Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17 3m

---

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV. P. I. GREY, President.

DR. C. W. MOORE'S
Medical and Surgical Institute,

COMMERCIAL STREET,

A few doors below Kearny, - - - San Francisco.

ATTENDING AND RESIDING PHYSICIAN,

C. W. MOORE, M. D.,

Late Surgeon U. S. A., Quarantine Physician at New Orleans and Boston, Lecturer on Morbid Anatomy and Diseases of Women and Children, Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc., etc.

FOR THE CURE OF DISEASES,

WHETHER ACUTE OR CHRONIC,

No. 641 Commercial street,

A few doors below Kearny, where he can be consulted at all hours.

Especial attention paid to all Diseases of the UTERINE and SEXUAL ORGANS, SECONDARY and HEREDITARY AFFLICTIONS in their manifold form,

NERVOUS AFFICTIONS, ETC.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS, of whatever nature, performed scientifically, and the patient boarded at the Institute.

TO THE LADIES.—Private apartments, with female-nurses, for those who desire them. CONSULTATIONS FREE.

Parties in the Country may consult the Doctor by letter, and receive, in return, a full description of their disease and its means of cure. All communications strictly confidential. C. W. MOORE, M. D., de16-3m 641 Commercial street, San Francisco.

NEW STORE AND NEW GOODS.

WE BEG LEAVE TO ANNOUNCE that we have opened a first-class

Boot and Shoe Store,

At No. 133 Montgomery street,

OPPOSITE OCCIDENTAL HOTEL.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.
Finch & Co., 133 Moutgomery street. Boots, Shoes, etc.

Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.
Ready Made and to Order. Weed's Celebrated.

NEW YORK, July 1st, 1865.

do hereby appoin Mr. WM. H FINCH & CO., from this date, my sole Agents in California for the sale of goods manufactured by me. WM. WEED, de30-3m No. 86 Bowery, New York city.

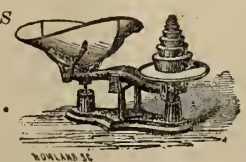
NOTICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

FAIRBANK'S

STANDARD

SCALES.



Every HOUSEKEEPER should have a reliable SCALE in the PANTRY to use in testing the weight of ARTICLES purchased from the BUTCHER and GROCER.

See samples of all sizes at Salesroom.

FAIRBANKS & HUTCHINSON,

mar4-1m 334 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.,

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)

SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING

Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3 3m

---

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

STERETT'S

STEAM

PRINTING HOUSE,

533

CLAY STREET.

A LARGE NUMBER OF NEW FONTS OF FANCY, PLAIN, MODERN AND OTHER TYPE, JUST INTRODUCED.

NEW PIANOS FOR SALE

AND TO RENT

AT LOW PRICES,

AT

Kohler's Music Store,

No. 424 Sansome street, near Clay.

fe20-1m

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soriees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. fe10-3m

---

CALEB M. SICKLER,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tin Ware,

422 KEARNEY STREET

BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND PINE,

SAN FRANCISCO

AGENCY FOR STEWART'S STOVES

de23 3m

LOCKE & MONTAGUE,

IMPORTERS OF

STOVES AND METALS,

Nos. 112 and 114 Battery street,

fe2 SAN FRANCISCO,

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

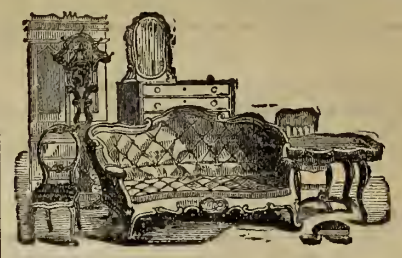
J. PEIRCE,
Furniture and Bedding
WAREROOMS,



NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,

NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,

751 MARKET STREET,

(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle-aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President

fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,

Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

de30 3m San Francisco.

E. CAMPIONI,
COSTUMER,

No. 710 Washington street,

(A few doors above Kearney,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

THEATRICAL AND MASQUERADE COSTUMES MADE TO ORDER.

Orders from the country promptly attended to.

de30 3m

DECEMBER SNOW.

I.

THE cold, cold snow! the snow that lies so white!
The moon and stars are hidden, there is neither warmth nor light—
I wonder, wife—I wonder, wife—where Jeanie lies this night?

II.

'Tis cold, cold, cold, since Jeanie went away,
The world has changed, I sit and wait, and listen night and day,
The house is silent, silent, and my hair has grown so gray—
'Tis cold, cold, cold, wife, since Jeanie went away.

III.

And tick! tick! tick! the clock goes evermore,
It chills me wife—it seems to keep our child beyond the door;
I watch the firelight shadows as they float upon the floor,
And tick! tick! tick! wife, the clock goes evermore!

IV.

'Tis cold, cold, cold! 'twere better she were dead,
Not that I heed the Minister, and the bitter things he said—
But to think my lassie cannot find a place to lay her head—
'Tis cold, cold, cold, wife—better she were dead!

V.

The cold, cold snow! the snow that lies so white!
Beneath the snow her little one is hidden out of sight,
But up above, the wind blows keen, there's neither warmth nor light,
I wonder, wife—I wonder, wife—where Jeanie lies this night!

[Robert Buchanan's "Village Voices."

CHOLERA INCIDENT.

[We translate the following amusing incident from a late Paris paper, as the cholera furnishes few amusing incidents to relieve its terror.]

WHEN the cholera raged with most fatal virulence at Toulon, a convict, who was dying rapidly of the epidemic, collected his fast expiring strength in one extreme effort and beckoned to the turnkey, under whose charge he had been since his imprisonment. The turnkey bent his head near the dying prisoner, and the latter gasped in almost inarticulate sounds (everybody knows the loss of speech is one of the symptoms of the cholera) this dying confession: "You have been kind to me ever since I reached here, therefore I would in turn do you a kindness. As it is evident I shall never leave here except feet foremost, I cannot profit by the money which I had hidden in order to enable me to live when my term of imprisonment ended. I give it to you. The retiring pension you will receive from the Government is a mockery, but with the amount of money I have hidden you may live at the end of your service in something like ease. Maybe you have heard of the great robbery committed at Grenoble in 1856. A bank was broken into and a great deal of valuable property stolen. Much of it was of no account to me (for I was that burglar;) it consisted of bills payable, bills of exchange, and railway bonds to order; but there were $3,000 which I laid hands on and which I have still in my possession—at all events they are secreted in an abandoned quarry in Isere County. I give them to you, but mind you! I give them to you on one condition, and this is, that you distribute $1,000 in legacies to my best friends; the rest will be yours. Swear to me that you will fulfill these conditions—remember you are swearing to a dying man!" The turnkey took the required oath. The dying convict then wrote on a dirty piece of paper the names of his legatees and the amount of their respective legacies opposite each name and address; and on the other side of the same sheet a minute plan of the neighborhood where the abandoned quarry was to be found and of the spot of the quarry where the money was secreted. He continued to add verbal explanations until he was speechless. A few moments after his words ceased to be audible he sighed heavily and fell back—a corpse. The turnkey summoned the hospital servants and the dead body was carried to the dead house, where it was covered with a pall. The turnkey at once asked for leave of absence. It was refused. Irritated by this refusal and fevered by the impatience of handling his treasure, he ran away, without pausing to think he made himself a deserter by this act and was liable to be captured any day. He went to Marseilles, which he reached in so fainting a condition he felt it necessary to take somebody into his confidence. He had not money enough to travel to the spot where the treasure was hid. He took the inn-keeper into his confidence and soon inflamed his cupidity. They were a long while agreeing upon terms, but the inn-keeper persuaded the turnkey to dismiss all thought of the legatees and to divide the whole $3,000 equally between them. Terms being accepted, they sat out to discover the treasure's hiding place. It was not easy. The convict was unfamiliar with local names, and a county is a large place for the game "hide the switch." They hunted for four months, going over every foot of ground in Isere county, at a terrible cost to the inn-keeper's purse. At last the conviction forced itself on their minds that they had been humbugged! that there was no abandoned quarry in Isere county, and no hidden treasure! The inn-keeper's anger at this discovery was unbounded; he beat the turnkey unmercifully, and, as the turnkey was not patient, blows were returned. The "friends" were black and blue when they returned to Marseilles. As the turnkey got out of the car he was arrested for desertion, and the first person he saw at Toulon—he could not believe his eyes!—was the dead convict, and the first thing he heard—he could not believe his ears!—was that the convict had never been ill, and that he, the turnkey, was the third person the mischievous convict had made April fool of in the midst of summer.

IRVING AT THE IRVING HOUSE.—To the stranger no more characteristic evidence of our material prosperity and gregarious habits can be imagined than that afforded by the large, showy, and thronged hotels of our principal cities. They are epitomes of the whole country; at a glance they reveal the era of upholstery, the love of ostentation, the tendency to live in herds, and the absence of a subdued and harmonious tone of life and manners. The large mirrors and bright carpets which decorate these resorts are entirely incongruous—the brilliancy of the sunshine and the stimulating nature of the climate demands within doors a predominance of neutral tints to relieve and freshen the eye and nerves. It is characteristic of that devotion to the immediate which De Tocqueville ascribes to republican institutions, that these extravagant and gregarious establishments in our country are so often named for living celebrities in the mercantile, literary, and political world. This custom gives those who enjoy this distinction while living "the freedom of the house" It greatly amused the friends of our modest Geoffrey Crayon, when encouraged by his affectionate kinswoman and his friend Kennedy to "travel on his capital," under the pressure of necessity, he once thus desperately claimed the privileges of his honored name, wherefrom his sensitive nature habitually shrunk. "I arrived in town safe," he writes from New York to his niece, "and proceeded to the Irving House, where I asked for a room. What party had I with me? None. Had I not a lady with me? No; I was alone. I saw my chance was a bad one, and I feared to be put in a dungeon as I was on a former occasion. I bethought myself of your advice; and so, when the book was presented to me, wrote my name at full length—'from Sannyside.' I was ushered into an apartment on the first floor, furnished with rosewood, yellow damask, and pier-glasses, with a bed large enough for an alderman and his wife, a bath-room adjoining. In a word, I was accommodated completely en prince. The negro waiters all call me by name, and vie with each other in waiting on me. The chambermaid has been at uncommon pains to put my room in first-rate order; and, if she had been pretty, I absolutely should have kissed her; but as she was not, I shall reward her in sordid coin. Henceforth I abjure all modesty with hotel-keepers, and will get as much for my name as it will fetch. Kennedy calls it travelling on one's capital."—Tuckerman's Essay on "Inns."

LIEBIG NOT ORTHODOX IN HIS COFFEE.—Baron Liebig, the great chemist, has recently written an article upon coffee-making for the London Popular Science Review. But Liebig does not know how to make coffee, notwithstanding. In the first place he advises the boiling of it, an absurdity which good cooks abandoned long ago. His process is to put three-fourths of the coffee you intend to use into the pot and let it boil fifteen minutes; then put in the other fourth of the coffee and take the pot at once from the fire; and the great philosopher tells us that the boiling gives the strength and the infusion without boiling gives the flavor. This is neither good theory nor good practice. What we want is to save both the strength and the flavor of all the coffee we use, and the strength without the flavor is no better than a decoction of burnt peas and chiccory. Filtration is the true method. It retains the delightful aroma of the coffee, which is its best quality, and it secures all the desirable part of what Liebig calls its streagth. Those who filter their coffee, in the French style, can easily demonstrate this by boiling over the grounds that have been filtered. They will find that they can obtain from them only a woody, astringent fluid, with almost no resemblance to coffee. Liebig describes the coffee made by his method as "untransparent, something like chocolate thinned with water," but he insists that this muddiness is not a want of clearness, but is owing to the oil retained in the coffee by proper roasting. We feel quite sure the philosopher's coffee sadly needs settling. Coffee moderately roasted, instead of being burned to bitterness after the common fashion, and then made by filtration, yields a perfectly transparent liquid, as beautiful as wine. We quite agree with the Baron in deprecating the expulsion of the delightful aroma from the coffee by excessive roasting, but we are sure he will not be competent authority in the matter of making coffee till he has used a Freach filter.—Springfield Republican.

CONUNDRUM for cold weather:

If the grate B m t put:
If the grate B . putting:
If the grate be empty, put coal on;
If the grate be full, stop putting coal on.

"PUNCH'S" TABLE-TALK.

1. A MAN gave me a story of a valet, in the country, who was told by his master that as one of the keepers was ill, he, the non-hero-worshipper, must go out with the sportsmen next day, and help to load. Valet declined. Being told that he must, and again declining, his reasons were demanded. "The last time I did that, sir, I shot a gentleman; and if that occur again it might be injurious to me."

2. On New Year's night I was done at whist, and that's the truth. Husband and wife against us. I detected three signals, and I dare say there were more. "Don't look so sleepy, Charles," said Mrs. Charles, "I declare you shan't dine at the Rag and Famish, as you call it, any more." The villain played a Club. Later, Mrs. Charles launched a sarcasm at her lord. He smiled with the utmost good temper, and said, "A wife loves to give her husband a Dig in Society." The woman came out with the very Spade she ought to have played. Then the last distinct call I heard was this: "I suppose, Mr. Punch," says the female fiend, "that Mrs. Punch has had a little present, a rag or something for her New Year's gift. I, of course, get nothing." How those facts might be is not to the purpose, but Mr. Charles played the card that gave them the odd trick, I needn't say a small Diamond. Let the couple understand that I don't sit down with it again.

3. Plutarch says that Horatius, of the Bridge, had his eyes so close that people called him Cocles as short for Cyclops. What dreadfully stupid asses the historians would have us consider the ancients to have been! I believe it as much as that he was called Cocles because, like myself, he was addicted to Cockle's pills.

4. The papers say that there is an old party, called Bain, somewhere in Scotland, who is one hundred and seven, and shaves himself every day. I am sorry that years have brought him no more wisdom. I am only in the prime of life, and yet I have learned never to shave.

5. A décolletée old girl neglected in a ball-room always reminds me of something that daily appears in the weather-table about the thermometer. "Exposed—in shade."

6. There is a good deal to be said on both sides of the beef, but I am dogmatic—give me the sirloin stake.

7. I wish Sir Samuel Morton Peto, of the Severn, would promise me one of its salmons, and send me a hundred-weight of tea instead. It would not be much for him to do, and it would enable me to write to him in the words of the ancient gladiator, Non te. Peto, piscem peto.

8. The gentle Lamartine is composing a sweet poem, called Ma Mère. The original is in our spelling-books:

"Who ran to help me when I fell,
And would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place and make it well?
Ma Mère."

THE insoluble question of the guilt or innocence of Mary Queen of Scots has had its interest renewed and intensified by the new poem of Chastelard, in which a rather novel characterization of the unhappy Queen is given. This book has induced the publication in England of another volume under the title of Mary Stuart, her Guilt or Innocence: an Inquiry into the Secret History of her Times. We understand that the work is of the nature of a historical defence of Queen Mary. But as the question has been in dispute for two hundred and fifty years, and, as we have little more light upon it now than existed two centuries ago, we have no expectation that it will now be settled. We shall probably have other works taking different sides in the matter, until Mary, in the dim light of time, stands indistinct as Helen of Troy now stands.

THEY had a balloon wedding in New York some months ago, and there is now talk of a wedding on skates. The proprietor of one of the most fashionable parks has promised to furnish the ice: all he now waits for are the parties to the ceremony, and, if rumor says truly, he will not have to wait long. The only difficulty will be with the parson, for it is inferred from the language of the good book that only the "wicked stand on slippery places" Fortunately for the ceremony, aldermen are competent to solemnize marriages.

IN the gallery of the theatre in Crow street, Dublin, one night, a coal porter made himself disagreeable; there was a yell of "Throw him over," followed by the exquisitely droll rider, "Don't waste him: kill a fiddler wid him."

AN ESTABLISHMENT WORTHY OF ITS REPUTATION.—The house of Messrs. Coates & Henderson, No. 37 Sutter Street, a few doors below Montgomery, is the most popular place of resort in that section of the city for gentlemen who incline to choice beverages. There are two large and elegant sitting-rooms, carpeted and furnished completely, and supplied with all the leading papers. Their trade in family wines, liquors, etc., is very extensive. Their goods are taken direct from bond, and can be depended on as being equal to the best in the market.

VERY becoming to ladies who value a pure and perfect complexion and skin—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To the Sick and Afflicten.—We can honestly recommend those who are suffering from diseases of long standing, or from the use of mercury, to call at the Electric Medical Institute. The system practiced by Dr. Howard and his associates is the most sensible we have heard advocated. If there is anything that deserves the name of humbug, it is that which claims to cure every disease with one remedy or system. It would not be more ridiculous if Dr. Howard's Rheumatic remedy was advertised as a cure-all. In diseases peculiar to females Dr. Howard has no superior; particularly in chronic irregularities he is unsurpassed by any other physician in the State. We are personally acquainted with a number of ladies who have been restored to health at the institute, notwithstanding their complaints being pronounced incurable by some of the best physicians in the city. To all who need the assistance of a physician, we would say, call at the Electric Medical Institute, 648 Washington street, before going elsewhere. In Dr. Howard you will find a gentleman who is worthy of your confidence.—S. F. Irish People.

A REMARKABLE CURE.

DR. HOWARD'S RHEUMATIC MIXTURE

Cures Rheumatism in three to ten days. Warranted, or no pay required. Howard's Medical and Surgical Institute, No. 648 Washington street, near Kearny.

Read the following letter:

San Francisco, February 12, 1866.

Dr. P. Howard—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with Rheumatism for seven years; a great part of the time I was unable to do anything, and my ankle would swell to such an extent that I could not wear a boot. I tried every known remedy, and many Physicians who would insist on my confining myself to my room; but it was of no use: I only became worse and almost discouraged. I accidentally saw one of your bills, and although I had little confidence in your remedy, I commenced using it, and you may judge of my surprise when, after using it three days, I was able to go to work. I am now as well as ever I was in my life, and I have not lost any time while taking your remedy, except the first three days.

In order to benefit others, and to assure you of my gratitude, you may publish this if you think proper to do so. Your friend,

R. W. Mabery, 120 Natoma street.

Dr. C. W. Moore's Medical and Surgical Institute.—In speaking of this Institution, the Sunday Mercury says: "Aside from the most skilful treatment and nursing, the large, airy and elegantly-furnished rooms, will enable the patients to enjoy all the comforts and luxuries of a home. All in all, we regard Dr. Moore and his Institute a most valuable acquisition to the Pacific Coast—the need of which we have long since felt." See advertisement.

Wanted—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. Shear, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

Many of the Diseases which hitherto baffled and defied the highest medical skill, are now speedily cured by Dr. H. A. Benton, whose processes of applying electricity receive the approbation of all prominent physicians. The nerves are directly reached, and patients suffering from chronic complaints find almost immediate relief, and rapidly recover their former healthy condition. Dr. Benton is a physician of excellent reputation, and as a Medical Electrician occupies the front rank in his profession.—Golden Era.

Buggies and Carriages.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. Pollard & Carvill not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

Wagons.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of Mills & Evans, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

MONEY TO LOAN.—$5,000 to loan, in small sums, on City Property, for a term of years; repayments received in monthly instalments. Deposits received at 1 per cent per month from month to month. Apply to the California Building and Loan Society, 406 Montgomery street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

For the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 651 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

On the "Qui Vive."—A large number of fashionable ladies of San Francisco, who are noted for the graceful style and elegance of their dress, as well as for the irresistible attractiveness of their fascinating smiles, which the consciousness of being fashionably and tastefully dressed spreads over their classical features, are ever on the qui vive to take the advantage of "circumstances" and to decorate, adorn, and embellish with every imaginable kind of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, gloves, etc., their graceful figures, at a price so low that any and all can afford to dress fashionably, and even elegantly. The present victims of these vigilant and economical leaders of the fashion, are the members of the celebrated firm of M. Homberger & Co., 300 Kearny street, corner of Bush, who keep constantly on hand a superior and extensive assortment of ladies' dress trimmings, buttons, hosiery, gloves, woolen ware, and fancy goods, also a splendid lot of Berlin zephyr worsted, all of which they offer at greatly reduced prices. In consequence of which, the store is crowded from morning till night, no one leaving without making purchases, and all going home both suited and delighted with the style of the article as well as the price paid for it.—Golden Era.

Concord Wagons and Harness.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public. Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

Dainty Work.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Cluy street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

San Francisco, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, Joseph Sparrow.

Accident and Loss of Life.—With the details of the dreadful disasters of the Brother Jonathan and the Yosemite fresh in memory, it is not needful that we should urge on the public the importance of guarding as fully as possible not only against the recurrence of such startling calamities, but also as far as they can against the consequences that arise from them. Accidents are terribly frequent in this new State of ours. Hardly a day passes but we have to record some loss of life, or terrible mangling that leaves the victim with hardly a wish to live. Stringent legislation is demanded to protect travellers from carelessness and criminal negligence of public carriers. It is with great interest that we have watched the rapid growth of Accident Insurance Companies, and we are happy to know that the New York Accidental Insurance Company, established by some of the wealthiest capitalists of the East, have placed their agency in the hands of Bigelow & Brother, Insurance Agents, of this city. We advise every one to take out a policy. The premium is very small—the price of a good cigar only per day—while the benefits are great; $25 per week, if disabled, or $5,000 in case of death. Who would not give $2 50 to be insured for a trip to Washoe, or 25 cents for a trip to Sacramento City? That's all it costs. We predict a large business for the agency in this city. The Company have complied with the State law, and are fully prepared to issue policies, or travelling tickets, at once.—S. F. Call.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

Opinions of the Press.—We call the particular attention of our readers to the advertisement of Dr. P. Howard, in another column. It gives us pleasure to recommend to those who need the assistance of a physician, the valuable services of Dr. P. Howard and his associates. In a city like San Francisco, where there are so many disreputable concerns, it is gratifying to find one worthy of the confidence and patronage of the people. At the Electric Medical and Surgical Institute, 648 Washington street, the gentlemen conducting it are eminently qualified, and the system they practice is based on sound and philosophical principles, comprising within itself the Hydropathic and Electropathic systems, and the Electric practice of medicines. To the ladies we can recommend the Electric system as particularly adapted to their delicate constitutions. The rooms are fitted up in splendid style, and the Bathroom is large and convenient. Their Electropathic instrument is one of the best we have ever seen, having six different currents of great power, yet so well controlled and regulated that it can be applied to the most delicate. The numerous patients thronging the Institute, and their happy faces, speak volumes in its favor. The best surgical skill is also to be found at the Institute. In fact, we are satisfied that there is more scientific attainment than at any other Institute in the State. Dr. P. Howard was, in former years, the proprietor of the Electropathic Institute, and established for it a reputation second only to the Eclectic Institute. Being compelled to visit Mexico on business, the Institute passed into other hands. Dr. P Howard has been long and favorably known, and to those who are in need of the services of a physician we recommend him as in every way worthy of their confidence.—S. F. Irish News.

In the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of WALTER S. McDONALD, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John F. McDonald, the Administrator of the estate of Walter S. McDonald, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Walter S. McDonald, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Tuesday, the twenty-fourth day of April, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Walter S. McDonald, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 24th day of April, A. D. 1866, in The Californian, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, March 21st, 1866.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true, and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, this 22d day of March, A. D. 1866.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 5 cts., cancelled.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Thos. B. Bishop, Attorney for Administrator. mh24 4w

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,

No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - Five per Cet.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,

40 Broadway, N. Y

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS,

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with greater facility than the more remote remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

We, the undersigned shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Dull, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24 1m

A MOONLIGHT DRIVE!

A GOOD TEAM,

AND

Supper at the Cliff House!

CAPTAIN FOSTER, the Proprietor, is always ready to receive "Evening Calls." The delightful Moonlight Nights which we are now enjoying, render a

MOONLIGHT DRIVE

TO THE

CLIFF HOUSE

TRUE ENJOYMENT

CAPTAIN FOSTER is never caught napping, and the resources of the Cliff House are unlimited. mar24-tf

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

fe10-3m

THE EXCELSIOR HAT

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Paris, New York and London

STYLES FOR

SPRING AND SUMMER, 1866,

WAS INTRODUCED

Saturday, - - - - March 3,

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 535 and 637 Commercial street..San Francisco
No. 125 J street.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second streets.....Marysville

Our style in MOLESKIN for this season is, we feel confident, the SUPERLATIVE OF ELEGANCE AND FINISH; our MERINO PINAUD and ST. CLOUD the most successful result of Parisian taste. Especial attention also deserve our Chelsea, Chester, Crescent, Newport, Derby, and Clarendon Resorte.

CALL AND SEE THEM. mar3-1m

FOR GENUINE

Scotch Ginghams,

AND

CHOICE DRESS GOODS,

GO TO

S. MOSGROVE,

222 Third street, Colton's Building.

fe23 tf

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 414 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19-3m

NATIONAL

Insurance Company.

TEMPORARY OFFICE,

Brannan's Express Building

402 Montgomery street, (second floor.)

PERMANENT OFFICE,

(After March 1st,)

408 Montgomery street,

Adjoining London and San Francisco Bank, and opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's.

Capital.....One Million of Dollars,
Paid Up in Full.

LOSSES PAYABLE IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN

This company is prepared to insure brick, frame, and other BUILDINGS, MERCHANDISE, FURNITURE, and other insurable property, on the most favorable terms. Losses will be adjusted promptly in GOLD coin.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Albert Dibblee, Chairman, Joseph A. Donohoe,
John G. Bray, Richard G. Sneath,
George W. Gibbs, Henry Pierce.

WILLIAM PIERCE, President.
D. W. C. THOMPSON, Vice President
W. W. WIGGINS, Secretary. fe10-3m

RELIABLE

AND LIBERAL!

THE BROOKLYN

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,

HAS MADE ALL ITS POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE.

Dividends delared and PAID annually on the MUTUAL PLAN. Its policies are INCONTESTIBLE after five years from their date.

Thirty days grace in payment of premium.

C. W. BOUCK, President.
A. D. POLHAMUS, Vice President.

STEPH. T. KING,

General Agent for the Pacific States and Territories,
712 Montgomery street,
fe24 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

From Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M., punctually,

FOR PANAMA.

Passengers will be conveyed from Panama to Aspinwall by the PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY, and from Aspinwall to New York by the splendid Steamships of the company.

Steamers of this line will be despatched on the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month. When these dates fall on Sunday, the steamer will leave on Saturday preceding.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MARCH 30, - - - - - CONSTITUTION,

Captain F. R. Baby.

(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - , - - - MARCH 3,

BY

McGANN & CO.,

FASHIONABLE HATTERS,

No. 654 Washington street,

Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

&

COMPANY,

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York city, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,

(Organist of Cavalry Church,)

TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.

Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30-3m

THE MIEL INSTITUTE,

54, 55 and 56 South Park.

THIS FRENCH AND ENGLISH SCHOOL, for Young Ladies, will reopen on the 21 of January, under the direction of MISS FLORENCE JAMES. PROF. MIEL will continue to take charge of the French classes. Apply at 55 South Park. ja30 3m

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$750,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

COLUMBIA FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

OF NEW YORK.

Cash Capital and Surplus.....$600,000
Deposit in San Francisco.....$75,000

THE ABOVE MENTIONED WELL-KNOWN and responsible Companies, having complied with the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature, and deposited with Messrs. Donohoe, Ralston & Co.

$75,000 EACH,

As additional security to Policy-holders, will continue to insure

BUILDINGS,

MERCHANDISE,

FURNITURE,

And other property in California, Oregon and Nevada Territory, against Loss or Damage by Fire, upon the most favorable terms.

All Losses promptly paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
ju25-tf 206 Front street, corner of California

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED,
mar10 3m SAMUEL WHITE.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.
mar2 3m

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

FAUST CELLAR,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24 3m

STEAM COMMUNICATION

WITH THE

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE CALIFORNIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY will despatch their magnificent new steamship

AJAX,

Two Thousand Tons Burthen,

CHRISTOPHER GODFREY, - - - Commander,

FOR HONOLULU,

ON ———, - - - - - APRIL —, 1866,

AT TWO O'CLOCK, P. M.

The cabin accommodations of the Ajax are unsurpassed for comfort and elegance.

To invalids and tourists this trip offers unequalled inducements, not only on the point of economy, but also in the superior accommodations of the ship, and the pleasure of a voyage to these Islands.

Freight taken at the lowest current rates.

Bills of Lading will be furnished to shippers, and none others signed.

For Freight or Passage apply to the office of the California Steam Navigation Company.

fe23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

415 WASHINGTON STREET,

nearly opposite the Post Office,

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisoument to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons..... 10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500..... 1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000. 1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons..... 5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof..... 1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate..... 1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Maurice J. Dooley, Plaintiff, vs. John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton, her husband - Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, children of J. H. and Annie Moore; Helen R. Mastersou Ord, and Pacificus Ord, her husband, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John J. Young, Mary S. McArthur Clifton, Junius A. Clifton her husband; Annie Moore, widow of James H. Moore; Edward Moore and Annie Moore, Helen R. Mastersou Ord and Pacificus Ord, her husband:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons,) within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

In and by said complaint, the plaintiff prays the following judgment and relief:

1. That the said defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court.

2. That plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee simple, in possession of, and lawfully entitled to the possession of so much of said Lot 77 as is first described in the complaint.

3. That the defendants, and each and every of them, be adjudged and decreed to have no estate, right, title, or interest of, in or to said portion of said Lot 77, legal or equitable; and that they, and all persons claiming, or to claim under them subsequent to the commencement of this action, be barred, and perpetually restrained and enjoined from asserting or pretending to have any right, title, interest, or estate of, in or to the same, and from making any conveyance thereof—other than to plaintiff or his grantees; and for such other and further relief as shall be agreeable to equity—but without costs.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the County of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Seal and Int. Rev. Stamp. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By James E. Ashcom, Deputy Clerk
de23-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS B. VALENTINE, Plaintiff, vs. ERASTUS V. JOICE and ANDREW J. MOULDER, Defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisc, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Erastus V. Joice and Andrew J. Moulder, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within the county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought that the Defendants may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, &c., to certain real estate particularly described in the complaint, and to obtain a decree that the plaintiff is owner in fee simple absolute thereof, that said defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest therein or to any part thereof, that they be forever debarred and perpetually enjoined from setting up any estate in or claim said real estate, adverse to plaintiff—besides costs of suit and general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this ninth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

Seal of Court. } By Jas. E. Ascom, Deputy Clerk.
Int. rev. stamp. } B. S. Brooks,
de23-3m Plaintiff's Attorney.

CHARLES F. RIEHN,

OF

Riehn, Hemme & Co.,

ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5-3m

RHEUMATISM.

The Greatest Remedy

IN THE WORLD!

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

This Splendid preparation has never been known to fail in effecting a complete and perfect cure, no matter how long the patient had been afflicted with the disease. The Remedy is used both internally and externally. Hundreds of persons have used it during the past two years, all of whom are prepared to testify to its efficacy.

THE CALIFORNIA RHEUMATIC RHEMEDY will be carefully packed and sent to any part of the Pacific coast, per Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express upon receipt of $10 in gold coin, or its equivalent; and in all cases where the Remedy fails to effect a perfect cure, the MONEY WILL BE PROMPTLY REFUNDED.

For sale at Retail only, by

SAMUEL ADAMS, Druggist,
Corner of Bush and Powell streets,
fe17-3m San Francisco, Cal.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITEERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

